Such is the story of Damien Boudreau, one of the oldest and most highly respected inhabitants of this place. It shows what a boon Dodd's Kidney Pills are to the old folks. They cure the kidneys, clear the drags of disease out of the blood and make the old feel young.

Dodd's Kidney Pills cure the Kidneys. Good Kidneys mean that there can be no impurities left in the blood. And the man or woma who has good pure blood can laugh at nine out of ten of the ills to which the flesh is heir. They are the one sure cure for all diseases of the Kidneys and all diseases such as Rheumatism, Backache, Lumbago and Heart Disease, which are caused by impure blood.

Gave Concert At Norwood

All Saints' and St. John's Choirs Heard in Fine Programme

Peterborough singers from the choirs of St. John's and All Saints gave a two-hour choral programme in Christ Church, Norwood, last night to a crowded congregation. The chancel space being limited, twelve less than at first proposal made the journey, at first proposed made the journey; by the choirs, and at a reception given to them in the rectory the leading members of the congregation, voiced by the Rev. Mr. Pickford and Mr. Cuffe, expressed their deep gratitude to the singers for their programme. The main work was Stainer's "Crucifixion," but, in addition, two choruses from Mendelssohn's "Come let us Sing" were given, the climax number being Handel's "Hallelujah" chorus. Messrs H. W. Morphet and G. E. Chandler (tenors) and Mr. A. Flowers and Mr. Spence (bass) sang the solo work finely, and the unaccompanied quartette was sung by voices from both choirs.

Mr. R. J. Dovey conducted, ably assisted at the organ by Miss Flowers.

MARKS BROS. COMING

The splendid work shown by Joe Marks' clever company at the Empire theatre on the opening night of his engagement, drew a packed house to witness a pleasing production of "Thorns and Orange Blossoms," a play of the pathetic sort, with a vein of comedy running through it and one that afforded ample scope for a display of the talent with which the company is endowed.

Miss Marks again proved a prime favourite, and it was given the best of support by the balance of the company. The vaudeville acts were entirely new and calculated to please the most fastidious.—Saskatoon Phoenix.

The company will play at Peterborough Opera House three nights, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, May 2nd, 3rd and 4th, opening Thursday night with "Thorns and Orange Blossoms."

Only 2 More Days of the Dress Goods Sale

An "End of the Month" Cleanup Event offering exceptional snaps on fresh, new, 1912 dress fabrics. Our buyer has been fortunate in securing "Overmake" lines from the manufacturers at prices that supply the Big Leaders for this event. Combined with this are many contributions from our regular stock—lines that have become depleted from a season of strenuous selling are marked at prices to clear quickly.

Only 2 days left—Monday and Tuesday—to share in these notable values. Two of the leaders are:—

The Big Leader---$1.50, $1.75 and $2.00 Tweed Suiting, to Clear, 89c Yard

Every yard of Tweed Suitings must be cleared before the first of May. We will not carry any over till the Fall season and have marked the price so low that they will go with a rush. Our showing embraces the newest, nattiest, 1912 patterns in Whipcords, Serges, Donegals, etc. ; all are from 54 to 56 inches wide. Lengths vary from 1 to 10 yards, being from our regular stock. Included also are several "Mill Ends" of 2¾ or 3 yards; these, of course, will not be cut. Tweeds are the favourite materials this season for coats, suits and separate skirts, and this wonderful snap should attract crowds of shrewd buyers to our Dress Goods counters. Qualities that ordinarily sell for $1.50, $1.75 and $2.00—all to clear quickly at an unusually low figure. 5 Days' Sale Price, only, yard 89c

Another Great Leader---50c Tussor Silk 36c Yard

Values such as this are going to make our 5 Days' Sale a huge success. One of the best and most popular 50c Dress Silks on the market—the favourite material for Summer wear, that will wash well, wear well and look well. We have all shades on hand at present but won't guarantee to have them the last days of the sale—so we advise early choice. Included you will find tan, fawn, Copenhagen, grey, sky, navy, brown, black, etc. A line that has found an immense demand at the regular price of 50c a yard, but by a fortunate purchase we secured a special shipment at a price which offers a great department leader. All are 26 inches in width. Marked for the 5 Day's Sale at only, a yard 36c

Graded Sunday School Lessons For Beginners And The Primary Class

All our schools are familiar with the uniform lesson system, in use for many years. The new graded series, introduced in 1908, is not yet known well enough to be appreciated.

For the preparation of the new graded series of lessons, the committee have recognized the educational principle of adopting instruction to the need of the pupil. The educational centre has been shifted from subjects to persons.

The series begins where the child's conscious thought always begins with the parental idea, and presents God to the child mind, as the Heavenly Father, and leads it to the conception of the divine fatherhood through this simple and familiar relations of the child to the earthly parents.

The subjects of the lessons in this course will show natural and simple religion is as belonging to the very nature of the soul, entering into its most germinal development, and working itself out in all the processes of growth.

The entire course is made up of yearly units, grouped for convenience into departments: Beginners, two years; Primary, three years; Junior, four years; Intermediate, four years; Senior, four years. The purpose is to meet the spiritual needs of the pupil at each stage of his development. Take the Beginners' course. The lessons are arranged in groups under successive themes, related in thought, and following one another to suit the development of the child. Material is selected for the truth it contains, and for the value of that truth in the spiritual nurture of the child. The aim is to lead the little child to the Father, by helping him to know God, the Heavenly Father, who loves him, provides for, and protects him. To know Jesus, who became a little child, who went about doing good, and who is the Saviour and friend of little children. To know about the heavenly home. To distinguish between right and wrong. To show his love for God, by working with Him, and for others.

The schools that have introduced these lessons in our city and in other places, are enthusiastic in their praise of these lessons in the beginners and primary grades.—Com.

No Tasting Of Butter With Fork

Sanitary Inspector Spence Does Not Like This Market Practice

POTATOES ARE $2.50

The absence of the watering carts was probably the most noticeable feature of this morning's market. The wind swept the loose dust down Water street, whirled it around the market square and deposited it promiscuously on fresh pork, seed potatoes and maple syrup, not to mention the fact that it was blown into the eyes of farmers and city folk alike, into their hair and down their necks. This is a little tip to the city to make some provision for the convenience of those who attend the market, either to buy or sell.

Maple syrup was down to 35 cents a quart, with only a small quantity offering.

"This has been a good year," said one farmer as he scraped the bottom of his can to make a last pint.

"I made 180 gallons this year and might have made more. I haven't quite a pint left, ma'am, but I'll give you this for nothing," and he poured a little more than a cupful into a two quart jar.

"You might as well cover up your jars," said another woman, who from the size of the can possibly thought it was full of syrup. There were five or six other women disappointed.

"And it was such good looking syrup," one of them said.

Seed Potatoes Dear.

"Put in the paper that potatoes are five dollars a bag," said Mr. John Brown, ex-Reeve of North Monaghan.

"That is too dear a joke, Mr. Brown, besides the farmers are surely contented with $2.50 for seed potatoes," was the reply.

Potatoes for eating purposes are still $2.00, but the early seed variety is $2.50, if you want a bag of them. The farmers consider that they are doing you a favour by allowing you to look at them.

Butter Was Plentiful.

There was an exceptionally good supply of butter this morning. It sold at 30 cents in the earlier stages, but soon dropped to 28 and 27 cents.

"I've been getting 28c., but I'll let you have these five pounds at 27c." said a farmer's wife in what was supposed to be a whisper as she learned over the counter. Most women were then asking only 27, but there are more tricks than one in selling butter.

There was only a fair supply of eggs probably enough to meet the demand, but there was no surplus. Prices ranged from 21c. to 23c., the latter being offered in only a few cases.

No More Tasting With Forks.

The practice of tasting butter with forks must go. Sanitary Inspector Spence watched the methods of tasting butter by purchasers, methods that are as old as the market itself. The Inspector did not like the idea and after watching quite a number use forks which in a number of cases were uncleaned after some had used it, he quietly told a number of the farmers' wives that this practice was not in accordance with the best sanitary ideas and that it should be discontinued. He suggested that pieces of wood something like tooth-picks,

EVERYBODY NEEDS A DICTIONARY

The Examiner's Arrangement Means Anyone May Obtain Standard Authority at Comparatively Little Cost

AN OPPORTUNITY

A working knowledge of words is of immense benefit to the business man; the professional man and the scholar. This means often more than you think. Many persons use words without a real working knowledge of word-meanings.

Such knowledge may not come of common every-day talk. It must be acquired by study and frequent reference to accepted authority. The Funk & Wagnall's Standard Dictionary is known all over the world as the supreme authority of the English language. From the great work sufficient copies of the Comprehensive Standard have been prepared, especially for the patrons of The Examiner. This condensed yet plethoric volumes of over 700 pages gives more than 41,000 words and phrases, and 3,000 of these are new to the dictionary.

It is a live 1911 dictionary, up-to-date in all its features, and with

RECALLS PIONEER DAYS.

A Well-Known Hastings Resident Visits the City for a Few Days.

Mr Sibbins, of Hastings, returned home yesterday, after spending a few days in the city. Mr. Sibbins is a pioneer of the true type, and can recall many stirring incidents of long years 'standing. He recalls with pleasurable pride the fact that his father passed through Peterborough exactly one hundred years ago, on his way to the north country. Twenty-four shacks then marked the present site of the city. Mr. Sibbins was born in Douro, where he lived for many years, later removing to Hastings, where he is still engaged in tanning and in connection with his chosen vocation of tilling the soil.

A YEAR CURED HIM

Mr. Walter Young has for many years been a salesman on the Peterborough Chess Board, and was looked upon as being one of the shrewdest salesmen on the board. No doubt he will be greatly missed, especially among his own factory patrons, where he also filled the position of treasurer. Mr. Young intends spending the summer in the west.

OBITUARY

MR. JOHN M'NEIL.

Word will be received with regret a railroad circles of the death of Mr. John McNeil, the G.T.R. yardman at Belleville, who passed away a few days since at Kensington.

The deceased had been an employee of the G.T.R. system for nearly fifty years, and was consequently very well known and generally respected among railroad men. He is survived by one son Irving in Toronto.

The late Mr. McNeil was buried in Belleville.

MRS. MARY JANE WILKINSON.

The death occurred at 8.30 last evening at Mrs. Mary Jane Wilkinson, at 705 Dalhousie street.

The deceased lady was born in Monaghan, but has been a resident of this city for many years. She is survived by one daughter, Mary, of this city; one sister, Mrs. Robert Gibson, of Dunbrick, N.B., and three brothers, namely, Messrs William Baker, of Heathcote, Ont.; Richard Baker, of Collingwood, Ont., and Robert Baker, of Carnarvon, Ont.

The funeral will take place on Monday afternoon. At two o'clock the Rev. R. B. Gephbe will conduct a service at the residence above mentioned, after which the cortege will proceed to the Little Lake Cemetery for interment.

When The Lungs Are Weak

To every person with weak lungs or who has a family history with records of consumption, a cough or cold is a serious matter.

Coughs have a tendency to hang on. They irritate the membranes and prevent healing. There is always the danger that a cold may get a firm foothold and settle on the lungs. It is so easy under these conditions for pneumonia or consumption to develop.

About the surest means of controlling coughs and colds is by the use of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. This treatment loosens the cough, allays the irritation and inflammation and thoroughly overcomes the disagreeable symptoms. The success of this medicine has given rise to many imitations. It is only natural to suppose that the original possesses merit of an unusual degree.

EGGS HIGHER NEXT WINTER

Report From Montreal Says Present Prices Are High

MONTREAL, APRIL 27.—If eggs were considered high in Montreal last winter, there is a tendency to-day to think that they will be higher next winter, and consumers will be obliged to pay at least from five to six cents per dozen more, than the present prices, than was paid for the choice new fruit during the fall months when the [illegible] were scrutinized with the utmost care and packed in cases with the many pieces of silver with which they were prepared for consumption.

At this time last year eggs were being bought by wholesalers in country points in Canada at around 17c per dozen, and at this price were put in cold storage. This week the wholesalers began their packing, but at 22c., and for this the consumer will have to pay when the prices are soaring, and the supplies are very scarce next winter.

Manager Templin is wasting no time in further bolstering up his pitching staff. With six pitchers signed he is still on the trail of several others and expected to land a pair from Manager Zeller of the Springfild-Connecticut League Club. Zeller is a friend of Templin's and will give him first call on his recruits. The Springfield manager has all his last year's pitching staff intact, and will therefore have to let his promising "rookies" go. One of these, a left-hander, will, in all probability, come to Peterborough, and Manager Templin also expects to land another Springfield try-out, whom Zeller is carrying on his staff at the present time, but who will have to be dropped in a week or so. The Springfield leader speaks very highly of the left-hander, whom he has recommended to Peterborough, and says he would be a decided acquisition to Templin's hurling staff.

Peterborough's uniforms will be ready next week, but will not be handed out to the players until the opening of the season. The suits are white with a royal blue diamond containing a white "P" on the sleeve, white caps, with a blue "P" and solid royal blue stockings. Most of Templin's bunch will have their last workout in the south to-day. Nearly all of them are on the line-up of semi-professional teams for fixtures this afternoon, and the "White Cap" squad will report in good condition on Wednesday night.

Outfielder Percy Johnston of the Eatons team, Toronto, will be the first "White Cap" to report to Manager Templin. He will be here on Monday. Infielder Bemis of Hamilton, will be along early on Wednesday, and the rest of the squad are expected to blow in on Wednesday night, on the evening O. P. R. train.

NEWS FROM THE LEAGUE CIRCUIT

Hamilton Spectator: With never a thought for sore arms or kindred ills, eight or nine of the candidates for regular berths on the Hamilton Canadian League team got into action at the ball field yesterday afternoon under the leadership of Manager Lee and the first practice of the season was gone through. The warm sun and wind of the last couple of days had done much good work in drying up the field that Manager Lee lost no time in chasing the players out to the various positions they are trying for, and with Mangan on first, Marshall on second, Martin at short-stop and Keenan on third, a pretty warm hour or two was indulged in. Infield and batting practice occupied the attention of the players all afternoon with Lee, Hess, Wendelborn, Farrell and Holtkamp being the players in uniform along with the players named above. That the majority of those who were out have been at work before was evident, for they handled the ball with considerable ginger, and the

CANNOT FIGHT FOR BELT SAYS TOM FLANAGAN

Calgary, April 25.—The following interesting despatch has been received from Toronto:

Tom Flanagan is going to make things hum for Tommy Burns and Billy Allen, the Canadian lightweight champions, if proposed fight between Allen and Tom Bayley of Victoria for the Flanagan belt, emblematic of the championship of the Dominion, arranged to be fought at Bassano, Alberta, on 19th June, is put on.

"Those people just think they own that belt, and have a nerve going ahead and arranging this contest without getting the permission of the National Sporting Club," he said.

Allen is under a bond of $250 to fight only before the National Sporting Club for this belt. They can fight all night if they wish for the title, but not for the belt.

If Allen or Burns had been reasonable, and asked for the Club's permission to contest the belt, we might have agreed to their wishes but Allen is not going to peddle the belt all over the country without first getting the Club's consent. I will take action against Allen if he fights for the Flanagan belt in the West.

In the agreement made with Allen by Tommy Burns, he was to box at Bassano for this belt, and Allen was under the impression that he would do so; but even if the sporting club of that city refuses to allow the belt to be contested for at the coming bout, it will make no difference o the winning of the Canadian championship, for there is no doubt whatever that Allen and Bayley are the two undisputed champions in the lightweight class in this country, and the winner of the contest will be accepted by the public as the real champion of the entire Dominion. The belt was competed for and won by Allen, and if he is defeated by Bayley it does not matter whether the club gives up the belt or not, the title is lost. The Toronto club does not need to think that it can offer a belt representing the championship of Canada and have every bout for that belt take place in Toronto.

In fact there are few boxers who recognize the belt as emblematic of the championship. There are few sport writers or sportsmen who do so, and if the club does not wish to let the belt go out of Toronto, why Allen will meet Bayley anyway, and a real representative belt, that can be contested for anywhere, and representing the real championship can easily be found.

However, Tommy Burns did not intend to turn down the donor of the belt or those controlling it. It was merely an oversight that an application to get the sanction of the club was neglected. Allen did not state in his acceptance that the Toronto Sporting Club had not given him the privilege to accept all challenges for the belt and that is how the matter stands. It was understood at this end that Allen would fix it with Mr. Flanagan. However, an explanation has been sent to the Sporting Club of Toronto, and Tommy Burns has asked to grant the privilege to compete for the belt at Bassano. If the club turns it down, Allen and Bayley will still box for the championship of Canada, and that will not bother them or the purse-pinch.

Fourth Victim of Shooting.

Kingston, April 29.—The death of a Bulgarian named Avarinoss, in the General Hospital, marks the fourth fatality within a few months in camps of the Canadian Northern Railway. Avarinoss was employed in a camp near Lake Opinicon, and was struck on the side with a rock and several ribs fractured. Coroner Dr. D. E. Mundell will hold an inquest to-morrow night.

To Ship Boat Supplies.

Washington, April 29.—The Secretary has decided to furnish vessels for the various needs of Senator for the purpose of bringing back to the United States all Americans citizens in this part of the country who may desire to return. The greater number of these now in Mexico are returning by steamship lines from eastern ports, or by rail. This movement, which is being assisted by the War Department, leads to the belief that the ships are being cleared for action by way of invasion in the near future. This belief is strengthened by the official announcement that a number of steamship lines are under contract to furnish vessels for the transport of troops when called.

Fell on Fence.

Toronto, April 29.—Beatrice Chapell, aged 16, of Windermere avenue, Swansea, was very seriously injured Saturday afternoon, when she fell from the second storey of her home and was impaled on a picket fence.

The girl was cleaning an upstairs window overlooking an alleyway, and had stepped on to the narrow sash for the purpose of wiping the glass. In some manner the latter slipped from her grasp. She lost her balance and fell on the fence, 18 feet below. One board pierced her lung. Mr. J. Chappell heard his daughter's groans and rushed from the house to her aid.

Dr. Ricker of Mimico was summoned and reports that Miss Chapell's condition is very serious.

DIRECTIONS INEXACT

"Minto" Has Right Hide Out of Location Some Testified Captain S. S. Shore of the "Minto" Temple"

GOOD WORD FOR CREW

Washington, April 29.—Failure to give her exact position, a faint field of floating ice that offered a bright barrier to divine harrying to the rescue, and the mistake of her great captain in running at top speed through an ice-covered sea—all these combined to send the Titanic and her 1,600 victims to their watery graves in the North Atlantic. This was strongly indicated yesterday in testimony before the Senate committee investigating the ocean tragedy.

Captain James H. Moore of the steamer Mount Temple, which was hurried to the Titanic in response to wireless calls for help, told of the great stretch of field ice which held him off.

Within his view from the bridge he discerned, he said, another strange steamer, probably a tramp, and a schooner, which was making head way out of the ice. The lights of this schooner, he thought, probably were those seen by the anxious survivors of the Titanic, and which they were frantically trying to reach.

Captain Moore denounced as most "carrion" the action of the Titanic's commander in steaming at 22 knots through the night when he had been advised of the proximity of ice. The Mount Temple's commander testified that he had spent 25 years in the North Atlantic. Wherever ice was around, he said, he doubled his watch and reduced speed, and if he happened to get caught in an ice pack, he stopped his engines and drifted until he was clear.

The witness also was emphatic in his declaration that the position sent out by the Titanic was wrong. He said the ship was considerably further eastward than reported. This, he declared, he proved by observations taken the first thing in the day following the disaster.

With what virtually was a fleet of steamers within a radius of fifty miles of the Titanic, the officer said that this mistake in fixing accurately the position of the steamer was a fatal one. With icebergs and floating ice covering the northern sea, a ship of even the size of the Titanic might well be overlooked through such a variance.

J. Bruce Ismay, managing director of the International Mercantile Marine Co., was much cheered by the testimony in the afternoon. Throughout the week he has had a troubled look, and during the long daily sessions he has sat silent, seldom speaking to his associates who accompanied him. Saturday, however, he listened eagerly to the accounts of his conduct at the lifeboats as told by the stewards and seamen who came in contact with him the night of the disaster. He looked pleased when Steward Crawford told how he had called for women to go in one of the boats, and had said to a woman, who told him she was a stewardess, "You are a woman, take your place in the boat."

Ismay listened intently too as Steward Bright testified that he had not left the ship until after all the large lifeboats had gone and only one of two collapsible boats were left on deck. Bright had seen Ismay working with the others on the starboard collapsible boat, the last to leave the ship from that side. Bright, who left on the very last boat, the port collapsible, said he knew Ismay had not left the ship until just before the port collapsible was lowered into the water in time to at only a hundred yards from the Titanic before she went down.

Auto Bandits Killed.

Paris, April 29.—Bonnot, the leader of an organized gang of automobile bandits, who have been terrorizing the country for months past, and Dubois, a notorious anarchist, were shot to death yesterday in the most thrilling encounter in the annals of French crime. A garage at Choisy-Le-Roi, near Paris, in which the bandits had taken refuge, was blown up by dynamite after these men had kept at bay for hours a large part of the police force of Paris, a contingent of gendarmes, two companies of Republic guards and a company of engineers. Ten thousand spectators view the battle from points of vantage.

Bonnot and Dubois, after wounding two policemen yesterday, took refuge in the garage. They were trapped in the building, which was at once surrounded. Reinforcements were despatched to aid the police, composed of gendarmes, Republican guards and engineers. A battery of artillery was on the way from Versailles, when a small detachment of soldiers succeeded in placing dynamite against the structure and blowing out the front wall.

Bonnet was captured alive. He was riddled with bullets, and died on the way to a hospital. The great crowd that had gathered, with cries of death to Bonnet, almost tore the bandit from the soldiers, several of which were injured.

Brantford Girl Worried Over an Anonymous Letter Ends Her Life in the Mill Race

BODY IS FOUND

Brantford, April 29.—The body of Lottie Gibson, the 19-year-old daughter of Samuel Gibson, Sydenham street, was recovered from eight feet of water in the mill race Saturday morning. All day long farmers and others had been dragging the bed of the canal. The body was removed to the morgue and an inquest ordered by Coroner Ashton.

The girl left the mill where she was employed Friday at noon. Her mother had just visited her with a letter which had arrived at her home and which the mother opened. It was of a threatening nature and anonymous. As soon as the contents were revealed to the daughter, the latter was greatly disturbed. She was seen by several residents look behind to-pedestrian, as though to see if she were being watched.

Reginald Robbins, aged 25, who resides at Holmedale, appeared in the police court Saturday charged with sending threatening letters. He pleaded not guilty and was released on bail. This occurred prior to the finding of the body.

Miss Gibson left the house at noon on Friday to go back to work. She was in a hurry, and she hadn't any money with her. Half an hour or so later it appears that Mrs. Gibson, the girl's mother, discovered the letter. She immediately started out for the mill to show her daughter the letter. It threatened to expose the girl, and the writer complained of her failure to keep an appointment with him.

After a short conversation Mrs. Gibson went home again, and a little later her daughter left her work and was seen going along the bank of the millrace. When she failed to arrive home Friday night, her parents became alarmed, with the result that the search was continued Saturday morning.

Miss Gibson, it is stated was engaged to be married to a young man out west, and her parents say that Robbins was continually watching for her in the vicinity of her home.

Just what relations had existed between the couple is not determined. The Gibson family assert that Robbins was a rejected lover, while Robbins' story is the reverse.

The inquest will be held Thursday.

AWAITING BODIES.

Cable Ship Mackay-Bennett Will Arrive To-day.

Halifax, April 29.—The cable ship Mackay-Bennett, with its burden of Titanic victims will probably arrive here to-day, and will be tied up at the Government docks, but as it will serve no good purpose to be present, friends are earnestly urged in their own interest not to visit the dock. It will probably interfere with the prompt accomplishment of the very purpose they are here for.

The identified as well as unidentified will be sent to the Mayflower Rink, which has been secured as a temporary morgue.

At that place separate partitions have been built to that the work of embalming the bodies and their preparation for identification may be conducted in privacy. As fast as this is done, they will be removed to a place for the observation of friends, and thereafter removed her shipment to destination. The bodies will be taken from the dockyard where the Mackay-Bennett will moor with no delay. A transfer company has been engaged for this purpose. The undertaking rooms will be filled first, and then the harvest of death will be carried into the rink.

It appears that the body of C. M. Hays is not on the Mackay-Bennett, but on the Minia, Capt. De Carteret of this ship confirming the previous report that he has this body. A message sent yesterday from the Minia that no bodies were taken Saturday was painful news to those who have been waiting here in the hope that the names of friends or relatives might yet appear in the list. The bodies of only a little more than ten per cent. of those who perished have been recovered, and Capt. De Carteret plainly says that he does not think many more will be found.

Vincent Astor came yesterday from New York with three private cars, to claim the body of his father.

A Grand Trunk special train is here for Mr. Hays' body. Mr. Leadore is here representing Mrs. Victor Fenaise, hoping to find the body of her husband. Mrs. Fenaise's story is married to the brother of Premier Canalejas of Spain, and is related to the royal family.

Fire in Belleville Institution.

Belleville, April 29.—A large brick building in connection with the provincial institution for the deaf and dumb, which is situated just west of the city limits, was on Saturday afternoon badly damaged by fire. The building is three storeys in height and the two upper storeys were wrecked, entailing a considerable loss. The origin of the fire is unknown.

A TORNADO IN SOUTH

Oklahoma and Texas Visited by a Storm Swelling Storm in Which Many Persons Are Killed

DETAILS ARE MEAGRE

Lawton, Okla., April 29.—Originating early yesterday afternoon in the vicinity of Childress, Texas, and proceeding in a quarter circle covering nearly 250 miles, a tornado visited a great portion of northwestern Oklahoma and northern Texas, killing scores and wounding many.

It passed near Altus, Okla., but did little damage there. Blair, on the Orient Railroad route, was the next town visited. Much hail and rain accompanied it at that point, but no casualties were reported.

Orient freight train, No. 19, going north, was blown from the track a mile west of Lugert. The 15 cars were overturned and all of the train crew were injured; Fireman Murphy seriously. The engine was run back to Blair for physicians, who went to the scene.

At Lugert two were killed and several injured.

Passing on through the country between Hobart and Lone Wolf, it struck next at Mission, where several were injured. In many localities telephone and telegraph wires are down and details are meagre.

Throughout the country near Hobart many children were away from home and have not yet returned and their parents feel much uneasiness.

From latest reports the greatest damage seems to have been done in the rural districts, with which little or no communication is yet possible.

As the tornado proceeded along its course, travelling from southwest to northwest, it lost some of its force. From many of the larger towns in the stricken district, relief and doctors were hurried to the stricken towns.

Altus, Hobart, Lone Wolf and several other large towns were touched on the outskirts by the tornado, but was the death list said seriously injured would likely run to hundreds.

Dr. MacMurchy Dead.

Toronto, April 29.—Dr. Archibald MacMurchy, aged 69 years, of 128 East Bloor street, died in St. Michael's Hospital at 10.15 Saturday night, from injuries received when he was struck by a Bolt Line street car Thursday evening on Bloor street. Dr. MacMurchy did not regain consciousness, and his skull was terribly fractured.

Try the Want Advt. Columns of The Examiner—Small Price, Big Returns.

"Why, Janet!" and the girl stepped forward, her eyes on her, his own narrowing with a desire to clasp her in his arms, restrained by some subconscious power. "While I believed of your brother's agency, I could have played the good Samaritan most heartily, but after I talked with Willoughby I prefer him at a distance."

"My brother's story! Do you mean to insinuate you doubt his being my brother? He told you that"

"He gave up the whole trick. You can't trust a kid like that, Christie. A couple of drinks will loosen his tongue, and put you in wrong. Come, now, I know it all; be reasonable."

Apparently the girl had lost her power of speech, staring blindly at the face of the man before her, as a bird meets the slow approach of a snake. Keith could see her lips move, but making no sound. Hawley evidently interpreted her silence as hesitation, doubt as to his real meaning.

"You see where you are at now, Christie," he went on swiftly. "But you don't need to be afraid. I'm going to be a friend to you, and you can be mighty glad you got rid of Willoughby so easily. Why, I can buy you diamonds where he couldn't give you a calico dress. Come on, let's stop this foolishness. I took a liking to you back there in the stage, and the more I've thought about you since the crasier I've got. When I succeeded in pumping Willoughby dry, and discovered you wasn't his sister at all, why that settled the matter. I came down here after you. I love you, do you understand that? And, what's more, I intend to have you!"

He reached out and actually grasped her, but, in some manner, she tore loose, and sprang back around the end of the table, her cheeks flushed, her eyes burning.

"Don't touch me! don't dare touch me!" she panted. "You lie; Fred Willoughby never told you that. If you come one step nearer I'll scream; I'll call your men here; I'll tell them the kind of a cur you are."

He laughed, leaning over toward her, yet hesitating, his eyes full of admiration. Her very fierceness appealed to him, urged him on.

"Oh, I wouldn't! In the first place they probably wouldn't hear, for they are camped down in the corral. I suspected you might be something of a tigress, and preferred to fight it out with you alone. Then, even if they did hear, there would be no interference—I've got those fellows trained too well for that. Come on Christie; you're helpless here."

"Am I?"

"Yes, you are."

He took a step toward her, his hands flung out. With one quick movement she sprang aside and extinguished the lamp, plunging the room into instant darkness. A few red coals glowed dully in the fireplace, but all else was dense blackness. Keith heard the movements of Hawley, as he felt his way unsteadily along the table, swearing as he failed to find the girl. Then, like a shadow, he glided through the partly open door into the room.

CHAPTER XI.
THE FIGHT IN THE DARK.

Had the room been filled with men Keith could have restrained himself no longer. Whatever her past might be, this woman appealed to him strangely; he could not believe evil of her; he would have died if need be in her defence. But as it was, the ugly boast of Hawley gave confidence in the final outcome of this struggle in the dark, even a possibility of escape for them all. The gambler, assured of being confronted [illegible] his men beyond [illegible] doubtless instructed them to ignore any noise of struggle which they might overhear within. It was these very arrangements for evil which now afforded opportunity, and Keith crept forward, alert and ready, his teeth clenched, his hands bare for contest. Even although he surprised his antagonist, it was going to be a fight for life; he knew "Black Bart," broad-shouldered, quick as a cat, accustomed to every form of physical exercise, desperate and tricky, using either knife or gun recklessly. Yet it was now or never for all of them, and the plainsman felt no mercy, experienced no reluctance. He reached the table, and straightened up, silent, expectant. For an instant there was no further sound; no evidence of movement in the room. Hawley, puzzled by the silence, was listening intently in an endeavour to thus locate the girl through some rustling, some slight motion. A knife, knocked from the table, perhaps, as she slipped softly past, fell clattering to the floor, and the gambler leaped instantly forward. Keith's grip closed like iron on his groping arm, while he shot one fist out toward where the man's head should be. The blow glanced, yet drove the fellow backward, stumbling against the table, and Keith closed in, grappling for the throat. The other, startled by the unexpected attack, and scarcely realizing even yet the nature of his antagonist, struggled blindly to escape the fingers clawing at him, and flung one hand down to the knife in his belt. Warned by the movement, the assailant drove his head into the gambler's chest, sending him crashing to the floor, falling himself heavily upon the prostrate body. Hawley gave utterance to one cry, half throttled in his throat, and then the two grappled fiercely, so interlocked together as to make weapons useless. Whoever the assailant might be, the gambler was fully aware by now that he was being crushed in the grasp of a fighting man, and exerted every wrestler's trick, every ounce of strength, to break free. Twice he struggled to his knees, only to be crowded backward by relentless power; once he hurled Keith sideways, but the plainsman's muscles stiffened into steel, and he gradually regained his position. Neither dared release a grip in order to strike a blow; neither had sufficient breath left with which to utter a sound. They were fighting for life, silently, desperately, like wild beasts, with no thought but to injure the other. The gambler's teeth sank into Keith's arm, and the latter in return jammed the man's head back onto the puncheon floor viciously. Perspiration streamed from their bodies, their fingers clutching their limbs wrapped together, their muscles strained to the utmost. Keith had forgotten the girl, the negro, everything, dominated by the one passion to conquer. He was swept by a storm of hatred, a desire to kill. In their fierce struggle, the two had rolled close to the fireplace, and in the dull glow of the dying embers, he could perceive a faint outline of the man's face. The sight added flame to his mad passion, yet he could do nothing except cling to him, jabbing his fingers into the straining throat.

The negro ended the affair in his own way, clawing blindly at the combatants in the darkness, and finally determining which was the enemy, he struck the gambler with the stock of his gun, laying him out unconscious. Keith, grasping the table, hauled himself to his feet, gasping for breath, certain only that Hawley was no longer struggling. For an instant all was black, a mist of black vapour; then a realization of their situation came back in sudden flood of remembrance. Even yet he could see nothing, but felt the motionless figure at his feet.

"Quick," he urged, the instant he could make himself speak. "The fellow is only stunned; we must tie and gag him. Is that you, Neb? Where is the girl?"

"I am here, Captain Keith," and he heard the soft rustle of her dress across the room. "What is it I may do?"

"A coil of rope, or some straps, with a piece of cloth; anything you can lay hands on."

She was some moments at it, confused by the darkness, and Hawley moved slightly, his laboured breathing growing plainly perceptible. Keith heard her groping toward him, and held out his hands. She started as he thus unexpectedly touched her, yet made no effort to break away."

"You frightened me a little," she confessed. "This has all happened so quickly I hardly realize yet just what has occurred."

"The action has only really begun," he assured her, still retaining his hold upon her hand. "This was merely a preliminary skirmish, and you must prepare to bear your part in what follows. We have settled Mr. Hawley for the present, and now must deal with his gang."

"Oh, what would I have done if you had not been here?"

"Let us not think about that; we were here, and now have a busy night before us if we get away safely. Give me the rope first. Good! Here, Neb, you must know how to use this—not too tight, but without leaving any play to the arms; take the knife out of his belt. Now for the cloth, Miss Maclaire."

"Please do not call me that!"

"But you said it didn't make any difference what I called you."

"I thought it didn't then, but it does now."

"Oh, I see; we are already on a new footing. Yet I must call you something."

She hesitated just long enough for him to notice it. Either she had no substitute ready at hand, or else doubted the advisability of confiding her real name under present circumstances to one so nearly a stranger.

"You ma ycall me Hope."

"A name certainly of good omen," he returned. "From this moment I shall forget Christie Maclaire, and remember only Miss Hope. All right, Neb; now turn over a chair, and sit your man up against it. He will rest all the easier in that position until his gang arrive."

He thrust his head out of the door, peering cautiously forth into the night and listening. A single horse, probably the one Hawley had been riding, was tied to a dwarfed cottonwood near the corner of the cabin. Nothing else living was visibe.

"I am going to round up your horses, and learn the condition of Hawley's outfit," he announced in a low voice. "I may be gone for fifteen or twenty minutes, and, meanwhile, Miss Hope, get ready for a long ride. Neb, stand here close beside the door, and if anyone tries to come in brain him with your gun-stock. I'll rap three times when I return."

He slipped out into the silent night, and crept cautiously around the end of th dark cabin. The distinct change in the girl's attitude of friendship toward him, her very evident desire that he should think well of her, together with the providential opportunity for escape, had left him full of confidence. The gambler had played blindly into their hands, and Keith was quick enough to accept the advantage. It was a risk to himself, to be sure, thus turning again to the northward, yet the clear duty he owed the girl left such a choice almost imperative. He certainly could not drag her along with him on his flight into the wild Comanche country extending beyond the Canadian. She must, at the very least, be first returned to the protection of the semi-civilization along the Arkansas. After that had been accomplished, he would consider his own safety. He wondered if Hope really was her name, and whether it was the family cognomen, or her given name. That she was Christie Maclaire he had no question, yet that artistic embellishment was probably merely assumed for the work of the concert hall. Both he and Hawley could scarcely be mistaken as to her identity in this respect, and, indeed, she had never openly denied the fact. Yet she did not at all seem to be that kind, and Keith mentally contrasted her with numerous others whom he had somewhat intimately known along the border circuit. It was difficul to associate her with that class; sh must have come originally from some excellent family East, and been driven to the life by necessity; she was more to be pitied than blamed. Keith held no puritanical views of life—his own experiences had been too rough and democratic for that—yet he clung tenaciously to an ideal of womanhood which could not be lowered. However interested he might otherwise feel, no Christal Maclaire could ever find entrance into the sdorps of his heart, where dwelt alone the memory of his mother.

He found the other horses turned into the corral, and was able, from their restless movements, to decide they numbered eight. A fire, nearly extinguished, glowed dully at the further corner of the enclosure, and he crawled close enough to distinguish the recumbent forms of men sleeping about it on the ground. Apparently no guard had been set, the fellows being worn out from their long ride, and confident of safety in this isolated spot. Besides, Hawley had probably assumed that duty, and told them to get whatever sleep they could. However, the gate of the corral opened beside their fire, and Keith dare not venture upon roping any of their ponies, or leading the mout past where they slept. There might be clippers in the cabin wiph which he could cut the wires, yet if one of the gang awoke, and discovered the herd absent, it would result in an alarm, and lead to early pursuit. It was far safer to use their own ponies. He would lead Hawley's horse quietly through the water, and they could mount on the other shore. This plan settled, he went at it swiftly, riding the captured animal while rounding up the others, and fastening the three to stunted trees on the opposite bank. Everything within the cabin remained exactly as he had left it, and he briefly explained the situation, examining Hawley's bonds again carefully while doing so.

"He'll remain there all right until his men find him," he declared, positively, "and that ought to give us a good six hours' start. Come, Miss Hope, every minute counts now."

He held her arm, not unconscious of its round shapeliness, as he helped her down th rathr steep bank through he dense gloom. Then the two men joined hands, and carrying her easily between them," waded the shallow stream. The horses, not yet sufficiently rested to be frisky, accepted their burdens meekly enough, and, with scarcely a word spoken, the three rode away silently into the gloom of the night.

CHAPTER XII.
THROUGH THE NIGHT SHADOWS.

Keith had very little to guide him, as he could not determine whether this mysterious cabin on the Salt Fork lay to east or west of the usual cattle trail leading down to the Canadian. Yet he felt reasonably assured that the general trend of the country lying between the smaller stream and the valley of the Arkansas would be similar to that with which he was already acquainted. It was merely a wild stretch of sandy desolation, across which their horses would leave scarcely any trail, and even that little would be quickly obliterated by the first puff of wind. As they drew in toward the river valley this plain would change into sand dunes, baffling and confusing, but no matter how hard they pressed forward, it must be daylight long before they could hope to reach these, and this would give him opportunity to spy out some familiar landmark which would guide them to the ford. Meanwhile, he must head as directly north as possible, trusting the horses to find footing.

It was plains instinct, or rather long training in the open, which enabled him to retain any true sense of direction, for beyond the narrow fringe of cottonwoods along hte stream, nothing was visible, the eyes scarcely able even to distinguish where earth and sky met. They advanced across a bare level, without elevation or depression, yet the sand appeared sufficiently solid, so that their horses were forced into a swinging lope, and they seemed to fairly press aside the black curtain, which as instantly swung shut once more, and closed them in. The pounding hoofs made little noise, and they pressed steadily onward, closely bunched together, so as not to lose each other, dim, spectral shadows flitting through the night, a very part of that grim desolation surrounding them. No one of the three felt like speaking; the gloomy, brooding desert oppressed them, their vagrant thoughts assuming the tinge of their surroundings; their hope centred on escape. Keith rode, grasping the rein of the woman's horse in his left hand, and bending low in vain effort at picking a path. He had nothing to aim toward, yet sturdy confidence in his expert plainscraft yielded him sufficient sense of direction. He had noted the bark of the cottonwoods, the direction of the wind, and steered a course accordingly straight northward, alert to avert any variation.

The girl rode easily, although in a man's saddle, the stirrups much too long. Keith glanced aside with swift approval at the erectness with which she sat, the loosened rein in her hand, the slightly swaying of her form. He could appreciate horsemanship, and the easy manner in which she rode relieved him of one anxiety. It even caused him to break the silence.

"You are evidently accustomed to riding, Miss Hope."

She glanced across at him through the darkness, as though suddenly surprised from thought, her words not coming quickly.

"I cannot remember when I first mounted a horse; in earliest childhood, surely, although I have not ridden much of late. This one is like a rocking chair."

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

How Jesus Preached to Spirits in Prison

Angels Once Materialized and Took Wives From Among Daughters of Men

Atlanta, Ga., April 28.—"Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the Just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God; being put to death in the flesh, but quickened in the spirit, by which also He preached unto the spirits in prison."—1 Peter iii. 18, 19.

This text, said Pastor Russell, has been made the basis for some peculiar presentations. From it some have argued an intermediate state lasting between death and the resurrection. Others have claimed it as an authority for the doctrine of Purgatory. The difficulty in every case seems to be the failure to remember that the Bible always and everywhere teaches that the dead are really dead, that they know nothing, and that, therefore, it would be impossible to do any preaching to the dead humans. Undoubtedly the theory that people are more alive after they die than when they were alive is responsible for nearly all of the foolish things which we have all at some time professed to believe.

Before dismissing the thought that these "spirits in prison" are human spirits, let us note the fact that to say "human spirits," is an absurdity of itself, because human beings are not spirits and spirit beings are not humans. "Who maketh His angels spirits," is the Scriptural proposition. True, we do sometimes speak of humans as possessing a spirit of life, but by this we merely mean that he possesses the power or energy of life, and the same would be equally true of the lower orders of creation, beasts, fish, fowl, etc.

Again, we sometimes speak of the Church as spirit beings—begotten of the Holy Spirit. Thus the Apostle speaks of the natural man in contrast with the New Creature, a spirit being. To appreciate this statement we must remember that the Church alone receives the begetting of the Holy Spirit to the end that, if faithful, they may attain unto a spirit resurrection and become spirit beings, like unto the angels and like to the Redeemer. But we are not spirits yet except by faith—by hope. However, the context shows that the Apostle had no reference to the Church, either: we were not in prison; we received the Message of salvation through the Apostles.

The spirits to whom the message was given had proven themselves disobedient, says St. Peter. He even tells us the time of their disobedience, namely, that it was "in the days of Noah, while the ark was preparing." Surely, if nothing these particulars mentioned in the context, no one would be excusable for misunderstanding this Scripture and considering it in any way applicable to humanity in general. However, it is helpful to us to learn the full particulars of the matter. What was their disobedience, and when and how were they imprisoned?

Turning to Genesis vi, 1-6, we find there the cause of the disobedience of those angels, who for a time had been permitted to see what they could do for the uplift of humanity, or, rather, permitted to demonstrate that the downward tendency of sin is incurable except in the manner which God has already arranged for through Messiah and His glorious reign of a thousand years.

Instead of those angels helping mankind out of sin they helped themselves into sin, and by so doing they increased the depravity amongst humanity until the astounding record is that "the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thought of his heart was only evil continually." The particular sin of those angels was that when they were granted the privileges of materializing—of taking human bodies for the sake of helping and instructing mankind—they misused this power and took to themselves the daughters of men for wives. Thus these angels came gradually to prefer to live as men amongst men and to rear earthly families rather than to abide in the condition in which they were created—spirit beings, higher than humans. Not only was this wrong in the sense that it was a course in opposition to the Divine arrangement, but it was wrong also because the thing was done for the cultivation and gratification of lust, and it led to base, sensual defilement as well as lasting baneful influence upon humanity. We are most readily see that for the angels of superior powers and intelligence to become lobbists in lustful practices would exert a great influence upon mankind towards sin and defilement of mind and body.

We are particularly told that the mingling of this improper union between the angels and the daughters of men were giants, both physically and mentally superior to the fallen human family—"men of renown." And this statement, that they were "men of renown," was at a time when manhood's estate was reached at a hundred years, and implies that God did not interfere to hinder or stop the progress of sin for perhaps several centuries. In the meantime the race had become so corrupt that apparently only Noah and his family were uncontaminated—all others had more or less come under the influence, directly or indirectly, of these fallen angels or their giant sons. Hence, of Noah it was written (not that he was a perfect man, but), "Now Noah was perfect in his generation" (uncontaminated) and his family apparently the same. Hence these alone were saved in the ark, while all the remainder, more or less contaminated, were destroyed by the flood.

It was then and there that God imprisoned those spirits, angels, who kept not their first estate, and are therefore called fallen angels, devils, demons. They were now imprisoned in some faroff world called hell, nor are they engaged there in stoking fires for the torture of poor humanity. Following the teaching of the Scriptures we find that when the flood came they were not destroyed because, while their fleshly bodies which they assumed might indeed perish, yet they would merely dematerialize, or assume their spirit conditions again.

The record is that God cast them down, that He condemned them to an overthrow—that they might not any longer associate with the holy angels, but must be reserved in tartarus—our earth's atmosphere. Here they were imprisoned, not in a special place, but in the sense of having their liberty restrained; "in chains of darkness." They were no longer permitted to materialize and thus to ensnare humanity. These things are distinctly told us by St. Jude and St. Peter (Jude 6; II. Peter ii. 4, 5)—an explanation in full harmony with the Genesis account of their fall.

We of course cannot know that all of those fallen angels are still in a disloyal condition of heart. On the contrary, in harmony with our text, we may suppose that some of these fallen angels have since repented of their wrong course and it would be none too strong a way to state the matter—that any such repentant ones would surely have terrible experiences as a result. To be obliged to be in close touch and relationship with the more evil and malignant ones and to have knowledge of all their evil designs and efforts would be a terrible experience and, besides this, we may be sure that the rebellious would not hesitate to persecute the repentant ones in every conceivable manner, as they would be lawless, regardless of the Divine will.

On the other hand, the repentant ones would be obliged to restrain themselves and to not render evil for evil, knowing that this would be contrary to the Divine will. In other words, repentant ones amongst these fallen spirits, influenced by the preaching of Jesus or otherwise, would have a kind of purgatorial experience, and the very thought calls forth our sympathy.

When imprisoned or cut off from the privilege of materialization, many of the fallen spirits, we know not what proportion, continued their active opposition to God, after the manner of Satan. Hence they are spoken of as it's angels, his messengers, his servants and he is spoken of as Beelzebub, the Prince of Demons. Satan, who sinned much earlier than the others, and in a different way, the Scriptures tell us was an angel of a higher rank, or a higher nature, and this superiority of his has made him the Prince or ruler over the hosts of fallen spirits.

The fight of Satan and his fallen angels is against God, against all who are in harmony with Him, against all the regulations of righteousness, and against all the channels and servants whom the Lord may use. St. Paul's words along this line are forceful; he remarks that God's people contend not merely "with flesh and blood," but also "with wicked spirits in high positions," and the question arises, "Who is sufficient for these things?" The reply to that note is sufficient; without the aid of he Redeemer His church would be quite overcome and vanquished by evil.

Likewise, without the Redeemer's aid through His Kingdom, without the binding of Satan, without our Lord's releasing of the world from the bondage of sin and death, there would be no hope of the world's recovery from its present bondage. But with the Apostle we exclaim, "If God be for us, who can be against us?" (Romans viii, 31.)

Satan's original plan of attack was to bring our race under his influence by misrepresentation—by putting darkness for light and light for darkness—for instance, the temptation under which Mother Eve fell. Satan there represented himself as Eve's friend, giving her sound advice. He represented God as having a selfish motive behind His command that our first parents should not eat of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil—taken occasion upon men told an untruth when He said that the penalty for sin would be death. He declared that man cannot die.

And has he not since kept up the same line of falsification? And has he not deceived the whole world upon this very subject? Do not all peoples in every land believe that when a man dies he does not die, but gets more alive—exactly Satan's lie of the first instance? How few have believed God, even amongst His people who truly love Him, and who truly desire to believe the teachings of His Word! We have all been under a kind of "hoodoo." "The god of this world (Satan) hath blinded" our minds on this subject. We are now coming to see that death is the penalty for sin and that the resurrection is the salvation which God has promised and will provide.

Satan has had powerful allies and servants in the fallen angels, and it is through their assistance that his lie has triumphed over the Divine Word of truth—"Dying, thou shalt die." These fallen spirits have made various manifestations in every land for centuries, and thereby have apparently substantiated the theory that a dead man is more alive than when he was living. Knowing that mankind would have nothing to do with them if their real personality were known they hide their personality and represent themselves as our dead friends who desire to speak with us, either directly or through mediums.

A further desire of these angels is to obsess or to get possession of a human being. Being chained or restrained from the privilege of materialisation, the next most desirable thing in their estimation is to gain control over a human being and to use his body instead of their own. This is styled obsession, and persons so afflicted to-day are sent to an insane asylum where, it is estimated, they constitute at least one half of the entire number. In the days of our Lord these were not mistakenly supposed to be insane, but rightly declared to be obsessed. All remember the New Testament account that our Saviour and His Apostles cast out legions of fallen spirits from humanity.

We need not discuss this question with Bible Students, for it is too well recognized to be disputed. We suggest a topical study of this subject by all of our readers. See how many times Jesus and the Apostles cast out demons, and note the particulars. Although we still have with us spirit mediums and many obsessed, we cannot know whether the proportionate number is greater or fewer than in our Lord's day. Since the world's population to-day is so much larger, the same number of evil spirits (which do not increase) would show proportionately less. But, however that may be, we may assume that some fruitage resulted from the great sermons preached to them in connection with the death and resurrection of our Lord, respecting which St. Peter tells us in our text. Additionally, St. Paul remarks, "Know ye not that the saints shall judge angels?" (I. Corinthians vi, 2.) We do know that the holy angels need no judging, no trial, hence the Apostle must in some way refer to a trial or judgment or testing of these spirits in prison who were once disobedient, in the days of Noah. And if the judgment or testing is a part of the Divine plan, it implies a hope for them, and in conjunction with St. Peter's statement in our text it gives the reasonable inference that the preaching which Jesus did to them was not wholly in vain.

Here arises another question: If Jesus was really dead, as the Scriptures declare, if "He poured out His soul unto death," and "made His soul an offering for sin," and His soul was not raised from the dead until the third day after His crucifixion, how could He in the meantime preach to spirits in prison, or to anybody else? We reply that He could preach in the same way that the Apostle refers to, saying, "He, being dead, yet speaketh" (Hebrews xi, 4); and again, in the same way that the blood of Abel is said to have cried to God—figuratively. Of one thing we are sure, namely, that Jesus gave no oral address while He was dead. He preached in the way we sometimes refer to when we say, "Actions speak louder than words."

It was the great object lesson which the fallen angels saw that constituted to them the great sermon that gave them a ground for hope. On several occasions the fallen spirits, when constrained to come out of human beings, declared that they knew Jesus. In the long ago they had known Him.

Legend of the Niger.

There is a curious legend connected with the source of the Niger. Traditions says that a devil lives inside the rock whence the river springs. The natives are very superstitious, says The Wide World Magazine, and greatly fear this demon, who is supposed to kill any individual who dares to look at the source. Hence when showing a stranger the spot, they cover up their face and walk backward in the direction of the source, pointing toward it with hand outstretched behind the back.

Did Not See Daylight For 20 Years.

The pit ponies of one of the English coal mines were brought to the surface when the miners stopped work several weeks ago. None of the animals had seen daylight since they were first taken into the mines, some as long as twenty years ago. All of them were bewildered, and many were so frightened as though they had been deposited on a new planet, but there were some which showed signs of joy, neighing and rolling over and over on the ground.

A Canadian Psychologist.

A good side partner for Mr. H. Addington Bruce, the Canadian who writes so vividly on that abstruse science, psychology, would be President G. E. Cutten, of Acadia College, Wolfville, N.S. The boyish-appearing president is a giant; so is Bruce. And, like Bruce, he is a very prominent psychologist—an authority in fact. His three books, "The Psychology of Alcoholism," "The Psychological Phenomena of Christianity," and "Three Thousand Years of Mental Healing," are known to scholars the world over.

Dr. Cutten is a home-grown Nova Scotian. He is a graduate of Amherst College, and Yale, where he played on the football eleven. Despite his deep thinking, he hardly looks his thirty-seven years; appears more like a half-back than a famous psychologist. A feature worth noting about him is that he has not renounced Canada for the American literary mart. The quiet peace of old Scotia has suited his kind of mental gymnastics, which are bringing honor to Canada in a field where her litterateurs have not ventured far.

Dr. Vogt.

Dr. Vogt of Toronto, the father of the Mendelssohn Choir, who has brought great joy to Canadians, and great credit to Canada, though he may find ample reward for his labors in the joy of success, well deserves other recognition. He has won—if such things are the price of accomplishment—a knighthood, as much as men who have made money, or cement mergers, or killed many fellow beings in battle. He has made thousands and thousands happy — there are no tears on his laurels—and besides he has splendidly blessed Canada in the field of art; won her renown where, in this young country, not too much has been accomplished. Sullivan was decorated because he made music that will live. Vogt has made music live; has given interpretation of music worthy of the great masters that made it; and has, thereby, won a bay leaf or two.

THE CASE-BOOK OF A PRIVATE DETECTIVE

Inside History of the Methods Employed in Criminal Investigation Embracing True Narratives of Interesting Cases by a Former Operative of the William J. Burns Detective Agency.

BY DAVID CORNELL

3 — The Hollister Jewel Robbery
THE STORY OF A MYSTERIOUS THEFT

(Copyright, 1917, by International Press Bureau.)

[Illegible]'s Note:—In order that no embarrassment may arise through the publication of these narratives to persons involved therein, other names and places have in many instances been substituted for the real ones.)

One Monday morning in August, 1910, the Independent Burglary Insurance Company called up the office of the Burns Detective Agency and requested that an operative be sent to their offices at once.

"Cornell," said the manager to me, "you haven't had any experience in the burglary insurance line, but I guess you can handle the work. Go down and see what's up. And, say, Cornell, remember this: this agency is retained by the year by this insurance company. One of our big customers. Treat their work accordingly."

I found the offices of the Independent Company in a Forty-second street building not far from Fifth avenue. On presenting my card I was ushered at once into the private office of the vice president, Mr. Blaney.

"Ah! The man from the Burns Agency?" said Mr. Blaney. "Cornell is the name? Ah, yes; glad they sent you, Mr. Cornell. We've heard something of your work. You've never handled any of our cases, have you?"

"Not any," I said.

"Well, fortunately this isn't a complicated case, as at least we don't think it is. It's [illegible] case of investigation to assure ourselves of the propriety of a policy holder's claim. A mere matter of form, almost. We always investigate all claims for payments, you know. Sometimes we are convinced that something is wrong; then we instruct your agency to find something for us to start a fight on. In this case, it isn't anything like that. In brief, Col. Malcom F. Hollister's home up on Long Island sound was entered by burglars Saturday night and Mrs. Hollister's diamonds and pearls, valued at $75,000, and insured with us for $50,000, were stolen. There is scarcely the slightest possibility that there is anything wrong in the case. Col. Hollister is a fine, high-minded man, a gentleman of the old school. He has paid this company thousands of dollars in premiums for the last ten years and never presented a claim before this. We are all of the opinion that we will pay his claim in full, in due time. But—as a matter of form, you understand—we're sending you down to look the thing over. Be careful, Mr. Cornell, but be careful of our interests as well as the feelings of Col. Hollister and his family. Assure yourself that the burglary was committed, that Mrs. Hollister's jewels were stolen, and report. That is the case."

That was enough, for before I had got through with it the Hollister case had developed into a case so sensational, so full of strange features that the Independent Burglary Insurance Company never dreamed of, that even today it is spoken of in the office of the agency as "The Hollister Job."

Being new to the work of investigating burglaries for the insurance company I went about the task in a way considerably different from that employed by the experienced investigator. I did not go to the scene of the robbery. The Hollister home lay up among the hills of Long Island on the sound. I had heard of it as a good example of what taste and moderate wealth—moderate for New York—could do in making complete a home. I had heard of Col. Hollister, too, in the same indirect way. He was a retired bond broker, approximately 65 years old. His first wife had died many years before. Five years ago he had married again, this time taking for his bride Margaret Wynderling, the Margaret Wynderling who for a brief space had won such distinction in Bernard Shaw's plays. There had been some opposition to the match at the time on the part of Mr. Hollister's two grown sons by his first marriage. After the wedding this opposition was said to have simmered down until now report had it that Colonel and Mrs. Hollister were happily at peace with all the world, especially including Hollister's two grown sons. I had seen pictures of both the Colonel and his young wife in the society sections of the papers. The Colonel was an ardent member of the Nassau Hunt Club, and Mrs. Hollister was credited with having developed a great interest in aviation. This served to keep them both in print often enough to make them comparatively well known.

Instead of repairing at once to this reputed ideal home of wealth and culture, I went down town. At the end of three hours' work I entered the office of the broker with whom Col. Hollister had been associated in business, and who now handled the old gentleman's investments. I was [illegible] with letters of introduction.

The news of the burglary had not been made public as, after introducing myself as a real estate man whom Col. Hollister had approached with a view of making extensive investments, I found no trouble in furthering my avowed mission—that of obtaining a confidential opinion on the state of Col. Hollister's finances. The broker, whose name, pulled his mustache and smiled easily.

"O, the Colonel's all right," said he with a twinkling of his eye. "He isn't rich, you know, not New York rich, but he's comfortably fixed, very comfortably fixed now, since he took my advice and handles the family pocket-book himself."

He laughed reminiscently, and I chuckled with him.

"Yes," he went on, "the old man had to be advised a little bit some time ago. I advised him. Mrs. Hollister—fine woman, lovely lady, but inexperienced in handling large sums of money, you know—had been given a free swing at the colonel's bank account. By jove! I tell you she tore a hole into it for two or three years. You sir! Nearly had the colonel off his feet. I said to him, 'Colonel, only one thing for you to do. Shut down on Mrs. Hollister. Don't let her handle a dollar. Otherwise you'll be selling that happy home of yours up on the Sound.'"

"And what [illegible]," I asked.

"Yes. Yes. Clamped down on her right. For about a year she's had to go to the colonel for every cent she got, and, believe me, sir, the colonel has been careful, very careful, indeed. O, yes, the colonel is safe enough financially. Anything up to a million I should say."

I thanked my new found friend for his friendliness and confidence, and went further on my way, rummaging around Wall street to find all I could about the state of Hollister's finances. There was little enough to find, apparently the colonel was sound so far as money was concerned, and Glavis was the only man who knew that there ever had been any financial difficulty between him and his wife. Everywhere that I investigated I found Hollister spoken of in the highest terms. He was a fine, honorable gentleman. Mrs. Hollister wasn't so well known among the colonel's friends. In order to make my investigation thorough I got on a Broadway car and rode up to the theatrical district, to the office of a friend of mine who conducted a booking agency. There I gathered that Mrs. Hollister, formerly Margaret Wynderly, was not as happy with her rich husband as she had expected to be. It seemed that Mrs. Hollister had expensive tastes. The colonel did not approve of them. At one time, so the gossip of the Rialto had it, Mrs. Hollister had gone so far as to threaten to go back to the stage to earn money to gratify her whims.

All these minute investigations may seem to the layman to be superfluous in a case like this. What could the Hollister's family affairs have to do with the advent of a burglar in their home? I could not answer this question any better than the reader at the beginning of my search, but successful detective work is largely a matter of watching the small things. It is the small things that the wrong-doer fails to cover, not the large ones; and it is among these small things that the careful detective will often find the tiny item that puts him on the trail of something big. I had no definite plan in so carefully looking up the Hollister family circumstances, I only knew that it was my duty as an investigator of this case to find all about them that I could.

I ran down all the information I could scare up in New York; then, next morning, I bought a ticket to the station on the Long Island Road, where the Hollister home was located.

I arrived at the station, Soundhurst, near noon and registered at the little hotel in the village. The clerk at the hotel dined at my table and I led him to talk about the Hollister family. I was surprised to find that even there the news of the burglary had not become known, and the clerk did not hesitate in discussing the people who lived in the big house on the Sound.

"I've got a cousin who takes care of their launches and boats," said he, "and I know about all that's going on up there. And I'll me tell you, mister, those rich folks don't have so much smoother sailing than us poor ones. No sir, they have their rows just like we do. Why, here two months ago this spring, Mrs. Hollister had some of her old theatrical friends out for a visit, and they were raising Ned out in one of the big launches, and Old Hollister came running out in a smaller launch and ordered the whole lot of 'em back to shore. They had a merry old row that night, him and her, and she was going to leave him, and then he cooled down, and at last she agreed to stay. I guess he must have given in to her, because she's had that bunch of show people out every Saturday since. And believe me, they have some times, then. One of them is her brother. A young fellow; great sport. After the rest of 'em have gone to bed at night he comes down here and has a few drinks with the 'wench in the bar here. Great little fellow."

After dinner I went out and strolled down to the nearest telephone office and called up my friend in the booking office in New York.

"Do you know anything about Mrs. Hollister's brother, a little fellow with sporting tendencies?" I asked.

"Yes, I know of him," came the slow answer. "He's a little negged. Tries to be an actor sometimes, and a press agent occasionally, and falls down on both jobs."

"What does he live on?"

"Search me. He always has money, though. I've heard that old Hollister sort of takes care of him. Don't believe it, though. The boy is a cheap, bright-light sport."

I went back to the hotel and sat around and smoked for awhile until the clerk again fell into conversation with me. I led the talk back to the Hollisters.

"Was that bunch of theatrical people up there last Saturday night?" I asked.

"Sure thing," was the reply.

"Was the brother with them?"

"O, yes. But I didn't see him drinking around here that time."

I bought the clerk a cigar and strolled away toward the Hollister home.

Instead of going at once to the house I walked twice around the place—sizing it up as if I were a burglar looking for a place to enter. One could hardly imagine a blander prospect from the burglar's point of view. The house was [illegible] a bluff overlooking the Sound. All around it ran a red brick wall 12 feet high. On top of the wall were long iron spikes. On the side fronting toward the Sound was the lodge of the boatman; in the opposite corner of the grounds was a small living house, evidently the home of the gardener, while in another corner were the stables and garage, with living quarters for coachman and chauffeur. To enter that house a burglar would have to scale the wall, risk detection from one of the three outlying houses, cross a long open space, and break into a house which obviously was well protected with safeguards. The more I looked at the house the more I became interested. If a burglar had entered and stolen those jewels he must be a man whom it would be an interesting task to run down. But had a burglar entered? Were there any burglars out of prison just then who would venture such a task?

I ran over the list of two-story men whom I knew to be at liberty then. None of them seemed of a class to perform a job like this. There was one man whom the job fitted—Peters, the gentleman burglar—but Peters was in the Federal prison at Leavenworth and so was eliminated.

I spent a long hour studying the house in this fashion; then I went back to the hotel and called up the agency to report for the day. Chief Burns himself answered my call.

"Say, Cornell," he said, "Hollister has been 'phoning the insurance company asking why they don't send out an investigator to look up his claim. What's the matter?"

As briefly and succinctly as I could I related all that I have here told.

"The thing doesn't look right from the outside," said I. "That's why I'm not reporting at the Hollister house."

The chief was silent for a moment. "Are you sure her brother was out there Saturday?" he asked.

"That's the information I got here," I replied.

"Well," said he, "you go up to the house and report, and make your investigation. Come back to your hotel for the evening. And for heaven's sake, don't do anything to make them think you may not believe things are all right."

He rang off.

At the Hollister house I was ushered at once in to Col. Hollister on informing the butler of my mission.

"Rather late in getting here," said the colonel. He was an old man, and he was not happy, judging by his expression. He called Mrs. Hollister. She was a young, charming woman, yet somehow I could not get rid of the impression that she was still—there in her own home—playing a part. Together they took me over the scene of the robbery. Mrs. Hollister had been accustomed to keeping her jewels in her dressing table in her room. The room was on the second floor. Saturday night, while they were having an informal little dinner down-

"She sank into a chair and sat staring at us in terror."

I called up Mrs. Hollister and asked if she would consent to see me alone without her husband's knowledge.

"Why?" she demanded.

"I cannot say over the phone, Mrs. Hollister," I replied. "But—it is about your brother."

There was a silence of several seconds. Then came the answer: "Come to the house at once."

"Good," said the chief, "I'll go with you."

It was night now, and at the Hollister home we were ushered into the library by a maid. Presently Mrs. Hollister came in alone and closed the door behind her.

"What is it?" she cried. "What has happened to my brother?"

"Don't be alarmed, Mrs. Hollister," I said. "Nothing has happened to him, and nothing will—unless you wish it. It is all up to you."

"What is it?" she whispered. "O, what is it? Tell me."

"Mrs. Hollister," said the chief, "hasn't your brother been pressing you to give him large sums of money lately?"

Her eyes ran from one to the other of us, seeking to read what we knew. She wasn't acting now, and I felt sorry for her.

"How do you know that?" she asked.

"Isn't it a fact," continued the chief, "that Colonel Hollister refused to give you any more money to give your brother?"

She sank into a chair and sat staring at us in terror.

"Mrs. Hollister," said I as gently as I could, "when you saw me looking at that window didn't you see that I knew just as well as you did that no burglar ever had forced his way in there?"

She was dumb with terror; she strove to speak but the words would not come.

"And don't you know that my suspicions naturally pointed to your brother? And just now we've learned that he's booked to sail on the Franconia in the morning."

"And, Mrs. Hollister," said the chief with a gentleness I never had suspected him of, "we'd have to arrest your brother on suspicion if he attempts to sail—knowing what we do."

"What do you want me to do?" she cried suddenly, flinging out her arms. "Don't hurt that poor boy! What do you want me to do?"

I looked at the chief.

"Mrs. Hollister," said he, "we are only engaged to investigate this case for the Independent Burglary Insurance Company. Our duty at present merely is to report that we do not advise the payment of your claim without further investigation. Then we will be instructed to continue our investigation at once. Which means that our duty would force us to take your brother into custody."

She thought it over for a few minutes. Then she went into the hall and called for her wraps and the big touring car.

"Where are you going madame?" asked the maid.

"I've got to run in to the Belmont Hotel," said Mrs. Hollister calmly, "I have an appointment there for this evening."

Late that night Col. Hollister called up Mr. Blaney of the Independent Burglary Insurance Company.

"I say, Blaney," said he, "drop that claim we presented for Mrs. Hollister's jewels. Loathsome thing in the world just happened. Mrs. Hollister's brother just came out to the house and took a walk down by the beach and found the jewel case with the stones all in it lying under a bunch of sand dunes. Yes, yes; found them—all of them—yes; the burglars must have dropped them in making their escape.—Yes; probably escaped in a motor boat up the sound.—Yes, smart boy, that Mrs. Hollister's brother, Blaney. I'm going to do something handsome for him.—Yes, drop the claim completely. The jewels are back, here safe in the house, and that's all we care for. Good night, Blaney, good night."

A few days later the news of the attempted burglary of the Hollister home leaked out, and the newspapers made a great ado over the finding of the stolen jewels. But I wonder what they would have done had they known at the time that what I have told here is the real story of how the Hollister jewels did not disappear.

CENTRAL IS SURE TO KNOW

Telephone Operator Infallible Authority on Pronunciation of Difficult Proper Names.

Three men argued over the pronunciation of a fourth man's name. The fourth man was not present. He was prominent, but unknown to the disputants.

"We'll settle this thing right now," said one.

He called a telephone operator on the fourth man's exchange.

"Say, Central, how do you pronounce this name?" he asked.

He spelled it out. She told him. Her pronunciation differed from anything previously suggested.

"But it is all right, am sure," said the man who had telephoned. "Those girls always know. They are an authority on the pronunciation of proper names. A man with a funny name can't bear to hear it called wrong, even over the phone, and the first thing he does when he acquires the use of a new telephone is to drill the operator on the correct pronunciation."

Tactful Request.

Dobbleigh was a confirmed borrower, and, what was worse, he seldom returned the borrowed articles. He had held on to Whibley's umbrella, for instance, for nearly a year.

"And I'm blest if I know how I can ever going to get it back," said Whibley.

"Easy," said Hickonlooper. "Call a messenger boy and send Dobbleigh this note."

And he scribbled off the following: "Dear Dobbleigh: If you can spare it I'd like to borrow that umbrella of mine for a couple of days. Can you oblige me?"—Harper's Weekly.

An old lady was staying at a hotel at Nice at the time of the earthquake. "My dear," she was wont to say, "I was simply tumbled out of bed and the ceiling cracked. PIONEER DAYS IN THE TOWNSHIP OF OTONABEE

Written For The Examiner

(BY RAY GILBERT)

Otonabee is an Indian word meaning "Sounds water," so called from the river where the Ouseburn River empties into Rice Lake through a delta. The township was surveyed in 1818. The same year Captain Rubidge, R.N., named the township and reserved the following year with his family for permanent settlement. He was the first to perform settlement duties and secure a title to his land.

These settlement duties consisted in clearing down and clearing out trees and brushwood along the concession line in front of the lot to the width of two rails and blazing down one timber four rods wide along the side of this, thus marking all boundaries through the forest. Six years with, along the entire lot of 200 acres, which, with similar work on the part of the owner of the opposite lot, opened to view the whole breadth of the concession line. In addition to this, a clearing of two acres at least must be made and a house or shanty 16 by 20 feet erected on the land.

A considerable number of settlers came in during the year 1820. These were: John Walstead, Major Design, Thomas Carr, John Nelson and his sons Andrew and William, John Mackintosh, Mr. Lindsay, Ambrose Mayott, James Beckett, Thomas Nelson, George Esson with his sons Thomas, Alexander, Daniel, and Robert, John Fife and six sons, James Foley, John Stewart, William Snowden, Ralph Davidson, and the following single men without families—Robert Redpath, James Hunter, George Banks, Nicholas Bullen, Robert Ferguson, Robert Hyatt, Lieut. Jenkins, and Mr. Collier.

For many years before the township was surveyed a trading post for the purchase of furs and the exchange of commodities with the Indians was kept, at first by an intelligent Indian named Herkimer, and afterwards by Major Charles Anderson, on the shore of Rice Lake. The location of the post was on a point of land just below the site of the present village of Hiawatha. Since the erection of the dam at Hasting (formerly Cook's Rapids) the point has become an island.

A number of gentlemen, occupying the position of half-pay officers, secured the greater portion of the lots along the front of the township; thus obliging the other settlers, not without some reluctance, to take up positions further to the rear.

The first thing required of the settler, in those days, was to go before a land agent (who resided first in Toronto, afterwards an agency was opened in Cobourg), and take the oath of allegiance. A fee of seven shillings and sixpence was charged for administering the oath, and the applicant was then furnished with a location ticket for any unoccupied lot he may have selected. This ticket entitled him to a free grant of fifty acres on performing certain conditions known as settlement duties, upon the performance of which a deed was issued for the fifty acres, with the right to purchase the other fifty, or any other unoccupied lands in the vicinity. The second fifty acres could be secured on the payment of four pounds sterling; but, with a view to [illegible] men without families—Robert Redpath, James Hunter, George Banks, Nicholas Bullen, Robert Ferguson, Robert Hyatt, Lieut. Jenkins, and Mr. Collier.

Lieut. Jenkins and a ship carpenter named Collier, who had just returned from Kingston with a trim sail boat, promptly undertook the task, and the passengers and their goods were placed on board the little vessel, which was heavily laden. As they approached the first island a storm arose, the vessel swamped, and the five passengers were immersed in the water amid floating trunks and a bundle of bedding. Jenkins could not swim and speedily sank. Collier was an excellent swimmer, but his pockets were loaded with shot. He struck out for the island, but becoming entangled in the rice, he too was drowned. Houston and his sons, with rare presence of mind, clung to their floating goods, which kept them afloat until the large boat arrived from the shore, and they were rescued.

John Mackintosh and his daughter Margaret perished by breaking through the ice in attempting to cross. His body was found during the following spring in Foley's Bay, and hers down at a point of land since called Margaret's Island.

Other similar accidents of a similar kind were not infrequent, so that the passage of the lake came to be regarded as highly dangerous. This, combined with the total absence of milling facilities, and the great labor and expense involved in getting supplies, cast a gloom of despondency over the young settlement. Many of the young men left the township to seek occupation elsewhere, and at the end of the third year the settlement had receded rather than advanced.

Even after the erection of Scott's Mills at "the Plains" (afterwards called Peterborough) the forest was so difficult of passage that many settlers of the south-eastern portion of the township found it to their advantage to carry their scanty store of grain some miles to Rice Lake, paddle it up to the mouth of the Otonabee River, and thence up its winding course to "the Plains," and after an indefinite delay return by the same route.

For many years the skins of hogs were made into moccasins, with the hairy side in, as a substitute for boots; and in the scarcity of tea, which was then a costly luxury, wild [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Train Caught by Landslide.

North Bay, Ont., April 20.—Two residents of the western section were injured on the Canadian Pacific Railway Toronto-Montreal branch, near Port Arthur, resulting in serious injury to two employees.

The first accident occurred late on Saturday afternoon. A freight train was passing through a deep cut when a landslide of rocks and earth engulfed the locomotive. The resulting train from North Bay was dispatched to the scene, and by some miraculous means crashed into the wreckage in the darkness, demolishing the big engine quite completely.

The car containing the wrecking crew was badly damaged, and the car foreman, J. E. Hughes, of North Bay, was seriously injured, while Bailey of the bridge and building department received injuries which are painful, but not considered serious. Both men were taken to Parry Sound Hospital.

Essex Will Know Fate To-day.

Port Huron, Mich., April 20.—When court adjourned Saturday in the trial of George Eaton, the Petrolea youth, who is accused of the murder of Thomas Major, a local watchman, the opposing attorneys were well along in their closing arguments. It is expected that Eaton's fate will be in the hands of the jury by to-night.

Rural Mail Delivery in Brant.

Brantford, April 20.—Announcement has been made here of the commencement of a rural mail delivery daily between Brantford, Mount Pleasant and Oakland.

Chatham Mishaps of a Day.

Chatham, April 20.—There were no less than seven serious accidents in Chatham on Saturday, mostly children injured at play. The child of Mr. and Mrs. Schofield fell down the steps and broke its leg; the 12-year-old son of Charles Smith was thrown from a horse and badly kicked; the daughter of Mr. Counsbear had her ankle severely sprained in getting over a picket fence; the son of Frank Sparks was struck on the temple with a baseball bat and is in serious condition; the son of Thomas Clark was run over by a bicycle seriously injuring his neck; Harold McDonald of the Gray factory had his hand badly lacerated in a joiner, and Mr. Pretty of the Chatham Business College sprained his ankle badly in a baseball practice.

Farm Hands Are Scarce.

Chatham, April 20.—Farm labor is scarce and hard to get at any price. Farm hands are asking as high as $35 and $40 a month and board and the farmers of Kent are fearing a late season with a dearth of help to aid them in getting their seed into the ground.

At the present time there is no legitimate excuse for any strong, healthy man being out of a job. Employers of labor are advertising broadcast for help and offering better wages than have ever been offered in this part of the province.

General reports from the County of Kent indicate that the wheat crop this year is almost an entire failure. Farmers are plowing up their wheat fields and putting in barley and other crops. Feed is still very scarce, and is causing much alarm in the country districts.

License Tangle in Harwick.

Chatham, April 20.—The East Kent license commissioners at a meeting held in this city on Saturday granted licenses to the Walker House and the Fullarton House in Harwick Township.

Judge Dowlin recently gave a decision after a recount to the effect that local option was defeated in this township last January, from which decision, it is understood, there will be an appeal by the temperance forces.

The commissioners, however, decided to leave it with the Provincial Secretary to say finally whether the licenses should be granted.

THE FUNERAL SHIP "MacKAY-BENNETT" WILL NOT ARRIVE AT HALIFAX UNTIL TO-MORROW---SPECIAL TRAINS CANCELLED

Cable Ship "Minia" Has Picked Up Fifteen Bodies But Crew Fear No More Will be Discovered.

RELATIVES AT HALIFAX

Special to The Examiner:

HALIFAX, N.S., APRIL 29.—The news this morning of the delay till to-morrow, in the arrival of the Morgue ship MacKay-Bennett, was a distinct disappointment to anxiety-stricken relatives, who are waiting here by the hundred for the arrival of the remains of loved ones. The White Star line has given out instructions that all money and jewellery found in the pockets of passengers will be handed to the Nova Scotia Probate Court for legal disposal. Several special trains ordered for to-day to carry away bodies of the wealthy dead have been cancelled. The cable ship Minia has wirelessed that she has recovered fifteen more bodies, but there no more will be recovered.

LAWRASON A VICTIM.

LONDON, ONT., APRIL 29.—Mrs. Jas. Arnott fears that Albert Lawrason, whose name appears among the wireless list of bodies found among the Titanic wreckage is her brother, who left home some years ago, and has not been heard of for some time. Lawrason was widely known, both in Canada and the United States as a professional horse trainer and was for some years in the Seagram stables at Waterloo.

HALIFAX, APRIL 29.—A wireless message says that the morgue ship McKay-Bennett is delayed by the weather, and will not enter port until 9 a.m. Tuesday.

LIVERPOOL, ENG., APRIL 29. — An order was issued by the Seamen's and Firemen's Union this morning that no ship would leave this port until the owners consented to pay the rates established by the Board of [illegible] per month to seamen, [illegible] $35.00 per month to firemen, with rations and lodging. The official of the Union said this would be rigidly adhered to. In future, too, firemen will refuse to work in the ships where non-unionists or Chinese are engaged. It looks like severe trouble with these men in every shipping point of Great Britain.

Reserve Fund Committee.

NEW YORK CITY, APRIL 29. — The Times states this moring from its Washington correspondent that several of Senator Alden Smith's colleagues on the Senate investigation into the Titanic disaster, are disgusted with Smith's illogical manner of conducting the enquiry and have handed in their resignations.

AVIATOR FATALLY INJURED

Special to The Examiner.

PARIS, APRIL 29.—Jules Vedrines, one of the most famous aviators of France, was fatally injured this morning when he fell with his monoplane at St. Denis, during a short trip around France. He was five hundred feet in the air and the machinary went wrong while he was gliding to a landing.

THE DEAD-LOCK ENDS THIS WEEK

Examiner Special:

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., APRIL 29.—The deadlock between the anthracite coal miner workers and the operators is expected to end with the close of the present week. While the details of the agreement have not been made public, it is known that the men have been granted 10 per cent. increase in wages in addition to other concessions.

BISHOP'S 23rd ANNIVERSARY

On Wednesday, May 1st, Bishop O'Connor Will Begin His 24th Year as a Bishop

TO BE IN OGDENSBURG, N.Y.

Wednesday, May 1st, is the 23rd anniversary of the elevation of His Lordship Bishop O'Connor, to the office of bishop, and it marks the beginning of his 24th year as bishop of Peterborough.

It has been His Lordship's custom to celebrate High Mass in Peterborough on each occasion, but on this occasion he will be in Ogdensburg, N.Y., assisting at the consecration of Bishop Conroy.

Bishop O'Connor has been enjoying good health, and has the pleasure of watching his diocese progress under his wise direction. He leaves to-morrow for Ogdensburg, and although he will not be here on his anniversary to receive the congratulations and good wishes of his friends, they will be with him in spirit.

THE DIRECTORS OF VILLIERS FACTORY

VILLIERS, APRIL 29.— The improvements to the cheese factory were entirely completed on Friday night, and cheese making will be begun on Thursday of this week, Mr. Montgomery being the cheese maker this year. The first organization meeting was held on Friday night when the following directors were appointed: Messrs. Frank Elmhurst, Thos. Shearer, Alex. Wood, Geo. Robertson, and Geo. A. Gillespie. Mr. Robertson was elected president, Mr. Alex. Wood, vice-president, and Mr. Shearer secretary-treasurer. Villiers factory is practically new and is modern in every respect. The patrons have been whole hearted in their efforts to make it worthy of the district and a good year is expected.

The many friends of Miss Annie Edmison, eldest daughter of Mr. George Edmison, will regret to learn of her death which took place at her sister's in Toronto, on Sunday morning. The body was removed to her home on Sunday evening and the funeral will take place from the family residence, 498 Rubidge street. Funeral private.

WIRELESS LOG OF "MOUNT TEMPLE" GIVES VIVID STORY OF DISASTER

Captain J. H. Moore's Evidence at the Senate Investigation Gives Complete Recital of the Wireless Messages That Filled the Air on the Night of the Tragedy.

WASHINGTON, APRIL 27.—Since the opening of the investigation into the Titanic disaster by the Senate subcommittee, no evidence produced has told more completely and concisely of the groping by wireless for aid to the sinking Titanic from other ships on the sea than the wireless log of the C.P.R. steamship Mount Temple, read this afternoon by the captain, James Henry Moore. The wireless log of the Mount Temple for Sunday evening from 10.25, when the first call for aid from the Titanic was received to 8.05 Monday morning, when all was over, gives an epitome of the terrible tragedy. The news of the disaster came to the Mount Temple in the following form, as shown by the wireless log:

"10.25— Titanic sending C. Q. D. 'Can't read you, old men, come at once, have struck iceberg. Inform captain.'

"10.25—Carpathia answers, 'Titanic says struck an iceberg. Come at once to our position.'

"10.40— Titanic still calling C.Q.D.

"10.42—Frankfort answers Titanic who asks, 'Are you coming to our assistance?'

"Frankfort asks what is the matter.

"Titanic answers, 'Have struck iceberg and sinking. Please tell captain to come.'

"Frankfort answers, 'O.K., will tell bridge right away.'

"Titanic says, 'Yes, come quick.'

"10.55 and 10.57 Titanic calling S. O.S.

"10.59—Titanic working Carpathia.

"11.00—Titanic calling C.Q.D.

"11.20—Titanic gets Olympic and says, 'Captain says get your boats ready. Ship going down by head.'

"11.25— Titanic calling C.Q.D. to Baltic.

"11.26—Frankfort says, 'Our captain will go for you.'

"11.41—Titanic says, 'C.Q.D., our engine rooms flooded.'

"11.43—Titanic tells Olympic sea calm.

"11.47—Titanic acknowledges receipt service message from Olympic.

"11.55—Frankfort and Birma calling. No reply.

"12.10— Olympic, Frankfort, and Baltic calling Titanic. No reply.

"12.25—Birma says she is fifty miles from Titanic.

"12.50—All quiet now.

"12.50—Titanic has not spoken since 11.47.

"1.35—Carpathia sends to Titanic: 'If you are there we are firing rockets.'

"1.40—Carpathia calling Titanic.

"1.58—Birma thinks she hears Titanic, and says: "We are only 50 miles off. Hope you are safe.'

"2.00—Carpathia calls Titanic.

"2.05—All quiet, we are stopped.

"2.55—Birma and Frankfort working.

"3.30—We back out of ice and cruise around.

"3.35—Californian calls. I advise him of Titanic and Titanic's position.

"4.00—Californian working Virginian.

"4.25—Californian working Birma.

"5.20—Signal from Californian. 'Wants my position. Send it. We are very close.'

"6.00—Much jamming (operators.)

"6.45—Carpathia reports twenty boat loads.

"7.10—More jamming.

"7.40—Baltic tells Californian to 'Stand off. You have been instructed to do so frequently.'

"7.40—Carpathia says, 'No use stand ing by. Nothing more can be done.'

"8.05—Carpathia and Olympic very busy."

Opening Of The Cheese Factories

The various cheese factories throughout this district are expected to commence operations this week. It is understood that the most of the factories are all ready for the opening, and that the first cheese of the season will soon be turned out. Cheese men are looking forward to a good year, and with improved plants almost everywhere, there is every reason to expect that in quantity and quality the cheese of 1912 will be above the average.

NEW SCHOOL AT PORT HOPE.

Port Hope has voted $52,000 for additions to her schools. $10,000 will be used for an extension to the High school and $42,000 for a new Public school. The pupils of the Public school greeted the result of the voting by giving three cheers for the ratepayers on the following day.

WILL CONSIDER JULY 1ST CELEBRATION

Probably the last meeting of the Canadian Club this season will be held on Friday night, when Mr. E. F. B. Johnston of Toronto, will address the club. The meeting should be well attended, not only because it is the last of the season, but because of the particular ability of Mr. Johnston as an entertaining and gifted speaker. Further information regarding the meeting will be given during the week. One of the subjects to be discussed is the proposal that the Canadian Clubs throughout the country make July 1st this year an occasion for the promotion of Canadianism and a spirit of patriotism. The proposal includes all the Canadian Clubs throughout the country, and on Friday night the local clubs will discuss the matter.

Thirteen-day-old Infant of Baby Farm is Horribly Mutilated by the Attack of Rodents

TO TAKE PROCEEDINGS

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, ONT., APRIL 29.—Proceedings will be taken by the Children's Aid Society, against Mrs. Geo. Haslett, an English woman who conducts a baby farm here, and at whose home a thirteen-day-old child, named Miller had half its nose and part of one ear eaten off by rats. The baby also had a big hole eaten in one cheek by the rodents, and Mrs. Haslett claims that she did not hear its screams. The child is at present in the Victoria Hospital and is in a serious condition.

A ROUND-UP OF ANARCHISTS

Special to The Examiner.

PARIS, APRIL 29.—The police are arranging for a general roundup of anarchists, as a result of the depredations of automobile bandits, two of whose fatalities were killed yesterday.

A Man With Piles Cannot Work

The depressing, unfortunate influence of piles seems to affect mind as well as body until the sufferer from this annoying ailment feels miserable and utterly cast down.

The itching, stinging sensations which accompany piles are bad enough. The search for cure, and thought of a surgical operation do not tend to cheer one up. Many get discouraged and allow their futures to be ruined by this wretched ailment.

It is so easy to relieve piles by the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment that it seems strange that anyone should neglect to give this treatment a thorough trial. If you could only read some of the letters from cured ones who had suffered ten, twenty or thirty years you would no longer doubt the effectiveness of Dr. Chase's Ointment in the relief and cure of piles.

OBITUARY

MRS. JANE PRESTON.

The many friends in Peterborough of Mrs. Jane Preston will regret to hear of her death, which occurred yesterday in Toronto.

The deceased lady was a resident of Peterborough for some years, but has lived in Toronto for the past five years. She is survived by two sons, namely, Joseph of 226 Reid street, Peterborough, and William of Smith, her husband having predeceased her some time.

The remains are expected to arrive in Peterborough to-morrow morning. Interment will take place in Lakefield on Wednesday afternoon.

SUSTAINED PAINFUL INJURIES

Mr. Daniel Rogers, of Norwood, Fell From Ladder in Finley's Mill

A passenger and immigrant train arriving from the East at 9.30 this morning brought to the city from Norwood Mr. Daniel Rogers, who was conveyed by Bellegham's ambulance to the Nicholl's Hospital, suffering from an injured hip and leg.

The injured person, it is understood, had by some means fallen from a ladder in Finley's Mill, Norwood. He was attended by Dr. Halliday, and it was discovered that he had sustained a broken leg and thigh.

Mr. Rogers has been a valued employee at Finley's Mill for some years.

THE WEATHER

The atmosphere still keeps chilly, and there has been as yet but little of the "balmy" conditions usually associated with spring weather. Yesterday morning the thermometer registered 25 degrees—or 7 degrees of frost. A cold wind has been blowing for some days, and until warmer conditions prevail there can be but little growth.—W. P.

CONVICTS' SENSATIONAL ESCAPE FROM KINGSTON

Quartette Who Made a Bold Attempt to Get Free at Toronto Beat Up Guards---Have Been Re-captured

Special to The Examiner:

KINGSTON ONT., APRIL 29. — Five incorrigibles in the prison of Isolation at the penitentiary, made a sensational escape at eleven o'clock this morning. Four of the five were captured within one hour. Included in the five were the four desperadoes who were recently brought down from Stoney Mountain penitentiary and who made a determined effort to get away at Toronto. They are Convicts Arthur Bonner, Frank Jones, George Brown and H. Kelley. The fifth man was Vincent McNeil, sentenced at Woodstock for theft. The quintette attacked Keeper Matjen, Guard Dann and Dr. Phelan, the penitentiary physician. They beat Dann pretty badly about the head. They then bound and gagged the three men and stripped them of their clothing, which three of the convicts put on. They raced across the prison yard for the south gate. Keeper Rutherford on the outside of the gate, looking through the observation hole, saw the two convicts approaching, but as they were protected by the [illegible] he thought everything was all right and opened the gate. The men rushed out, [illegible] the keeper over the head with a billy. The escaped male for the wardens grounds just across the way, with several officers in pursuit.

Brown, who was dressed in prison garb, was pursued by Mounted Scout Peiton and he surrendered when overtaken. Kelley was captured by Guard Clarke at Portsmouth and Bonner and McNeil were run down on the front road about a mile and a half from the penitentiary. It was necessary to fire on them and they jumped into the lake to avoid the bullets. Jones was captured at the outlook in a shot near the penitentiary, the whole six had been chased by Guard Driscoll, Frank McCool, [illegible]

HUNTER ST. FRACAS AIRED IN THIS MORNING'S POLICE COURT

The Arrest of Three Toughs Invite the Displeasure of the Mob Element Towards the Policemen.

STIFF SENTENCES

If a "roughneck" assaults a policeman, and abuses a policeman, abuse him, and harass the policeman, if possible. Some people deem it within their province to support the winning side, even at the expense of casting their lot with lawbreakers. Acting on this laudable (?) principle, about eight hundred people congregated at the corner of George and Hunter streets, at 7.30 Saturday evening to witness the arrest of a trio of toughs.

In the melee which followed the attempt of the policemen to arrest Edward Shimpton, Joseph Smith and Harry Bowerman, a couple of the officers were roughly handled. P. C. Brown received a nasty kick in the face, which made him the object of derision for a portion of the crowd. The appearance on the scene of assistance, in the form of a couple more policemen, and Detective Newhall took the steam out of the offenders, and after a few more sundry kicks at the officers, they only waited to arrest. The prisoners were followed to the station by the mob element, and, while proceeding down Water street, were stoned.

In the Police Court.

Particular interest centered around the trial of the prisoners at this morning's police court. A large crowd of "cullbirds" and "bench-hackers" filled into the court room at the opening of the suits. Magistrate Denne presided, and Crown Attorney Wood conducted the prosecution.

The case of Edward Shimpton, when evidence went to prove one the worst offenders, was first dealt with. The charge against him was that of unlawfully assaulting a police officer while the latter was discharging his duties.

The prisoner elected to be tried summarily, by the Magistrate, and pleaded not guilty.

P. C. Brown testified that while arresting Joseph Smith, on Hunter St., Saturday evening, the accused stepped up, and ordered him to desist. Witness received a blow in the face from Shimpton, and a struggle ensued, during which time Smith got away, but returned and kicked the officer in the face, while the latter was struggling with Shimpton, on the ground. Two young men stepped forward to assist the prisoners in the apprehension of Shimpton, but they were prevented from doing so by Henry Bowerman, the third participant in the fracas. P. C. Meagher appeared on the scene at this juncture, and Shimpton was being escorted to the station by the officers when Bowerman again stepped up and attempted to release the prisoner. Detective Newhall then came forward, and arrested Bowerman.

While Constables Brown and Meagher were proceeding down Water street with their prisoner, several stones were hurled at the officers, one striking P. C. Meagher on the back of the neck and the other found its mark on P. C. Brown.

Used His Fist.

Constable Meagher's evidence practically corroborated that of the previous witness. When he arrived on the scene P. C. Brown and the prisoner were struggling on the ground. The prisoner was very refractory and resisted arrest, using his feet and hands in a violent manner.

Detective Newhall's Evidence.

A "phone message summoned Detective Newhall to the scene of hostilities. While on his way to the station he met a small boy carrying P. C. Brown's helmet. Witness met Officers Meagher and Brown, on Hunter street, with the prisoner. The latter was struggling violently. Witness told the prisoner he had better go quietly. Witness described the manner in which the prisoner had used his feet on the officers. He defined it as "footwork," a method frequently employed by Jacques in the old country. Several people attempted to come forward and assist the officers, but they were prevented by the mob, who dragged them back into the crowd and assaulted them.

Witness arrested Bowerman and ran him into Mountain's fruit store, while both his hands were engaged handling Bowerman. The crowd were violently opposed to Smith and Bowerman, and forced in through the window in the front. A stout railway man seemed to be the ringleader and struck Smith, knocking him into the police. Smith recovered himself, and, assisted by Bowerman, struck [illegible] P. C. Brown, [illegible] between the shoulders. The accused [illegible]

Evidence for Defence.

The prisoner had no recollection of striking P. C. Brown. He was [illegible] at the C. O. F., and was a native of London, England. He denied having used the [illegible]

"Peterborough Prosperity Personified."

MONDAY, APRIL 22, 1912

A GREAT BANK MERGER.

The Toronto newspapers of Saturday announced that The Royal Bank of Canada and The Traders Bank of Canada, are to amalgamate. The Toronto News describes this as one of the greatest financial mergers in Canadian annals. This is demonstrated by the fact that the combined capital and rest of the amalgamated banks is in round numbers, 22 million dollars. Reference to an article on this page will give interesting information in regard to these two banks, and their relation in their combined form to the other great institutions of the Canadian system of chartered banks.

IS BRITAIN "WORN OUT?"

We are often told that Great Britain is worn out and decayed; that free trade has practically finished her. If trade and financial prosperity are signs of decadence, a few figures will show how close Great Britain is to the verge of the abyss of ruin—that she is not worn out, but is more than holding her own with the world.

In November last, it was estimated that Britain's total overseas trade would reach 5,750 millions of dollars. Its actual total was 6,187 millions, or practically $140 per head of the population, or $410 per head for the wage earners, including women, boys and girls. Here are the imports for 1911—given on terms of dollars, in round figures:

Imported in 1911.

Food, drink and tobacco	$1221,000,000
Raw materials	1240,000,000
Articles wholly or mainly manufactured	827,000,000
Miscellaneous and unclassified	12,000,000
	$3288,000,000

Exported in 1911.

Food, drink and tobacco	$ 215,000,000
Raw materials	260,000,000
Articles wholly or mainly manufactured	1353,000,000
Miscellaneous and unclassified	46,000,000
	$1785,000,000

It is to be noted that the total of the British imports includes freight and insurance, while most other countries record imports at invoice prices. The declaration of prices of goods going into Britain usually gives the full trade prices, because there are no duties to pay; but goods going from Britain to protectionist countries, are valued as low as possible to escape duties. If Great Britain added freight and insurance to its exports, the total would be 3,082 million dollars, instead of 2,765 millions as recorded. Taken as they appear, free on board only, exports of British manufactured goods last year averaged $40 per head of the population. The latest records for other countries show that the average for the three years, from 1905 to 1908, of exports, was, for France $15 per head; for Germany $17 per head; and for the United States, $7 per head. In other words, the exports of British manufactured goods per head of the population was equal to the exports of the class of goods of France, Germany and the United States combined. All these countries, it is to be noted, are strongly protectionist.

Taking into account the transactions in gold and silver, bullion, coin and precious stones, free trade, Great Britain received in merchandise, gold and silver, 675 million dollars more than it exported, wherewith to pay the earnings of her shipping and interest on investments abroad. In addition to all this, Great Britain is spending 50 million dollars a year on old age pensions; $30 million dollars a year on the navy, and during the past five years Great Britian has cleared off 200 million dollars of war debt, besides spending sundry millions extra for new purposes. Not a bad record for a worn-out country, and some tough material for digestion for those who cry out that Great Britain is dragging and going to the dogs. There is lot of life in the old Lion yet.

Traders' Bank And Royal Merger Combined Capital And Rest 22 Millions

One of the Greatest Mergers in History of Canadian Finance —Comparison of the Big Banks

Being the special statement by the shareholders of the two banks for the Commerce on the Royal Bank and prepared by the Toronto News Bureau, as an explanation of a meeting, will be consummated one of the greatest banking mergers in the financial annals of Canada. In the same issue it submits another striking proof of the advantage under a branch banking system of larger institutions in competition with smaller bank—with many illustrations.

Two years ago there were in Canada 30 chartered banks, showing a combined paid-up capital of $68,730,000. After the Royal-Traders amalgamation the number of banks will have been reduced to 26, but the combined paid up capital of all the chartered banks has nearly doubled, now standing at $131,700,000. The authorized capital is now $177,600,000 against $81,000,000 in 1908.

The consolidation is the third within little more than a year. The first was the absorption of the United Empire Bank by the Union, the head office of the latter being removed from Quebec to Winnipeg. Only a few weeks ago, the Eastern Township Bank, an old institution with its head office at Sherbrooke, Quebec, was amalgamated with the Canadian Bank of Commerce. As a result the paid-up capital of the latter is only $600,000 behind that of the Bank of Montreal.

HOW BIG BANKS COMPARE

The following table shows the authorized and paid-up capital and rest of five largest Canadian banks, s given in the return of March 30:

Bank of Commerce	$15,000,000	$15,267,270	$15,000,000	$30,267,270
Can'an Bank of Commerce	15,000,000	14,998,325	12,498,240	27,496,565
Royal Bank	10,000,000	7,456,000	5,456,175	12,912,150
Imperial Bank	10,000,000	6,000,000	6,000,000	12,000,000
Merchants	10,000,000	6,627,710	5,460,000	11,087,710

Three in First Division

The merger of the Traders with the Royal will make no change in the order of rank. The two banks stand at present as follows:

	Capital Paid-up.	Rest.	Combined Paid-up Capital and Rest.
Royal—	$7,681,280	$6,628,170	$15,813,156
Traders—	4,254,600	2,600,000	6,854,600
	$11,935,880	$10,021,170	$22,707,056

The most noticeable result of the merger will be that we will have three first division banks in Canada, the Bank of Montreal, Commerce and Royal. They will be in a class by themselves. So far as combined paid-up capital and rest are concerned, these three institutions will be far in the front of the Imperial, Merchants and the smaller fry which follow in order.

Shareholders Fare Well

The shareholders of the Traders Bank have every reason to congratulate themselves upon the terms obtained. Royal shares are now selling in the neighborhood of 230, while the merger price of Traders Bank Stock will be 180, an increase of 30 points over prices ruling a couple of weeks ago, and an advance of 35 points since the first of the year.

The holder of 100 Traders shares will be asked to deposit them and receive in exchange 75 shares of stock in the Royal Bank.

The profit of the transaction to the holder of 100 shares of Traders stock is shown by the following calculation:

Value of 75 shares Royal at 235	$17,625
Value of 100 shares Traders at 150	15,000
Profit in capital value of shares	$2,625
But the holder also gains in dividends:
Dividend on 75 shares Royal at 12 per cent.	$900
Dividend on 100 shares Traders at 8 per cent.	$800
Profit in annual dividends	$100

Back to 1869

On October 1, 1869, the bank statement was as follows:

Paid-up capital	$300,000
Reserve Fund	20,000
Notes in circulation	90,480
Deposits at call	167,965
Deposits at interest	116,760
Specie	319,599
Current loans	368,970
Total assets	729,163

From this humble beginning, and under the guidance of conservative financiers, the bank has made steady progress until it is now within hailing distance of the Bank of Montreal, which commenced business in 1817, and received a charter in 1822.

During the first 25 years of the bank's history, operations were confined almost entirely to the Maritime Provinces but the succeeding decade witnessed an almost phenomenal expansion, extending not only over all of Canada, but reaching into other lands.

First to Extend

The Royal was the firstCanadian bank to extend its interests to the West Indies, and the venture has proven a most happy and successful one. In 1903 the assets of the Banco de Oriente, of Santiago, were bought by the Royal, and in 1904 it acquired the Banco del Commercio of Havana, Cuba. This same year the bank acted as agent for the Cuban Government in distributing $33,000,000 among the Republic's army of liberation, and the following year it distributed $30,000,000 more.

In 1908 the headquarters of the bank were transferred from Halifax to Montreal.

In 1910 the Royal acquired 35 branches where it formerly was unrepresented, and 10 branches at points where it already had agencies, by the purchase of the Union Bank of Halifax.

Over 200 Branches

At present the bank has over 200 branches, distributed as follows: 31 in Ontario, 11 in Quebec, 16 in New Brunswick, 31 in Nova Scotia, 3 in Prince Edward Island, 4 in Manitoba, 12 in Saskatchewan, 9 in Alberta, 37 in British Columbia, 2 in Newfoundland, 1 each in Great Britain and the United States, and 24 in the West Indies. The Traders Bank has nearly 130 branches at favourable points throughout Canada, but has not the foreign interests which are such a valuable asset to the Royal. Its short history has been a successful and unsullied one.

The Traders has heretofore been the lowest priced bank stock quoted on the Toronto Exchange, but the negotiations have caused such a boom that Union now occupies the cellar position at 160.

The Directors

The directorates of the two banks are:

Royal—	Traders—
H. S. Holt, (President)	C. D. Warren, (President),
E. L. Pease,	Hon. J. R. Stratton

The Merchants Bank of Halifax, which name was changed to the Royal Bank of Canada by Act of Parliament in 1869, commenced operations as a chartered bank in the troubled days immediately following Confederation. In 1869 a co-partnership institution of the same name was reorganized as a joint stock company and a charter applied for and granted. The original authorized capital was $1,000,000 but at first only $500,000 was offered for subscription. Mr. T. C. Kinnear was the first President.—Toronto News.

SOME REMARKABLE CORRESPONDENCE.

(Brantford Expositor)

The Peterborough Examiner reproduces the correspondence which passed between Mr. A. H. Stratton, who was removed from the postmastership of Peterborough, and Premier Borden and the Postmaster-General. The removal occurred in October last on the ground of offensive partisanship, and Mr. Stratton met the charge with a demand for an investigation and a statement in the course of which he said:

As you are no doubt aware my brother was the candidate, but during the whole campaign I never visited a committee room, did not attend any public or private meetings of a political nature, nor did I canvass nor solicit a vote of any elector.

In a word, I had nothing whatever to do with the election one way or the other. I was not on the streets of Peterborough during election day.

No investigation was made despite insistent demands for one. Finally, on the 18th of the present month, the Postmaster-General wrote:

Your dismissal took place because Mr. Burnham, M.P., investigated the matter himself. Mr. Burnham, after looking into the matter carefully, reported to us facts and evidence, which, according to the policy laid down, and followed, justify your dismissal without an investigation. I therefore must ask you to consider the matter closed.

The letter from which the paragraph above quoted is taken is a most remarkable one. It states, in substance, that a secret inquiry was made by Mr. Burnham, the Conservative member, who had already filled the vacant postmastership, and with no opportunity for Mr. Stratton to meet his accusers, or to be heard in his own defence, and that his decapitation was justified.

Mr. Burnham was no man to select for the trial of such a case, he being directly interested in it, and under compulsion to justify an act for which the direct responsibility lay with him. If he had such evidence as it is claimed he had he could easily have presented it before some fairly impartial tribunal and thus placed himself and the government in a light before the country which it is now impossible they should occupy.

"MR. ANDREWS SCORES AGAIN.

He has just received from the painter's hand a newly-painted vehicle that is a distinct credit to Mr. W. J. Andrews, local carriage painter. Both the body work and the lettering are beautifully executed, and will go a long way towards sustaining the present enviable reputation of Mr. Andrews as a carriage painter.

THROUGH CHEMONG ICE.

Wm. Taylor Had a Narrow Escape From Drowning.

LAKEFIELD, APRIL 21.—A very narrow escape from being drowned happened to Mr. W. Taylor of Chemong, while dragging his canoe across a block of ice one day last week. The frail ice yielded under his feet which precipitated him into the water, upsetting his canoe at the same time. Had not Mr. S. Fawn made his timely appearance and rescued him from his perilous position Mr. Taylor would have certainly been drowned. He was in a very exhausted condition when Mr. Fawn arrived with his canoe.

"WHITE CAP" TRIO MADE SIX OUT OF EIGHT HITS

Beard, Schwartz and Trout Perform Brilliantly in a Game Against United States League Team.

ALL SHOWED CLASS

That some of Peterborough's Canadian League ball team are already in good shape is indicated by the fact that outfielders Jimmy Beard and Willie Schwartz and Catcher Trout played with a picked team of Reading professionals against the new Reading United States League team, last week, all three performing brilliantly. The trio of Peterborough "White Caps" bagged six out of the eight hits made by their team, Beard getting three singles, Trout a tripple and a single, and Schwartz a one-sacher.

A Reading exchange says:

Jimmie Beard, the veteran local player, was in charge of the professionals, and his men played a snappy game. The team was composed of a number of locals who will be scattered in various parts of the country. Beard led at the stick with three safeties. The veteran showed his old-time form and his friends in the stand predicted that he would easily make good in the Canadian League. Willie Schwartz and Irwin Trout who will go with Beard to Peterborough, showed that they are in good shape. All in all, the work of Beard's professionals made the Reading fans feel proud that all are home boys."

MANAGER TEMPLIN'S PRIZE LANDS CRACK SOUTH-PAW

Manager Templin is all smiles today and the reason is that he has at last landed the left-handed pitcher he has been after for the past six weeks. Twirler John Derr of Lane Cross's Haverhill Club of the New England Leaguers, a crack southpaw and a comer in every sense of the word. Templin has been on the trail of Derr ever since he took hold of the Peterborough club and has finally been successful, Derr having secured his release from Haverhill. Transportation is being wired to him, and he will likely leave for the north with the rest of the squad to-morrow night. Derr is an old battery mate of Catcher Frank Brode, of the Petes, and the two will work together with the White Caps. So confident is Manager Templin that Derr will be a sensation in the Canadian League that he exclaimed, "The battery for Peterborough in the opening game at Hamilton two weeks from to-morrow will be Derr and Brode."

NEWS FROM THE LEAGUE CIRCUIT

Ottawa Citizen:

"I am delighted with the prospects," said Manager Cook, just prior to his departure for Chatham, last evening. "We have three first-class catchers in Rowe, Hooper and Shortsleeve, and our outfield with Callahan, Weise and Burke should hold their own with any in the circuit. I have four candidates for first base and in Robertson, our third baseman, you will see a very promising youngster. I am doubtful about O'Brien at short and am now negotiating with Frank Shaughnessy for a sensational young man for that position. If we get this youngster, they watch for Ottawa right up in the first division from start to finish. Mind you I am not claiming the pennant for Ottawa, but we will be there or thereabouts." Cook may close a deal with Shaughnessy for the new infielder in a day or two. He is tickled with the strength of the Ottawa pitching staff on paper, but would like to pull Ted Ted Cathers up to Chatham for a few workouts. Officers of the Ottawas were amused by the denials in the Toronto papers that McCaffery had offered Cathers, McGinley and Corey to them. The Toronto president evidently has a good reason for wishing to keep it secret. Cook has been instructed to give every member of the Ottawa pitching staff a thorough trial and will retain only those who show positive class.

The following players are under contract to report at the Ottawa headquarters in Chatham Monday morning:

Catchers — Rowe, Hooper, Shortsleeve; pitchers — Draper, Herbert, Kubat, Warner, Gallino and Ecttercil; first baseman—Champagne, Hopewell, Orutchley; second baseman — Cook (manager and captain); short stop — O'Brien and another; third baseman — Robertson; outfielders — Weise, Burke, Callahan and Blake.

Ottawa Journal.— Although somewhat early to make any prophesies about the pennant race in the Canadian League, from the advance notices from each of the clubs, it looks like a close race all through. Berlin won in a canter last season and have a pretty good team this year. Whether they can repeat or not is a question that is now troubling the Berlin fans, the Berlin management and also the fans and the management in every other place on the circuit. A team which has won the pennant the last season must always be watched and Berlin will cart around a reputation wherever they go; something that may decide a couple of close games. London, with Frank Bowerman at the helm, should be strong, while both Knotty Lee in Hamilton and Manager Kane of Brantford may be depended upon to produce something. Then there is Old Folks Templin and his Peterborough bunch. They have signed up a brand new team and will take a lot of watching. St. Thomas and Guelph look to be the weak spots and Ottawa, London and Berlin look to be the pick for the first division with Peterborough and Hamilton as possibilities.

Dream Sticks

Manager Templin was sitting in the Oriental Saturday figuring on how he could keep within the $1200 salary limit with so many stars on his staff, when a bell boy rushed over and exclaimed, "If you want to take a boat-ride at Riverside Park will Pitcher Harry Scull?"

Just as President Fitzgerald of the Canadian League was polishing up the schedule, he received the following wire from Guelph: "Should Tom Needham, could Louie Cook?"

TO BE SHOWN AGAIN

The Titanic pictures at the Royal Theatre on Saturday, and secured for this city at a big expense, will be put on again during two days next week.

This film has been heavily censored by the Ontario Board of Censors. Mr. Armstrong, president of the Board, said recently:

"The only real with the Titanic on, which has been submitted, is a genuine one of the laying of her keel, the launching and Captain Smith on the bridge. Then there is the arrival of the Carpathia at New York, showing the survivors embarking and meeting their friends.

This is the only real film of the Titanic and of the arrival of the Carpathia with the survivors.

THE ROYAL THEATRE.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES

To-night in the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium, the Brownies and the Nemos of the City Basketball League, will play the first of a series of games to decide the Intermediate city championship. Both teams are playing fast ball and one of the prettiest games of the season should result. The game will be called at 8.00 p.m.

The senior Leaders' Corps will meet on Thursday of this week, instead of Wednesday, as previously announced.

The Junior and Intermediate Leaders will meet at the building on Wednesday evening at 7.45 sharp. Every member is requested to be present.

There will be a meeting of the Y. M. C. A. Tennis Club on Wednesday evening at 8.15, when the election of officers and other important business will be transacted.

People who make mistakes are those who quarrel with one another before their children; or who allow the latter to grow up in ignorance those who talk about their troubles before strangers; the father who tells his children to go the way he does not go himself, and the young woman who does not make a confidant of her mother.

Health Declines When Kidneys Fail

After experimenting for nearly 20 years Dr. Hamilton discovered an absolute specific for weak kidneys. His pills of mandrake and butternut cure permanently.

Can you afford to delay? No, your interest compels you to use this certain sure now—to-day. Only take Dr. Hamilton's Pills, and an absolute recovery is guaranteed. In thousands of cases relief has been instantaneous. Such was the experience of James G. Gordon of Marysville.

TWENTY YEARS A SUFFERER.

"My kidneys bothered me for twenty years—I had gnawing pains in the back and my limbs ached with weariness all the time. My digestion was poor, and I had specks before my eyes.

"Dr. Hamilton's Pills helped me from the first day. Relief was immediate. They restored me, and my health's better than ever."

Hamilton's Pills Cured

All complaints traceable to kidney disease are prevented by Dr. Hamilton's Pills. Their use removes you against Diabetes, Bright's Disease and liver trouble. No home should be without such a valuable medicine. Sold everywhere by druggists, 25c per box, or five for $1.00.

NEWS FROM THE LEAGUE CIRCUIT

Ottawa Citizen:

"I am delighted with the prospects," said Manager Cook, just prior to his departure for Chatham, last evening. "We have three first-class catchers in Howe, Hooper and Shortsleeve, and our outfield with Callahan, Weise and Burke should lead their league. Of course, I am still doubtful about O'Brien at short and am now negotiating with Frank Shaughnessy for a sensational voting man for that position. If we get this youngster, then watch for Ottawa right up in the first division from start to finish. Mind you I am not claiming the pennant for Ottawa, but we will be there or thereabouts." Cook may close a deal with Shaughnessy for the new infielder in a day or two. He is tickled with the strength of the Ottawa pitching staff on paper, but would like to pull Ted Ted Cathers up to Chatham for a few workouts. Officers of the Ottawas were amused by the denials in the Toronto papers that McCaffery had offered Cathers, McGinley and Corey to them. The Toronto president evidently has a good reason for wishing to keep it secret. Cook has been instructed to give every member of the Ottawa pitching staff a thorough trial and will retain only those who show positive class.

The following players are under contract to report at the Ottawa headquarters in Chatham Monday morning:

Catchers — Howe, Hooper, Shortsleeve; pitchers — Draper, Herbert, Kubat, Warner, Gallino, and Bottero; first basemen—Champagne, Hopewell, Crutchley; second basemen — Cook (manager and captain); shortstop — O'Brien; third baseman — Robertson; outfielders — Weise, Burke, Callahan and Blake.

Ottawa Journal.— Although somewhat early to make any prophesies about the pennant race in the Canadian League, from the advance notices from each of the clubs, it looks like a close race all through. Berlin won in a canter last season and have a pretty good team this year. Whether they can repeat or not is a question that is now troubling the Berlin fans, the Berlin management and also the fans and the management in every other place on the circuit. A team which has won the pennant the last season must always be watched and Berlin will cart around a reputation wherever they go; something that may decide a couple of close games. London, with Frank Bowerman at the helm, should be strong, while both Knotty Lee in Hamilton and Manager Kane of Brantford may be depended upon to produce something. Then there is Old Folks Templin and his Peterborough bunch. They have signed up a brand new team and will take a lot of watching. St. Thomas and Guelph look to be the weak spots and Ottawa, London and Berlin look to be the pick for the first division with Peterborough and Hamilton as possibilities.

Dream Sticks

Manager Templin was sitting in the Oriental Saturday figuring on how he could keep within the $1200 salary limit with so many stars on his staff, when a bell boy rushed over and exclaimed, "If you want to take a boat-ride at Riverside Park will Pitcher Harry Scull?"

Just as President Fitzgerald of the Canadian League was polishing up the schedule, he received the following wire from Guelph: "Should Tom Needham, could Louis Cook?"

TO BE SHOWN AGAIN

The Titanic pictures at the Royal Theatre on Saturday, and secured for this city at a big expense, will be put on again during two days next week.

This film has been been passed by the Ontario Board of Censors. Mr. Armstrong, president of the Board, said recently:

"The only real with the Titanic on, which has been submitted, is a genuine one of the laying of her keel, the launching and Captain Smith on the bridge. Then there is the arrival of the Carpathia at New York, showing the survivors embarking and meeting their friends."

This is the only real film of the Titanic and of the arrival of the Carpathia with the survivors.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES

To-night in the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium, the Browning and the Nemos of the City Basketball League, will play the first of a series of games to decide the Intermediate city championship. Both teams are playing fast ball and one of the prettiest games of the season should result. The game will be called at 8.00 p.m.

The senior Leaders Corps will meet on Thursday of this week, instead of Wednesday, as previously announced.

The Junior and Intermediate Leaders will meet at the building on Wednesday evening at 7.45 sharp. Every member is requested to be present.

There will be a meeting of the Y. M. C. A. Tennis Club on Wednesday evening at 8.15, when the election of officers and other important business will be transacted.

People who make mistakes are those who quarrel with one another before their children; or who allow the latter to grow up in idleness; those who talk about their troubles before strangers; the father who tells his children to go the way he does not go himself, and the young woman who does not make a confidant of her mother.

Health Declines When Kidneys Fail

After experimenting for nearly 20 years Dr. Hamilton discovered an absolute specific for weak kidneys. His pills of mandrake and buttermut cure permanently.

Can you afford to delay? No, your interest compels you to use this certain cure now—to-day. Only take Dr. Hamilton's Pills, and an absolute recovery is guaranteed. In thousands of cases relief has been demonstrated. Such was the experience of James G Gordon of Marysville.

TWENTY YEARS A SUFFERER.

"My kidneys bothered me for twenty years. I had groaning pains in the back and my limbs ached with weariness all the time. My digestion was poor, and I had specks before my eyes.

"Dr Hamilton's Pills helped me from the first day. Relief was immediate. They restored me, and my health's better than ever."

Hamilton's Pills Cured

All complaints kindred to kidney disease are prevented by Dr. Hamilton's Pills. Their use insures you against Diabetes, Bright's Disease, and liver trouble. No house should be without such a valuable medicine. Sold everywhere by druggists, 25c per box, or five for $1.00.

Change for Old Smokers

A limited quantity of McDonalds chewing tobacco that has become hard, but is good and fit for smoking will be sold 3 plugs for 25c while they last.

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS' RALLY WAS LARGELY ATTENDED

A representative gathering of Sunday school workers of the city assembled in Knox church yesterday afternoon. The occasion was the annual convention of the Sunday School Association of Peterborough. The meeting, which was held at the conclusion of the regular Sunday school session, took the form of a workers' rally.

Rev. E. W. Halpenny addressed the gathering, taking for his subject, "The Thought of Nurture Element in the Session programme of the Sunday School." He also made reference to the art of cultivating courtesy in the developing youth. This is an art which should not be taught in proportion as we forget it, on stated occasions, but should receive the careful consideration of parents and Sunday school workers all the time.

In his address, Rev. Mr. Halpenny emphasized the need of nurture element in the session programme of the Sunday school. "There are five fundamental principles which tend to complete life, from the point of righteousness," said the speaker. The first of these, which is the corner stone, is the appreciation of God and the second is the gratitude of God. Nobody can appreciate the value of these characteristics unless they respond to God's laws. Without true expression of praise to God, we are not reverent, and we cannot be reverent at command.

The third principle is confidence of God, whether in the heart of Africa or in the holy sanctum. When in the latter place we are always more or less conscious of the divine atmosphere, but when in places like the former, our lives are more often barren of the true spirit of righteousness. This is mainly through want of confidence in God.

The appreciation of man is the fourth fundamental principle spoken of. This is one of the hardest things to get. Human nature tends the other way. That is, to make use of man towards slavery and bondage.

The last of these characteristics is co-operation with God and man. That is known as benevolence. These five important phases in our lives, constitute five ideal principles of life, and in proportion, as we have these, we are close to the ideal.

Two Avenues.

There are also two avenues that pertain to the moral and spiritual development of the Sunday school pupil. One of these is the admonition of the Lord. Children go to the everyday Public schools, and from the time they enter the doors until they are dismissed, they are held in a state of subjection. It is impossible to estimate the value to the national life, of this by-product of the Public school.

"If I were given the privilege of becoming a Sunday school teacher or a superintendent," said Mr. Halpenny, "I would accept the latter mainly for the distinct opportunities which are offered in the teaching of the nurture process to the Sunday school as a body." There are Sunday schools in operation to-day, that would be better disbanded. Their principle product is disregard fr the Lord. They do not tend to instill by atmopheric pressure, that which will create a conscious, righteous, respect for the hallowness of the Sunday school hour.

The Preliminaries.

The second avenue is worship. Worship is the expression of gratitude towards God. Many school workers overlook the value of worship in the opening exercises of the hour. Many of them think that it is alright if they get there in time for the lesson. The singing of suitable hymns, followed by appropriate prayers, are points that should receive careful attention. A class of boys should not be compelled to sing a hymn, adapted for a kindergarten class. They will recoil at the idea and will lose interest, with the consequent loss of revenue which would otherwise mark the occasion. This is one of the principles lying back of the clamour for separate primary classes. The first half of the lesson should be made as full of expression as possible and should be infused with a prayerful atmosphere. This is one of the phases of nurture element which should, and must be developed if we expect to hold our own in the evolution of the 20th century Sunday school.

"Collection has no place within the walls of God's house of worship," continued the speaker. "The idea of stopping a religious service to take fees is not justified. The term, offering, is more to be commended than the secular term of collection."

"Pay strict attention to the preliminaries, and to the closing exercises, place them alongside of the lesson. Cultivate a feeling of reverence, using as a means, the five principles which I have outlined," concluded the speaker.

"MOSES" THE SUBJECT OF A MOST INTERESTING SERMON

Rev. Jas. Hallen Preached His Last of His Series on an "Old Testament Transcription" at St. Andrew's Last Night.

A SPLENDID ADDRESS

In St. Andrew's church last evening, the minister, Rev. James Hallen, preached the last of a series of three sermons on an "Old Testament Transcription," dealing with the character of Moses. Rev. Mr. Hallen said he had set to find out how Moses became the man of God he was; and proceeded to follow him through the schools of knowledge, decision, sympathy and humility.

The enslaved race was so preoccupied with toil that there was no leisure for the development of the mind or the dream of emancipation. But cruelty overleaped itself, as it so often does, and the very means which were intended to rivet the chains of the enslaved race for ever, produced the man who was to break them asunder. It was the decree that the male children of the Hebrews should be destroyed at birth, which brought Moses into the Palace of Pharoah and gave him the advantages of the schools and universities of Egypt. There he acquired many of the weapons, by the use of which he was able to cut his people out of the house of bondage.

Mr. Hollins led up to the moment of decision, by picturing the influences of his Hebrew nurse upon him—the friendship that continued between them—the way in which she filled his imagination with pictures of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob and Joseph. How, little by little, she poured into his ears the faith and hope and passion of her own soul. How the thoughts of Abraham passed through her mind and his until the glory of Memphis and all Egypt was dimmed by the greater glory that would be revealed when God came to deal with Israel. The moment arrived and struck. Then the splendid hero of the Red Sea with Pharaoh dead at his feet, greater than would be found on West Point or Annapolis, or Sandhurst, or Woolwich, or Kingston, or Toronto, or Montreal, or Ottawa, or Peterborough, or Lindsay, or Port Hope, or Cobourg, or Belleville, or Brockville

Perfect-fitting Corsets

Are Absolutely Necessary to the Attractiveness of the New Costume

NO ARTICLE OF FEMININE APPAREL requires more careful selection than does the Corset—it is the first and foremost consideration in the preparation of the feminine wardrobe. Not only must the corset fit perfectly and lend style and gracefulness, but it must also give comfort and service to the wearer.

The Corsets shown by the "Cressman Store" conform to the natural lines of the figure, giving comfort, ease and gracefulness of movement, and imparts that elegant, beautifully gowned appearance which is the envy of every woman who prides herself on her neat, personal attractiveness.

Here are assembled the best Corsets produced by the foremost Canadian and American makers. We specialize on "D. and A.", "American Lady" and "Nemo Form-Reducing" Corsets. This extensive variety contains a style to suit every figure.

Choose your Corsets where you have the greatest variety from which to select—thereby insuring perfect satisfaction.

Among others worthy of particular attention are :—

The Nemo Form-Reducing Corsets

Equipped with the self-reducing front which reduces and supports the abdomen, while the broad bands of Lastikops Webbing at the bottom of the long skirt produce the fashionable slender-hip effect, and turn the corset-edge inward, so that the ends of the bones and steels do not show through even the thinnest dress. Your gown fits closely and smoothly when you are standing, and when you sit down the semi-elast c hip-confining bands of Lastikops Webbing expand enough to give you complete ease—and the corset doesn't "ride up." These are the greatest figure-reducing corsets procurable at $4.25 and..... ..... $3.75

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

[illegible] point of view strike you as unreasonable?

The lady certainly did make some rather sweeping statements, but I think there is a good deal in her point of view, nevertheless.

Some of us have the habit of accepting favours with a serene sense of having gotten something for nothing. But one never gets something for nothing, even from one's friends. If you have done some favour for your friend, don't you feel at liberty to call upon him when you are in need of his particular kind of talent or ability, or anything else which he has? Well, then, don't forget that he will feel the same towards you in reversed circumstances.

I do not think it is necessary to go so far as to refuse to ever put one's self under obligation. That would be to nullify the interchange of talents and opportunities, which is one of the legitimate uses of friendship. But don't think you are getting something for nothing when you allow yourself to be put under obligation. Remember that you are really giving your note and be sure you are willing to honour that note before your give it.

PRESENTATION MADE TO MR. WALTER DAVIDSON

Is Honoured by the Peterboro' Club Which Expresses Regret at His Departure From the City, and is Presented With a Hand Bag Containing a Sum of Money in Gold

On Saturday evening a large number of members of the Peterborough Club met to do honour to Mr. W. S. Davidson of the firm of Hall, Medd, and Davidson, who is removing from Peterborough, on Wednesday, to enter into partnership with a legal firm at Calgary, Mr. E. G. Patterson occupied the chair and read an appropriate address, saying a whole lot of nice things of Mr. Davidson, expressing the sorrow of the Club at his leaving Peterborough, and wishing him all happiness and prosperity, in his new home. After Mr. Patterson presented the address, on behalf of the club, Mr. W. McIlroy presented Mr. Davidson with a Morroco leather handbag, which contained a considerable sum in gold.

Mr. Davidson thanked the members of the club for their kind words and for the bag and purse. The former he would keep as a kind remembrance of the Peterborough club—the gold he would not make any definite promise about, but would use it to the best possible advantage. He regretted leaving Peterborough and temporarily severing the ties in business and social ways and would always look back to his early days in Peterborough with pleasure. He hoped to better his position in the west. He thought the Canadian west was a young man's country. He thanked the members of the club for their good will as expressed in the kind words of the address and by the presentation which he accepted as a token of their esteem.

His Honour Judge Hayche spoke very flatteringly of his associations with Mr. Davidson, since he came to Peterborough. He had found him genial to meet and prompt in his professional work. He joined with the other members of the club in wishing Mr. Davidson a full realisation of his hopes in the West.

Hon. J. R. Stratton, Mr. L. M. Hayes, Mr. D. O'Connell, Mr. S. T. Medd, Mr. Jas. Kendry, Mr. B. W. Travers, of the Bank of Montreal, and Mr. F. D. Kerr, all spoke in the highest terms of praise of the guest of the evening. Mr. Davidson had been one of the liveliest and most energetic spirits among the club's members. He had always taken an enthusiastic interest in the sporting events of Peterborough. He had also taken an interest in the welfare of the city, and in advancing its best interests. In the removal of Mr. Davidson from Peterborough, the city was losing a citizen that had a bright and prosperous future before him.

After the addresses, Mr. McIlroy, Mr. Denham, Mr. Crane and other members of the Club entertained the members with music and song.

Mr. Davidson's leaving Peterborough will be generally regretted and it is felt that his place will be difficult to fill.

Ninety-Third Anniversary Of The Independent Order Of Oddfellows

Celebrated Last Evening When the Members of the Society Marched in a Body to George Street Methodist Church --Sermon by Rev. Isaac Couch.

In commemoration of the 93rd anniversary of their Order, in accordance with the proclamation of the Grand Master, all Oddfellows of the City of Peterborough and district assembled in the Oddfellows' Hall, Hunter street, last evening, at 6.15 p.m., and marshalled by Col. Miller, marched in procession to George St. Methodist church, where they attended divine service. The music and hymns were suitable to the occasion, and an appropriate sermon was delivered by the Rev. Isaac Couch who said in part:

It is not necessary on this occasion and in this day to dwell upon the good work done by you. Any Minister who travels knows that. You are doing a good work and are teaching us to depend upon each other. The rich need the poor and the poor need the rich; the strong need the weak, and the weak need the strong. When we see such a vast body as this here to-night, how it touches us our dependence one upon another.

Let me say that there are times when there is heroism in your order just as great as that of soldiers who go into fight, and that shall be our theme to-night—"Heroism".

Nebuchadnezzar, the king, erected an image of gold on the plain of Bate. Then he invited all the people to come to the dedication of this image. In this multitude there were three Jewish boys, who had already given proof of their faithfulness to Almighty God. They had everything to lose, even life itself. It is a moment of great excitement. The multitude are looking on and looking for the apostacy of these young men. The temptation is most seductive but they said "their God would deliver them, and if not they would not worship the image". "If not!" What mean these words? They mean faithfulness unto death. Were it not for such heroism in the past this world would still be steeped in sin and misery. Even the weakest Christian ought not to swerve one iota from fearlessness in religion because in the past, even without religion, people would have what was right. The sailor hears the cry "man overboard." He leaps without hesitation into the water and saves his man. When he is aked "Was he ready to die when he leaped?" he would say: "Would I have been any more ready to die if I had not done my duty?" Now, if for an eternal rest the thief, the drunken and the immoral man will deny himself, then I ask, why have we (the Christian church) so many cowards? It is because we have no faith in Christ. If we realized how eternal truth is, how divine duty is, we should never think of any deviation from the right path.

Now, dear people, heroism is required, and it sees to me that in this chapter there is a lesson for us, namely that in this world there are two camps. First, the camp of conventional saloonkeepers and then the camp of saints and soldiers. Will you have a good time, from a worldly point of view, or will you choose the right. Be faithful unto death and He will give you a crown of life.

The members of the Golden Link Rebekah Lodge, No. 33, also attended in a body.

FELL IN A FAINT

Mrs. Edwin Martin, Arnott's Cliff, Que., writes: "Before using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I was in a terrible condition. Every night I would sweat over me and I could fall in the least. I could not sleep without fainting. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has done me more good than anything I ever took and do my housework. What I say is true and it will cure any woman who suffers as I did."

RAILWAY NOTES

Reports for January, as to rolling stock ordered and received by the Grand Trunk Railway, show that four locomotives, Nos. 1709-1712, which were ordered on August 31st, 1911, from the Lima Locomotive and Machine Company, have been received. These are type 20 x 28 switch engines. Sixty-eight box cars have also been delivered by the Canadian Car and Foundry Company.

The following orders have been placed: 250 refrigerator cars from the Canadian Car and Foundry Company and 250 from the American Car and Foundry Company. 250 automobile cars have been ordered from the last named firm and an equal number from the Western Steel Car and Foundry Company.

Mr. F. W. Berryman, the manager of the Grand Trunk Pacific's Chateau Laurier at Ottawa, is now in possession from the second to the eighth floor of the building and is busy superintending the work of carpeting and papering. The decorations on the lower floors are also well advanced, and, as the furniture is ready and waiting to be installed, it is expected that the hotel will be ready for the reception of guests early in May and that the summer tourist business will therefore be well taken care of at the Capital.

An agreement has been completed by the Prince Rupert Hydro-Electric Company with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific Development Company for the erection of its transmission lines from the site of the Power plant at Kitsalo River, over the rights of way and lands of the two companies to the town of Prince Rupert and to Porpoise Island where most of the new industries are about to be established. The Hydro-Electric Company is also negotiating with the G.T.P. for the supply of all the power which the railway will require for its terminals, and machine and repair shops, docks, and wharves.

One of the finest specimens of totem pole ever brought down from the North is that which Capt. C. H. Nicholson, manager of the G.T.P.'s steamship service, has secured for the Fort Garry, the Grand Trunk Pacific hotel at Winnipeg. This pole has been brought down from Victoria, where it was originally carved, and is now [illegible] Vancouver. The pole, which is about 60 feet long, was presented by the Haida Indians of Graham Island, and is about three chiefs (three generations) old, or about 200 years, judged by the way in which these old Chiefs cling to the land of the living. While the log in which the queer images of the Indians are cut shows signs of great age, it is in a fair state of preservation and will probably be the first totem pole in Winnipeg. It will stand in front of the hotel grounds on Broadway and should appeal to the traveller's instinctive desire to visit a country endowed with such picturesque environment.

The Flowering Of The Hepatica

All the woodland path is broken
By warm tints along the way,
And the low and sunny slope
Is alive with sudden hope,
When there comes the silent token
Of an April day—
Blue hepatica!

One of the first flowers of the year, the hepatica, is blooming again, a symbol of hope and of trust in unfailing Nature. Gently and unobserved, it has found a rent in the brown shroud of last year's leaves, unfolding its pale flowery beauty in the long silent woods. The early spring is reminiful of the dead yesteryear. The trees are gray and bare, and the withered, lifeless leaves are but a memory of another summer. True, the award has a new verdure, the little brook is noisy in its flood, and a few of the birds break the quiet of the woods, but the Spring has not burst into its full glory.

And then you notice the wistful, little hepatica, with its pale white petals softly tinted with touches of delicate blue and pink. There it peeps between the cased leaves. It appears meek and modest, as if fearing the uncertain weather of the Spring, and yet conscious of the protection with which Nature has provided it. There is a little touch of the feminine in the hepatica. Its daintiness, its purity, and the suggestion of dependence it creates are attributes of femininity.

The small boy rudely plucks a handful of these little gems of the new life in the woods, and they fade and die on his coat lapel, with no one to suggest the symbolism that may surround them. A lesson may be taught the youthful mind, that the useless despoiling of the woods is criminal, and this touch of respect for the chaste purity of flowers may influence his life in the world of humanity.

One impulse from a vernal wood
May teach you more of man,
Of moral evil and of good,
Than all the sages can.

Death Of Mr. Robert Scott

[illegible]

The late Mr. Scott is survived by his widow and two sons, Thomas of Saskatchewan and W. H. Smith. He also leaves to mourn his loss four daughters, Mrs. Russell Shenton and Miss Annie Smith of Saskatchewan, and the Misses Ging and Lillian at home, and four brothers, George of Hamilton, Manitoba, Dr. W. D. Scott, of Bracebridge, John of Souris, Manitoba, and Alexander of Smith. Four sisters also survive, namely, Mrs. Robert Newton, Brandon, Man., Mrs. Robert Moffitt, Elgin, Man., Mrs. Percy Edmison, Smith and Miss Sarah at home. The deceased was a member, deacon and active worker of the Gilmour Memorial church, Communication Road.

The funeral will take place from the family residence, lot 8, concession 6, Smith, on Wednesday, at 2 o'clock, to the Little Lake cemetery. This is the sixth dead in the family in 6 years. Mrs. Scott, mother of the deceased, having died six years ago, and four other members of the family having passed away since.

The family have many friends who will deeply sympathize with them in their bereavement.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

LEAH KLESCHNA

Although the attendance at the Opera House on Saturday night was not such a large one as it merited, the great psychological play, "Leah Kleschna" was greatly appreciated by those who were present. The piece is in places deeply emotional and at times intensely exciting. The latter applied in a great degree to the burgling scene in Act. 2, in which Leah, acting for her thieving father, works at a safe in the silent darkness for fully five minutes. At the expiration of this period of suspense the victim appears and then ensues a period of drama.

Miss Marie Leonhard in a manner delightful in its charm and grace, made a splendid "Leah Kleschna" and was repeatedly recalled at the end of the performance. Mr. Hamilton Deane who acts with admirable reserve, performed the role of Paul Sylvaine as only an actor of his calibre can. As Kleschna the thief, Mr. Stanley Bedwell was splendid, and Mr. Graham Pockett, his accomplice, is a very clever actor in such a role. All the other artistes performed their respective roles in a manner deserving a first-class company.

MIGHT BE A LESSON.

Port Hope gives her drunks two months in gaol, with hard labour. If the man who was hopelessly drunk on Hunter street, Saturday morning, and who was carried to the stables, on Charlotte street, after lying on the sidewalk for several minutes, was given a few months he might have time to consider his disgraceful condition.

Chi-Namel
The New Ready-to-Use Graining Process

We have passed the age of paint for interior decoration, and have learned to appreciate the beauties of natural wood.

Chi-Namel Gives The New Hardwood Effect In Either Gloss or Dull Mission Finish

To the many owners of homes in which the doors, casings, and other woodwork are either painted or poorly varnished, and in which the floors are of soft wood designed to be covered with Carpets, the Ready-to-Use Graining Process, which anyone can use, makes possible the up-to-date hardwood effect at a low cost of only 2½c per square foot of surface. The use of this Graining Process is equally practical for furniture, tables, book cases, chairs, etc.

We are demonstrating this Process this week and solicit a call from you to see for yourself how it is done.

Makes His Appendicitis.

Toronto, April 30.—Hon. J. P. Mabee, chairman of the Dominion Railway Board, is ill in St. Michael's Hospital with appendicitis. Mr. Mabee was taken ill after the sitting of the board yesterday, and his physician, Dr. [illegible] was summoned. He was immediately removed to the hospital and his physician reports that he will be unable to sit on the board for some time. It is understood that his condition is not critical, and it is uncertain as to whether an operation will be necessary.

Shot Wife and Himself.

New York, April 30.—Mrs. Pauline de Brahme was found dead by the police yesterday in the bathroom of her apartments on West 35th street, her body unclothed and partially covered with sawdust and old rags, and several bullet wounds in her head and body.

In the closet of an adjoining room they found the body of her husband. It was still warm. There was a bullet wound in his temple, and in his lap lay an automatic revolver.

Work on New C.P.R. Line.

Belleville, April 30.—Construction work on the new line of the C.P.R. will be commenced just west of this city on Wednesday, and the two gangs will work eastward and westward. It is expected that the C.P.R. will have the right of way over the C.N.R., and then through this city.

LAST OF THE JAIL-BREAKERS HAVE BEEN RE-CAPTURED

Vincent McNeil, Who Hails from Detroit, Frees the Four Who Tried to Get Away from Toronto—Guard is Badly Injured.

Kingston, April 30.—The last of the five prisoners who escaped from the penitentiary yesterday was caught shortly after one o'clock, in a shed on the Riverbourne property, half a mile away. It was found that he was in prison garb. He put up quite a fight when the guards came upon him, but it was a case of ten to one.

The five prisoners in breaking the fence from the west who made a desperate effort to escape at Toronto not long ago have been confined in the isolation ward, and one of them, who was allowed out in front of his cell to sweep the floor, overpowered Keeper Madden and Guard Hess, severely injuring the latter. Dr. Phelan, the penitentiary surgeon, was also attacked, and with Madden, was stripped of his clothing, and afterwards locked in a cell.

Taking the keys away from the officers, the one prisoner then set the other four free. They then raced to the north gate, where Gatekeeper Rutherford, seeing the officer, as he supposed, opened the gate and was promptly knocked on the head, and pushed aside.

Then it was an easy matter for the men to get into the open. The men ran to the Warden's grounds, where they knocked Keeper McCarthy, who tried to intercept them, over the head.

They then ran in the direction of the prison quarry, where Brown was overpowered by a mounted guard, sent out with a rifle. He surrendered, and was turned over to the quarry gang, and returned to the prison.

Another of the prisoners, Kelley, was caught by Watchman Clark in Portsmouth, with the assistance of another officer. Two of the others were caught at Cataraqui Creek, on the front road, after endeavoring to elude and escape five officers by jumping into the water and ducking their heads under the water when shots were fired. After a time they surrendered, and were returned to the penitentiary.

The other convict, Frank Jones, in uniform, was caught about 1.15 p.m., sitting in a shed in Portsmouth. A little girl found him there, and notified the authorities. He said he was a guard from the penitentiary, and that he was looking for the man who had escaped. He was spotted into a rig, and was soon back at the penitentiary. All of them will be charged with escaping from the penitentiary.

The fifth man of the party was Vincent McNeil, sentenced six months ago to five years for burglary. He hails from Detroit.

Guard Davis was quite seriously hurt of the officials attached. He is in the General Hospital, but will recover. The rest are all at their homes, nursing sore heads.

It was announced on Saturday that a thorough investigation was to be made by the Government into the work of the penitentiary officials in the second daring escape inside a short time. Charteris, an insane convict, escaped last month, and also investigation over that has not been completed yet.

The western convicts who made the break for liberty are well remembered, for on March 18 they figured in a sensational attempt to get away at the Union station, Toronto, just after the train began to move on the way to Kingston. Their sudden attack on the guards was unsuccessful only because Toronto police were able to catch the moving coach and get into the fight in time. The Mercer brothers (otherwise Jones and Kelly), were sentenced at Whitby for highway robbery and shooting a policeman. Their companions, Bonnar and Brown, are also under long sentence for crimes of violence.

Explosion In Maternity Hospital.

Montreal, April 30.—An explosion of gas in the basement of the Maternity Hospital of the Sisters of Mercy, at the corner of St. Hubert and Labanchetiere streets, yesterday, started a blaze which caused much alarm, but which the firemen subdued before it could spread to other parts of the building.

Rev. Mother Ste. Alphonse was burned about the face and hands, but is in no danger.

Awaits Accurate Reports.

London, April 30.—Francis Dyke Acland, Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, on behalf of the British Foreign Office, replying to a series of questions on the subject of the Titanic disaster, yesterday said:

"May I suggest that it is undesirable to make any more references to imperfect and possibly inaccurate reports of the proceedings of the committee of the United States Senate. The President of the Board of Trade is taking steps to obtain an authoritative report of the proceedings of the committee in case it may be of use in the enquiry here.

"No complaints have been received by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of the detention of British subjects. The committee has statutory powers to summon witnesses and no treaty or convention is required to give the United States jurisdiction over British subjects while they are on United States territory. The position appears to be that the Senate committee is within its rights in holding the enquiry and requiring the attendance of witnesses."

Pays $5 Travel First-Class.

New York, April 30.—In a summary of the lessons of the Titanic disaster, Lawrence Beasley, a University of Cambridge man, who was among the survivors, asks: "What was the relative chance of escape for a first-class passenger and a steerage passenger?"

His answer is as follows: "I have worked out the percentage of the saved of the four classes and find it as follows:

"First-class, 62.6 per cent.; second-class, 39 per cent.; steerage, 25.7 per cent.; officers and men, 22.3 per cent. They are instructive, these figures. The payment of about $75, excess of first over third gives you more than twice the chance of your life being saved."

Fund For Captain's Widow.

New York, April 30.—American friends of Capt. Edward J. Smith, late commander of the Titanic, propose to arrange for some testimonial to his bravery, and to create a fund for his widow and daughter, who live in Southampton, England.

After a conference at the Union League Club it is announced that a committee of arrangements, including J. P. Morgan, jr., Charles Lanier, and a number of other well-known men, had been appointed. Wm. A. Nash of the Corn Exchange Bank was named to act as treasurer.

Cheap Marconigrams.

London, April 30.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—In the Commons yesterday Postmaster Samuel said he had completed arrangements for accepting Marconigrams from Canada to New York. The full rate from Montreal to New York is eight pence a word with corresponding reductions for other points. For deferred messages, in plain language, the charge is four pence from Montreal to New York, and from other points. The company will not guarantee speed in transmission.

Millers Charge Railways With an Unfair Discrimination.

Toronto, April 30.—Complaints made by the Dominion Millers' Association regarding delay in the shipment and transportation of grain eastward from Port Arthur and Fort William caused a lively discussion at the session of the Dominion Railway Board yesterday afternoon.

C. B. Watts, secretary of the Dominion Millers' Association, presented the case from the millers' standpoint, while the C.P.R. was represented by E. W. Beatty, their solicitor, and the G.N.R. by George Shaw general traffic manager.

Mr. Watts claimed three things in particular. One was that the railways showed discrimination in favor of the export trade in shipping grain eastward from Port Arthur and Fort William. The grain destined to St. John, N.B., or Halifax, got the preference as regards speed in shipment and transportation, over the grain destined to points in eastern Canada. Another point claimed by Mr. Watts is that the different railway companies show discrimination by giving first shipping to the grain from the terminal elevators that has been brought there over their own lines.

Mr Watts' third complaint was that all the railways lack the facilities for handling the traffic. These things, letters regarding grain shipments eastward have been complained of by the Dominion Millers' Association since 1908, and they have not yet been settled.

The hearing was adjourned until to-day.

A number of cases were left over till next week when the commission meets again at Ottawa.

No Postmortem To Be Held.

Brantford, April 30.—Coroner Ashton, decided here yesterday that a postmortem examination in the case of Lottie Gibson, the 13-year-old girl whose body was recovered from the mill race Saturday, was entirely unnecessary, and, greatly to the relief of the family, the body was conveyed to her father's home.

Coroner Ashton announced that there was nothing unusual in the girl's condition. It was his belief that some overpowering worry put the girl into a state of distraction which caused the act. This latter received doubtless was the cause of the trouble. Just what epistle is referred to is a matter which will, it is thought, be cleared up at the inquest on Thursday night.

It was largely through the untiring efforts of Fire Chief Lewis that the majority of the body was made just before night set in.

Developments are promised at the inquest Thursday night. Friends of the girl, members of the family and others are being summoned. Samuel Gibson, father of the dead girl, is determined on the fullest enquiries possible.

Fire In Damascus.

Constantinople, April 30.—The great bazaar quarters in Damascus have been destroyed by fire. Several persons were killed and many injured, and the damage is estimated at $10,000,000.

The fire began at midnight Friday, and lasted until late Saturday night.

Damascus is one of the holy cities of the Mohammedans, capital of the Vilayet of Syria, and is noted among other things for its numerous bazaars.

These are designated by the name of some particular trade or community. The bazaar quarters comprise long streets covered in with high woodwork and lined with shops, stalls, warehouses and cafes. The Greek bazaar, one of the largest, was rebuilt after its destruction by fire in 1893.

In the midst of the bazaar stands the mosque of Lady Fatma, one of Mohammed's wives in Damascus. There are many miles of these bazaars, all of which are extensively filled up.

REFORMS REQUIRED

Wireless System Should Be Improved Say Witnesses

IT MUST BE REGULATED

Washington, April 30.—After a discussion intended to discover the needed reforms in the use of wireless telegraphy at sea, the Senate committee investigating the Titanic disaster yesterday entered on the final stage of its enquiry.

To-day the officers and crew of the sunken ship will be released and will be free to return to their homes in England. At the same time J. Bruce Ismay, managing director of the International Mercantile Marine, will be quizzed concerningly as to his ideas of regulations to make a repetition of the disaster impossible.

G. Marconi, inventor of the wireless telegraph; F. H. Bauguis, chief engineer of the American Marconi Co.; Wireless Operators Bride and Cottam, a passenger, Hugh Woolner of England, and Fourth Officer Boxhall of the Titanic, were yesterday's witnesses. Virtually all agreed that better regulation of wireless messages was essential.

It was made clear early in the hearing that the committee already had made up its mind to advocate legislation preventing wireless operators on passenger liners holding back details of disasters. Mr. Marconi and Mr. Bauguis both acknowledged that a mistake had been made in sending messages to Bride, and Cottam, on board the Carpathia, not to give anything until they had seen Marconi and Sammis ashore.

Senator Smith held out no promise as to when the officers of the White Star Line would be released, but it was the general understanding that they would be freed as soon as Mr. Ismay is examined. This, it was expected, would not take long unless some additional facts brought out made it necessary.

Hugh Woolner of London, a survivor of the Titanic, was asked to recite his observations on the trip from Southampton until the accident, with special reference to the speed of the Titanic and her equipment.

"The speed increased daily," said the witness. "One day the record was 314 miles, and the next it had increased to 386 miles. It was the last record posted, I think."

Mr. Woolner said that he inspected the lifeboats and the life apparatus. He said he considered the work of the sailors very slow.

"I made one remark to Captain Smith," said Woolner, "when I heard him say that he wanted all the passengers to go to 'A' deck to get into the boats there. I went up to him and saluted and said: 'Captain, haven't you forgotten that all those windows on 'A' deck are closed?' And he said, 'My God, you're right; call those people back.' Only a few had gone down and they came back. Every-

J. G. Boxhall was questioned about the lights of a steamer seen from the decks of the Titanic the night of the disaster. Boxhall said he was quite positive they were a steamer's lights, repeating the testimony in regard to this given on his previous appearance before the committee.

Boxhall said he saw rockets fired from the Carpathia early Monday morning before she reached the scene of the disaster.

Senator Smith said he had evidence to support the belief that the Californian was but 14 miles from the Titanic.

"Do you think you could have seen the lights of the Californian?" he asked.

"I don't know," said Boxhall. "Five miles is the greatest range the British Board of Trade requires other lights to show, but on a clear night they can be seen further, or dimly might such as that. But I should think that we could not have seen the Californian's lights that far that night."

"Had the Californian tried rockets to signal you that night, do you think you would have seen them fourteen miles?"

"I think not."

Boxhall was followed on the stand by Quartermaster Rowe of the Carpathia.

Senator Smith said that Bruce Ismay, who was the first witness to leave the ship, had received $750 from a New York newspaper for his story of the disaster. He was asked if he had received a message instructing him to "rush" a message containing Titanic story?" He said he had not.

At the conclusion of Cottam's testimony, Senator Smith announced that the examination of the officers and crew of the Titanic had been concluded and directed Sergeant-at-Arms Cornelius to summon Mr. all of them to depart for their homes.

Bruce Ismay, managing director of the International Mercantile Marine, the Senator said, would be recalled to the witness stand to-day.

SAVING the EYES

The following rules have been introduced in a book of directions in the Chinese schools. They have a distinct value:

1. When the eyes have to be rubbed frequently while reading it is time to consult a specialist.

2. Don't read with the light in front. This ruins the strongest eyes or does anything else. The light should be slightly from behind over the left shoulder. Never read with the sun shining directly on your book.

3. Don't go to sleep or open take a nap in such a position that your eyes will open directly on the light when awakening.

4. Always hold your head erect when you read, and hold your book fourteen inches from your face.

Use a shade over your light, even a newspaper. Shades are cheap, or can easily be made.

Be sure when reading, that the light is clear and steady—not dim nor yellow nor too white.

Avoid books or papers poorly printed, or in fine type.

Rest your eyes every little while when reading by looking away from the book.

Wash the eyes night and morning in pure water.

"She belonged to your friend, Mr. Stanley."

She drew a quick breath, her face again turned forward.

"What—who is this man? Do you know?"

"I possess a passing acquaintance," he answered, uncertain yet how much to tell her, but tempted to reveal all in test of her real character. "Few do not who live along the Kansas border."

"Do you mean he is a notoriously bad character?"

"I have never heard of him being held up as a model to the young, Miss Hope," he returned more soberly, convinced that she truly possessed no real knowledge regarding the man, and was not merely pretending innocence. "I had never heard him called Hawley before, and, therefore, failed to recognize him under that respectable name. But I know his voice the moment he entered the cabin, and realized that some devilment was afoot. Every town along this frontier has his record, and I've met him maybe a dozen times in the past three years. He is known as 'Black Bart'; is a gambler by profession, a desperado by reputation, and a cur by nature. Just now I suspect him of being even deeper in the mire than this."

He could tell by the quick clasping of her hands on the pommel of the saddle the effect of his words, but waited until silence compelled her to speak.

"Oh, I didn't know! You do not believe that I ever suspected such a thing? That I ever met him there understanding who he was?"

"No, I do not," he answered, "What I overheard between you convinced me you were the victim of deceit. But your going to that place alone was a most reckless act."

She lifted her hand to her eyes, her head drooping forward.

"Wasn't it what he told me—the outstation of a ranch?"

"No; I have ridden this country for years, and there is no ranch pasturing cattle along the Salt Fork. Miss Hope, I want you to comprehend what it is you have escaped from; what you are now fleeing from. Within the last two years an apparently organized body of outlaws have been operating throughout this entire region. Oftentimes disguised as Indians, they have terrorized the Santa Fe trail for two hundred miles, killing travellers in small parties, and driving off stock. There are few ranches as far west as this, but these have all suffered from raids. These fellows have done more to precipitate the the savages. They have endeavoured to make the authorities believe that Indians were guilty of their deeds of murder and robbery. Both troops and volunteers have tried to hold the gang up, but they scatter and disappear, as though swallowed by the desert. I have been out twice, hard on their trail, only to come back baffled. Now, I think accident has given me the clue."

She straightened up; glancing questioningly at him through the darkness.

"That is what I mean, Miss Hope. I suspect that cabin to be the rendezvous of those fellows, and I half believe Hawley to be heir leader."

"Then you will report all this to the authorities?"

He smiled grimly, his lips compressed.

"I hardly think so; at least, not for the present. I am not bloodthirsty, or enamoured of man-hunting, but I happen to have a personal interest in this particular affair which I should prefer to settle alone." He paused, swiftly reviewing the circumstances of their short acquaintance, and as suddenly determining to trust her discretion. Deep down in his heart he rather wanted her to know. A bad cough, with that distressing, tickling sensation in the throat, is one of the most aggravating coughs a person can possibly have.

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup will quickly stop that tickling in the throat which causes the dry cough that keeps you awake at night, for the simple reason that it is so rich in the healing virtues of the Norway pine tree, it cannot help but do otherwise.

Miss C. Desjolais, Bonaparte River, Man., writes:—"Last fall I had a very bad cough and a tickling sensation in my throat. It was so bad I could not sleep at night, so, I went to a druggist and told him I wanted something for my cold and he advised me to try Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup which I did, and after taking one bottle I was completely cured. Let me recommend Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup to any one who suffers from a cough or throat irritation."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25 cents.

He paused, swiftly reviewing the circumstances of their short acquaintance, and as suddenly determining to trust her discretion. Deep down in his heart he rather wanted her to know. "The fact of the matter is that Neb was after me; was sneaking around the cabin when I first saw him, and would have shot me from behind had I not seen him first. He also said it was easy to capture this cowboy if you only knew how. It is true we broke jail, but only to save our lives; it was the only way. Technically, we are outlaws, and now run the risk of immediate re-arrest by returning north of the Arkansas. We came to you fugitives; I was charged with murder, the negro with assault. So, you see, Miss Hope, the desperate class of men you are now associating with."

The slight bitterness in his voice stung the girl into resentment. She was looking straight at him, but in the gloom he could not discern the expression of her eyes.

"I don't believe it," she exclaimed decisively, "you—you do not look like that!"

"My appearance may be sufficient to convince you," he returned, rather dryly, "but would weigh little before a Western court. Unfortunately, the evidence was strong against me; or would have been had the case ever come to a trial. The strang thing about it was that both warrants were sworn out by the same compiainant, and apparently for a similr purpose —'Bick Bart' Hawley."

"What purpose?"

"To keep us from telling what we knew regarding a certain crime, in which either he, or some of his intimate friends, were deeply interested."

"But it would all come out at the trial, wouldn't it?"

"There was to be no trial; Judge Lynch settles the majority of such cases out here at present. It is extremely simple. Listen, and I will tell you the story."

He reviewed briefly those occurrences leading directly up to his arrest, saying little regarding the horrors of that scene witnessed near the Cimmaron Crossing, but making sufficiently clear his very slight connection with it, and the reason those who were guilty of the crime were so anxious to get him out of the way. She listened intently, asking few questions, until he ended. Then they both looked up, conscious that dawn was becoming grey in the east. Keith's first thought was one of relief —the heightening sky showed him they were riding straight north.

CHAPTER XIII.

THE FORD OF THE ARKANSAS.

They were still in the midst of the yellow featureless plain, but the weary horses had slowed down to a walk, the heavy sand retarding progress. It was a gloomy, depressing scene in the spectral grey light, a wide circle of intense loneliness, unbroken by either dwarfed shrub or bunch of grass, a barren expanse stretching to the sky. Vague cloud shadows seemd to let across the level surface, assuming fantastic shapes, but all of the same dull colouring, imperfect and unfinished. Nothing seemed tangible or real, but rather some grotesque picture of delirium, ever merging into another yet more hideous. The very silence of those surrounding wastes seemed burdensome, adding immeasurably to the horror. They were but specks crawling underneath the sky—the only living, moving objects in all that immense circle of desolation and death.

Keith turned in the saddle, looking back past Neb—who swayed in his seat, with head lolling on his breast as though asleep, his horse plodding after the others—along the slight trail they had made across the desert. So far as eye could reach nothing moved, nothing aparently existed. Fronting again to the north he looked upon the same grim barrenness, only that far off, against the lighter background of distant sky, there was visible a faint blur, a bluish haze, which he believedd to be the distant sand dunes bordering the Arkansas. The intense dreariness of it all left a feeling of depression. His eyes turned na dregarded the girl riding silently beside him. The same look of depression was visizble upon her face ,and she was gazing off into the dull distance with lack-lustre eyes, her slender form leaning forward, her hands clasped across the pomeml. The long weariness of the night had left traces on her young face, robbing it of some of its freshness, yet Keith found it more attractive in the growing daylight than amid the lamp shadows of the evening before. He had not previously realized the peculiar clearness of her complexion, the rose tint showing through the olive skin, or the soft and silky fineness of her hair, which, disarranged, was strangely becoming under the broad brim of the hat she wore, drawn low until it shadowed her eyes. It was not a face to be easily associated with frontier concert halls, or any surrender to evil; the chin round and firm, the lips full, yet sufficiently compressed; the whole expression that of pure and dignified womanhood. She puzzled him, and h scarcely knew what to believe, or exactly how to act toward her.

"Our friends back yonder should be turning out from the corral by now," he said finally, anxious to break the silence, for she had not spoken since he ended his tale. "It will not be long until they discover Hawley's predicament, and perhaps the welkin already rings with profanity. That may even account for the blue haze out yonder."

"My Business is Scientifically Managed"

WHEN you say that you mean, of course, that it is thoroughly systematized, brought abreast of modern business conditions, by the adoption of tried and proven time-and-labor-saving office methods. But can you truthfully say the same of your shipping department? Has it kept pace with the advancement of your other departments? Or, is the work still carried on in accordance with bewhiskered, traditional custom, without regard for the greater facilities which Otis-Fensom Elevators place at your disposal?

THE waste that is caused, first, by the lack of mechanical equipment; and, second, by the unnecessary and duplicated effort on the part of the worker himself; the thousands of steps, the "false" starts, the consequent and useless expenditure of energy necessitated day after day when goods have to be laboriously trundled forward from door to floor by the stairway — all these wasteful labor leaks can be eliminated by the use of an Otis-Fensom Elevator. Goods can be properly stored and classified to be reached and removed at a moment's notice. Floor space is increased, the habit of order and neatness induced, and every flat and department made as readily accessible as the ground floor. Errors and delays in shipments are minimized. Incoming goods are promptly, systematically and advantageously distributed, and overhead expenses are kept down to the lowest notch. Your shipping department and an Otis-Fensom Elevator can do the work in one half the time and with one third the labor now required. Your present line clerking can be used if an Otis-Fensom is put in. *For those who do not require a Power Elevator we offer our Hand Power Elevator. Who is Your Customer?

HAVE you ever met your real customer? Have your salesmen a speaking acquaintance with him? Have you told him about the merits of your product? Have you explained why he should give your goods the preference? Have you done anything to stimulate his desire for your goods?

In short, have you made any attempt whatever to sell your goods to him?

"Most assuredly," you say. "Every dealer in Canada is known to our travelers, and we certainly wouldn't pay a salesman who couldn't tell our customers all——"

One minute, please. The dealer isn't your customer. He's simply a part of your sales organization, and a decidedly independent part of it at that. He is distributor for other concerns in whose goods he is just as much interested as he is in yours. And he isn't particularly interested in your product, any more than in your competitors'.

The dealer realizes that he can serve six who order their goods by a well-known trade name as quickly as he can serve one to whom he has to demonstrate that a product is good.

Your real customer is the Public—the Public who wears your clothing, eats your pickles, uses your safety razor. You've got to sell your goods to the Public.

When the user wants your goods and won't take any other—then you are independent of all but him, your real customer.

To make the user want your goods, you must do two things:

(1) Produce an article of value.

(2) Tell him what you make, and why he should prefer it.

That's advertising.

When are the makers of piano actions, for example, going to discover that they do not know their real customers; and, what is worse, that their real customers do not know them? So the public have to buy pianos in blind ignorance of the quality of the most important mechanical part of the piano.

What is it going to be worth to the piano-action maker who first discovers that his real customer is the Public, and not the piano manufacturer who incorporates the action into the complete instrument?

Advice regarding your advertising problems is available through any recognized Canadian advertising agency, or through the Secretary of the Canadian Press Association, Room 503 Lumsden Bldg., Toronto. Enquiry involves no obligation on your part—so write, if interested.

"Oh, but possibly you are too easily convinced; you believed in Hawley."

She looked at him searchingly, her eyes glowing, her cheeks flushed.

"Yes," she said slowly, convincingly. "I know I did; I—I was anxiou sto be helped, but—but this is different."

It was noon, the sun pitiless and hot above hem, before they straggled within the partial shelter of the sand dunes, and sank wearily down to their meagre lunch. Their supply of water was limited, and the exhausted ponies must wait until they reached the river to quench their thirst. Yet this was not very far off now, and Keith had seen enough of their surroundings to locate the position of the ford. Slow as they must proceed, three hours more would surely bring them to the bank of the stream. They discussed their plans briefly as the three sat together on the warm sand, revived both by the food and the brief rest. There was not a great deal to be determined, only where the girl should be left, and how the two men had better proceed to escape observation.

Fort Larned was the nearest and safest place for their charge, none of the party expressing any desire to adventure themselves within the immediate neighbourhood of Carson City. What her future plans might be were not revealed, and Keith forebore any direct questioning. His duty plainly ended with placing her in a safe environment, and he felt convinced that Mrs. Murphy, of the Occidental Hotel, would furnish room, and, if necessarry, companionship. The sole problem remaining—after she had rather listlessly agreed to such an arrangement—was to so plan the details as to permit the negro and himself to slip through the small town clustered about the post without attracting undue attention. No doubt the story of their escape had already reached there, embellished by telling, and serious trouble might result from discovery. Keith was surprised at the slight interest she exhibited in these arrangements, merely signifying her acquiescence by a word, but he charged it to physical weariness, and the reaction from her night of peril; yet he took pains to explain fully his plan, and to gain her consent.

This finally settled, they mounted again and rode on through the lanes traversing the sand dunes, keeping headed as straight as possible toward the river. The ford sought was some miles down stream, but with the horses' thirst mitigated, they made excellent progress, and arrived at the spot early in the evening. Not in all the day had they encountered a living object, or seen a moving thing amid the surrounding desolation. Now, looking across to the north, a few gleaming lights told of Fort Larned perched upon the opposite bluca.

CHAPTER XIV.

Keith had crossed at this point so frequently with cattle that, once having his bearings, the blackness of the night made very little difference. Nevertheless, in fear lest her pony might stumble over some irregularity, he gave his own rein to Neb, and went forward on foot, grasping firmly the tired animal's bit. It was a long stretch of sand and water extending from bank to bank, but the latter was shallow, the only danger being that of straying off from the more solid bottom into quicksand. With a towering cottonwood as guide, oddly misshapen and standing out gauntly against the slightly lighter sky, the plainsman led on unhesitatingly, until they began to climb the rather sharp uplift of the north bank. Here there was a plain trail, pounded into smoothness by the hoofs of cavalry horses riden down to water, and at the summit they emerged within fifty yards of the stables.

IN THE LAIR OF THE JUNGLE BEAST EAST OF SUEZ

THRILLING Adventures of a New York Circus Man Trapping Elephants, Monster Snakes, Orang Outangs and Man Hunting Seladangs in the Face of Death

SERIOUS ADVENTURES TOLD BY AND OF LIVING PERSONS

EAST of Suez, far beyond the storied waters of the Ganges and the land of the Brahmins and Buddhists, the Malay Peninsula sticks a crooked finger into the China Sea, as if pointing toward Borneo, the home of the head hunters and dreaded orang-outangs. In the heart of the peninsula diminished hords of elephants still crash through the steaming jungle. In the cleared spaces the vicious seladang—the unconquerable wild oxen of the interior—pursue their hereditary enemy, man. Along the inhospitable coast the double ended pirate of the Malays comb the waters, their crews—half fisher, half pirate—constantly on the alert for loot and plunder.

To these savage scenes Charles T. Mayer, a native of New York, proceeded in search of adventure and profit. Backed by jungle fever, poisoned by the deadly popper ants of Sumatra until his life hung in the balance, his leg broken by a full grown orang-outang, treed for a day and a night by a pair of seladang, coming face to face with death on a score of different occasions, Mr. Mayer has but recently returned from the East Indies to brave new dangers in the shape of the dreaded trolleys and automobiles of his native New York.

BY CHARLES T. MAYER.

(Copyright, 1911, by the New York Herald Co. All rights reserved.)

I SUPPOSE that I must have been born to be hanged, or else to die of the measles or in some other commonplace manner, for after my experiences around the world during the last few years I have learned to become a fatalist.

To start at the beginning, I was born in New York city forty-nine years ago of German parents. After I left the public schools I became afflicted with that spirit of wanderlust which has led me to roam about the world. My first experience outside of the United States was with R. W. Fryer's circus. Fryer was formerly the equestrian director of the old Barnum show, and associated with him was one J. B. Gaylord, who had at one time been the confidential agent of P. T. Barnum. Gaylord had travelled all over the world for Barnum, buying freaks and animals of all sorts. I took a great deal of interest in listening to Gaylord's stories of wild life in different lands.

Joining the circus at Kansas City, Mo., in 1882, I worked my way up from property man to master of transportation. We showed around the Western States during the summer of that year, and in the fall embarked for the Hawaiian Islands on the Pacific Mail steamship Mariposa. After a month at Honolulu, during which we gave a special performance for King Kalakaua, we embarked for Auckland, New Zealand. We also showed in Australia, Java, Siam and other lands.

I returned to New York by the earliest boat, and as I had managed to save a considerable part of my salary I resolved to go into the animal business on my own account as soon as I could accumulate a little additional capital.

Several years later, after work with other circuses and shows in the United States and adding to my funds, I started for Singapore via London and the Suez Canal. I outfitted in England, but as I was only a green hand at the game I decided to make haste slowly, and therefore limited my outfit to guns and explosives. My guns consisted of one Winchester 50-100 express rifle, with explosive bullets of an improved pattern; one Rook rifle for small game and two shotguns of different calibre. I also took with me a pair of revolvers for emergencies, a Colt .45 and a Smith & Wesson .38.

Bitten by a Python.

Reaching Singapore, and being ignorant of the Malay tongue, I decided that the most sensible thing I could do was to master the language at once. Provided with a letter of introduction to the Dutch Resident at Palambang, in the island of Sumatra, I proceeded to that place and lost no time in quartering myself with a Malay Hadji, a Mohammedan who had made the pilgrimage to Mecca. Without the latter to the Resident and the latter's permission I would not have been allowed to reside upon the island for any great length of time.

Under the tuition of the old Hadji I was mastering the language rapidly and had been his guest for nearly six months when I met with my first real adventure. A Chinese laborer reported the loss of a pig. Two days later a native reported that he had seen an immense snake coiled up behind a tree about a mile distant in the jungle.

A party of us went to the spot. There lay an immense python, which afterward measured thirty-two feet in length and about fifteen inches in diameter. He had gorged himself with another stolen pig and I anticipated little or no trouble in introducing the sleepy monster into a crate and subsequently shipping him to Singapore.

A long crate made out of the limbs of trees bound together with green rattan withes was prepared, and up had slipped the snake into it for a distance of about one-third of his length when things commenced to happen. The snake was not so sleepy as we supposed, for he suddenly wriggled around and seized a couple in the coils, crushing the life out of him before we could prevent it. I tried to seize him by the neck, which is tender and much smaller than the rest of the body, but he dodged me and bit me upon the left forearm.

After a time three men seized him by the tail, while others held him by the neck, and the coils were unwound from the unfortunate Chinaman. The python was then forced into the crate, and a week later, while my arm was doing nicely, I sold the snake to a buyer for a famous Liverpool dealer in beasts and reptiles for three hundred Mexican dollars. I had made my first sale, but my satisfaction was tinged by the thought that the capture of the reptile had cost a human life.

I took passage upon a trading steamer for the Malay State of Tringganu, about 350 miles north of Singapore, on the east coast of the peninsula. I took with me a Malay servant named Ali, a young man who became devoted to me. My outfit consisted of my guns, ammunition and a few cooking utensils, together with a small supply of clothing and cash.

I had heard that Tringganu had seldom been visited by white men, that the country teemed with wild animals, and that if I could win the confidence of the Sultan I could leave the country with a fine stock of animals. The German captain of the trading steamer tried to dissuade me from landing.

In spite of the discouraging line of talk I insisted on being set ashore at the town of Tringganu, and in due time, with my servant and arms, I was rowed to the beach. I had been advised to seek shelter under the roof of the principal Chinese trader. Lee Ming welcomed me, and thereafter I had my fill of roast young pig, a delicacy impossible to obtain in a Malay camp, because their Mohammedan teachings forbid them to eat pork.

I sent Ali to the palace with a message to the Sultan requesting an audience, but was vouchsafed no reply. I wanted to trade and trap in the interior, and it was first necessary to obtain permission. At the expiration of eight days Ali informed me that native runners from the southern part of the State had reported seeing a large herd of elephants a day or two before. Each day I had sent Ali to the Sultan, but with no success.

Upon the tenth day, after I had grown somewhat discouraged, knowing that it would cost me my life to venture into the interior without the permit, Ali returned with a summons for me to call at the palace at once. Evidently my persistence had aroused the Sultan's curiosity. I found him to be an old man, very proud and dignified, but very suspicious of everything pertaining to civilization.

"A Bull Seladang Caught Him and Trampled and Gored Him to Death Before My Eyes."

Everything went smoothly for a while. The herd slowly retreated away from the noise and approached the wings.

The Night Stampede.

I had secreted myself behind one of the wings near the stockade entrance, ready to give the signal to drop the heavy gate after the last elephant had entered. A young tasker led the way down the wings, and I was just congratulating myself on my success when he took fright at something. He charged the wing in front of me, squealing and trumpeting, and was followed by the entire herd.

The wing was flattened out in an instant. I was knocked to the ground by a tree trunk, and while my senses were leaving me I heard the shriek of a man on my right. A tasker had been hit. The trunk shot out and bore the wretch beneath the terrible foot. One wrench—and it was all over in much less time than it takes to write about it. When I came to I learned that the stampede had cost the lives of three men.

A week of toil followed, during which the wing was reconstructed and the herd rounded up again. This time all went well and the gate dropped behind seventy-four head of fine animals.

Not having enough money to pay the Sultan, he permitted me to embark aboard a trading steamer with some of the smaller elephants. I arrived at Singapore safely, and was busily engaged in getting my animals ashore when a smooth looking Babu-khut in a white turban asked me how much I wanted for a certain baby elephant. I would have been glad to have gotten four hundred Mexican dollars for the baby, but I was very busy, and for a joke, and as a quick way of getting rid of the fellow, I said the price was $5,000 "Mex."

I shipped my small elephants to the Calcutta firm of Routledge & Co. and drew on them for enough money to charter a junk and pay off the Sultan of Tringgannu. I then took passage on the junk for the peninsula.

Having been successful as an elephant hunter I made two more trips to the mainland with indifferent success. I bagged a tiger or two with live goat bait, but caught nothing else but the fever. My condition grew so alarming that I boarded the P. and O. for London, and finally, after nearly giving up the ghost during the trip through the Red Sea, I found myself in the British capital with drafts for $7,500 in my possession but with an enfeebled constitution. I had been gone nearly two and a half years and had lost more than forty pounds in weight.

L. A. SHAPER

Upon my return to New York, after a few weeks, I received a large order from the Australian Zoological Gardens of Melbourne. They wanted, among other things, a clouded tiger, a sun bear, a rhinoceros, a pair of seladang, a few monkeys, and some pheasants.

Selecting a pair of experienced elephant trappers, and accompanied by Ali, I went to Penang and spent a month trading junk for Kedar, a [illegible] on the west coast of the Peninsula.

I had my doubts about being able to get the pair of seladang, for, in my opinion, they are the most vicious and dangerous animal extant.

Some of these animals weigh at least a ton, and will measure seven feet from the top of their humps to the ground. They have short, curved horns and are widowed with a very delicate sense of smell. It is impossible to trap them when they come to drink, and they never will be trapped unless it is possible to construct a trap without the aid of human hands.

About sundown one evening when we were tracing the spoor of a rhinoceros we headed for a small opening in the jungle with the intention of making camp. We had just approached the opening when we heard a crash across the glade, and a pair of immediate colored seladang charged my party.

"Kribi-nan!" screamed the [illegible] in terror, as they dropped everything and sprang for the trees. Ali, who was carrying my express, was on the point of handing the heavy gun to me, when I called out to him to save himself, as there was not time to shoot. He ran to the nearest tree, but before he could reach it a bull seladang caught him and trampled and gored him to death before my eyes.

Forgetting the other animal, I lingered at the foot of a tree, horror stricken at the terrible sight. Unconsciously, I had drawn my parang, and as the cow charged me I dodged behind the tree and managed to hamstring her with a sweep of the parang as she flashed by. Then I had just time to swing myself into the branches as the bull charged me.

The wounded cow dragged herself away and disappeared in the jungle, but the bull took up a station at the foot of my tree, and each time I or any of the other men moved he would paw the ground and snort.

tree, and started a large force cutting down the trees with their parangs. It was necessary to cut a swath at least fifty feet wide around the tree so that the orang-outangs could not jump from tree to tree and escape us. The limbs of the smaller trees were so completely entered with their neighbors, that even after the trees were cut they could not be felled until the men stood in a circle and pushed in one direction. Then they came down with a rush.

We then built a fire under the tree and threw damp leaves over it. A dense smoke arose, which drove the beasts to the very top of the tree. I then posted my men with the nets, and when all was in readiness, I ordered the tree cut down. The orang-outangs were partly stunned by the fall, and before they could do much damage they were fairly smothered by the nets. One of them managed to stick his paw through one of the meshes, however. My right leg was the only thing within his reach and he grabbed it. I hung on to a tree with all my strength. The natives belabored the orang-outang with clubs, but before he loosened his hold the bone was fractured above the right knee and the flesh was painfully torn and lacerated.

In the meantime my helpers had constructed a pair of rough cages out of young trees, bound together with withes of green rattan. The beasts were dumped into these cages and after their nets had been cautiously removed my broken bone was set, and we floated down the river to Pontianak.

While I lay helpless in the house of the Dutch Resident for five weeks the natives came from all over the country to see the beasts, and it was with the utmost difficulty that my boy Ali prevented the lunks from blow-piping the orang-outangs with poisonous darts.

As soon as I was able to travel I returned to Singa-

The fearful fight came to an end at last, but the bull kept his station. He must have been as thirsty as we were, but his blood was up, and he left the trees only long enough to smell and paw the body of poor Ali.

As the afternoon wore away I proceeded to put in operation a plan which suggested itself to me. Two of my men were armed with the needle pointed, razor-edged kris. Calling to them to join me in my tree, they made their way from branch to branch until they were at my side. I had the men cut stout branches from the tree, and to one end of two of these were fastened one of the kris by means of a sarong (loin cloth), torn in halves.

Telling off one of the men to fill his sarong with leaves, and then to lower it down within reach of the seladang, I took one of the weapons and awaited the result. The bull charged the bundle of leaves, and I managed to pierce his hide just back of the hump. Again he charged and whirled, and the other man got in a jab at him which blinded the beast in one eye. I had already emptied my revolver at the seladang without other result than a snort of rage.

This jabbing and charging went on for fully an hour. We could not seem to get in a death stroke, and confined ourselves to attempts to [illegible] the stupid eye. Just as we feared that we would be obliged to stay in the tree for another night the bull showed to weaken. The blood was pouring from a dozen wounds. He went down on his forknees. Then his hindquarters settled from under him, and with a bellow of defiance he flopped over. I descended from the tree, but no sooner were the Malays that not a man would follow me until I had secured my gun and given the seladang a 50-100 behind the shoulder.

We saw nothing of the cow, but I suppose she died in the jungle.

EAT AND SLEEP IN AUTO

[illegible] Dardanelle's Tastes Extend [illegible] Meals and Kitchen.

[illegible] is interested, always a question of convenience, with him and his most memorable is Roosevelt. And what [illegible] Roosevelt says now about a touring car is worth while, for Mr. Roosevelt has been motoring over the American Continent [illegible] in the West. Mr. Dardanelle's new car is just as much a car as a sleeping compartment or dining car. It is a sort of Queen Pullman. It will contain four sleeping berths, which may be pulled down and made up in regular fashion, a kitchenette and a kitchen. It will be the best car of its kind on the American continent, and it will cost Mr. Vanderbilt $25 or $30,000. The new car will carry a man servant as well as a chauffeur. It is understood that the good old custom of leaving your boots out to be cleaned and finding somebody else's in their place in the morning, the step-ladder and upper birth, and the pitiless exposure at the end of the trip will be strictly adhered to. For long tours over the country, Mr. Dardanelle thinks his new car will be the best ever.

BRITAIN AND HER COAL

Supply Sufficient for Four Hundred to Six Hundred Years.

Based on statistics compiled in 1908, and on an increase annually of 2½ per cent., the coal consumption of Great Britain is as follows:

Railways	16,000,000
Coasting Steamers	9,000,000
Factories	66,000,000
Iron and Steel Works	25,000,000
Other Metal and Mineral Industries	1,250,000
Brick, Pottery, Glass, and Chemical Works	6,500,000
Gas Works	19,000,000
Private Houses	36,000,000

5 to 6 tons of coal per household is burned in open grate fires of British homes per annum.

Output of coal in British mines increases 2½ per cent. per annum.

Exports of British coal increase 4¾ per cent. per annum. Coal resources estimate sufficient for from 400 to 600 years.

AGED COUPLE IN CAVE

Strange Story of Miserable Life Led Close to Pembroke.

Francis Henry Switzenburg and Mary Summerfeldt, both about seventy years of age, have been living together in a cave or dug-out, for years, within ten miles of Pembroke. They have lived the life of animals, sleeping and eating, the wound hogging food from the neighbors, the man never showing himself. The cave in which they spent years is built up with stones, covered with slabs. Beechwood had earth. The door is about two feet wide and four feet high. Inside there is nothing but the old man's bunk, and in another small cave dug back from the main small one, was the woman's "bedroom." They were taken from their hovel to Pembroke. The old woman went willingly enough, but the old man showed fight, and had to be handcuffed. Their garments were rags, and they looked as if they had not seen water for years. The man occupied the cave for seventeen years, and the woman for ten. Both are Germans and unable to converse in English.

A POWERFUL AND EFFECTIVE CURE

For Catarrh, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, Asthma.

Soothing Balsams Are Carried to the Sore, Congested Membrance — Cure Quickly and Completely.

Diseases of the breathing organs are, as you know, excited by germs so minute that only the microscope can reveal them; they are lodged in the tissues, develop there, and cause all the trouble. That is how consumption starts.

If the cause of the disease can be carried by air, why not the remedy? This conclusion lies at the root of the Catarrhozone treatment. The instrument through which you breathe fragrant, healing Catarrhozone splits up into minute particles this invaluable healing and curative agent, thereby enabling the air to carry it to the remotest ramifications of the breathing organs, and diffuses itself over their entire surfaces.

CATARRHOZONE ALWAYS CURES.

It would be absolutely impossible to breathe through a Catarrhozone inhaler without carrying this liquid to the remotest parts of the breathing apparatus. Upon healthy tissue it has no action, but upon diseased tissue and upon the micro-organisms which infect diseased tissues its action is so wonderfully curative that the disease is completely abolished. Then the tissue heals.

EARLY TREATMENT IS WISE.

Catarrhozone is an ideal remedy for diseases of the throat, lungs, and nasal passages. If you have catarrh, or bronchitis, or asthma, all are equally curable by Catarrhozone. These diseases are all modifications of an inflammatory condition of the lining membranes of the throat and nasal passages. Under these conditions we call it catarrh. When it extends to the bronchial tubes, we call it bronchitis. The condition is the same, the causes which produce the diseases are identical, and the remedy, Catarrhozone, acts equally promptly and efficiently upon the different forms of this disease. Your case is curable. Get Catarrhozone to-day; two months' treatment (guaranteed) price $1; small size 50c. Sold by all dealers or the Catarrhozone Company, Kingston, Ont.

THE GULF STREAM

The Gulf Stream is a popular name of those water that rushes round the head of Florida round and up the east coast between the ocean and the shores of continental America.

There is nothing new about this and many pass the mouth of Florida and the West Indies without thinking of the mighty current flowing by that marks the eastern shore of the Atlantic, and which plays so important a part in the climate of Europe.

But the Gulf Stream is an obvious thing to any one in the Tropics or the Mediterranean. In effect, it is a hot river in those cool surroundings. Its course is clearly defined by the colour of the water, which is quite unmistakable. It is much darker than ordinary sea-water.

Its speed is as much as nine miles an hour where the surroundings are at rest. On a calm day its banks are shown by a ruffling ripple at the edges. A ship, indeed, can tell it by the ripple and by the deep blue tint.

The further it gets the broader it grows and the slower it runs. By the time it reaches Britain it has ceased to be known as the Gulf Stream, and is now the Gulf Stream drift. Its effect is to keep western shores off north-west Europe supplied with warm air, even in the middle of winter, just as the hot water in a bath will warm a cold bath-room.

If it were not for the Gulf Stream England would be under ice all winter, as Labrador is, which is the same distance from the Equator.

In the United Kingdom, too, the eastern coast is far the coldest part of the country. In the south-west of Ireland frost is very rare. It is because south-west Ireland stands directly in the flow of the Gulf Stream Drift that lemons can be grown in the open air there.

The famous French scientist, Flammarion, has declared that if the Gulf Stream stopped flowing the effect on the climate of north-west Europe would be too horrible to think of. It never has, but the bad summers we have had lately are generally attributed to the fact that of recent years the Stream has shown a tendency to cling to the east coast of the State, instead of setting off straight for here, so that America has been getting the chief benefit of it. And, certainly, the States have had exceptionally hot summers of late. New York has usually very severe winters, but in January, 1907, it had a week of real summer weather. It was because the water off the coast was at the startling temperature of 65. The Gulf Stream had lost its way.

What causes the Gulf Stream? There are two theories. One is that the prevailing south-west wind drives it along. The other is that since the water at the Equator is hotter than at the Poles, it must be lighter, and so stand higher. In other words, there is a distinct downward slope from the Equator to the Pole, and the Gulf Stream flows down it.

But as for the [illegible] theory, South Kensington [illegible] has an interesting working [illegible] which gives it strong support. The model is a model of the Gulf of Mexico and the North Atlantic. Air blown through various tubes produces the prevailing winds. And when the winds begin to blow a miniature Gulf Stream spins round the Gulf and out into the Atlantic, just as the real one does. Powder sprinkled over the water makes the current visible.

It was Benjamin Franklin who first studied the subject, and he is sometimes absurdly called the "Father of the Gulf Stream." Since his time, the Stream has been well watched. The Meterological Office of London publishes every month a chart based on no fewer than 4,000 monthly reports by ships' captains of North Atlantic water temperatures. The Stream always runs stronger in summer than winter.

Splinter Caused Death.

Farquhar McRae, near St. Thomas, was struck in the eye by a splinter while splitting wood on his farm in Dunwich, and went for treatment to Detroit, where it was found the injury had caused a clot of blood on the brain, causing death.

La Diva

NEW ADJUSTABLE

CORSET

For Short or Medium Figures

718

La Diva Corset No. 718 shown herewith, is a form model for short or medium figures and has the adjustable clasp feature which makes it possible to adjust it to the slender figure and prominent abdominal contours. This is why so many models are required to suit all figures.

It is ideal for the short and medium figure. This model, when adjusted to the smaller figure by the clasp feature, gives the reverse curve effect which is so much desired by the fashionable dressers.

This corset is made of French coutil, daintily trimmed with lace, ribbon and satin, and has six suspenders, long and short action. It is fitted carefully with double steel and supported with side.

La Diva No. 718 is sold for the last numbers at $3.00 and it will be found fully equal to any $5.00 corset on the market. Ladies should order La Diva, also special in baby measurement. Other models, now sold at from $5.00 to $7.00.

ECHO OF SPION KOP

General Buller Was Unable to Detect Trap Laid for Him, Says Joubert

General Joubert, a nephew of the Boer General who became famous in the Boer War, made a business visit to Berlin. He was at Spion Kop in charge of a command, and had some interesting things to say about that engagement. He explained that General Buller was justified in believing that he had the position in the hollow of his hand, so to speak. Buller had enormous advantage in his naval guns and a great preponderance of force. They were, it is true, from twelve to sixteen thousand Boers still fully concealed in previously chosen positions round Spion Kop, but Buller did not, and could not, know this. The General vividly described the paralyzing effect of small arms on artillery and pictured with dramatic gestures how once the front ranks of an attack are broken the men behind are thrown into confusion. General Joubert thinks highly of the discipline of the Germans, but is skeptical as to their intelligence and initiative when left to themselves. The senior Boer officers, he says, proved of little use in the field, and all the best Boer commanders: De Wet, for instance rose from the ranks during the war.

WAS SO RUN DOWN

COULD NOT DO ANY WORK.

Thought Life Was So Far Gone Nothing Could Cure Her.

MILBURN'S HEART and NERVE PILLS Made Her Strong and Healthy.

Many women get run down, and are unable to look after their household duties, owing to their nervous system becoming unstrung, and when this happens, the heart starts to work in sympathy with the nerves. In Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills is combined a treatment that will cure all forms of nervous disorders, as well as act on the heart itself. Mrs. F. McFadyen, Brookside, Sask., writes:—"It is with the greatest of pleasure I write you stating the benefit I have received from using Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. This spring I was so run down I could not do any work, and one day a neighbor advised me to try your Pills. I told her that I thought nothing could cure me, as I was too far gone. But she told me to get a box of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, which I did, and before I had finished them, I began to improve, and when I had finished the one box I was as strong and healthy as any person. Anyone who is suffering from heart or nerve troubles should take your Heart and Nerve Pills and they will soon discover their worth."

Price 50 cents per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Redistribution Bill Before Provincial House

Proposed New Constituency to be Formed With Bigger as Seat

The Provincial Parliament now have the New Distributing Bill framed up into working shape, and this will erect 15 new seats and make 84 seats for the whole province.

One of these new seats is allotted to Northern town of Bigger, with a district extending thirty miles from east to west and from sixty to ninety miles from north to south, the deflection being caused by the North Saskatchewan River.

As laid out, the new constituency of Bigger consists of all that land shown on the map as follows:

Starting from a point on the line between ranges 11 and 12 on the top of township 37, and proceeding straight north along this line to the North Saskatchewan river in township 40; then along the line of the river till reaching the line between ranges 17 and 18 in township 44, and proceeding south along this line to the N. E. corner of township 39 in range 18, and from there straight east to the starting point.

This gives the Bigger constituency an area of somewhere about 3,000 square miles, and includes the towns of Bigger, South Battleford, Maymont, Harris, Zealandia, Herschel, Palo, Obun, Maud, Vance, Neola, and a lot of other smaller places inside the area mentioned above.

TWO ARE RETURNED.

Meathcoupe Farr Continues Service and Gerrie.

Waterloo, April 30.—Thos William Pittaway, chairman of the Centre Huron License Board, placed in guarantee, if given back, that the license of the Union Hotel, conducted by Michael Farr, would not be cut off when the prescribed reduction of licenses was carried out, was the occasion made by Farr at yesterday's opening sitting of the court of enquiry, presided over by Eudo Saunders.

Farr also swore that License Inspector Asquith had given him the impression that he would do well to accept the terms named by Patterson.

L. E. Dancey, counsel for Patterson, endeavored to get an adjournment until to-day as he had not seen the declaration made by Farr to the Provincial Licenses Department, but the commissioner said that he intended proceeding.

Farr swore that he had first been approached by another party, who intimated that his license might be saved. About a week and a half after the reduction bylaw passed, Patterson and the other party came to his hotel. He told Patterson he spent $4,000 on his hotel, and asked Patterson to spare the axe so far as he was concerned. Patterson replied that there were two to be cut off, and said that he had worked over in Hallet against local option, and that he did not purpose doing anything for nothing.

Farr finally said that the man who first approached him was Andrew Porter, local manager of the Sterling Bank, who had told him his license was in danger. Porter had said he had influence with the commissioners. On Feb. 29, or March 8, Porter phoned him that the license commissioners were meeting in town, and Farr went down to the bank. Porter told him they were talking of the transfer of the British Hotel license, and said that would change their plans. Then Porter had said witness did not go after Patterson hard enough on the night of the meeting in his hotel. After the next meeting of the commissioners, Patterson came down to his hotel.

Preventive Inquest.

Toronto, April 30.—The clouds of adverse evidence gathered even more closely over the head of Charles Gibson, the young man charged with the murder of Jessie Trueblood at the inquest, continued at the morgue last night. He was positively and dramatically identified as the man "Smith" who had so urgently sought the dead man during the days immediately preceding the murder. His stepmother and younger brother flatly contradicted each other in their testimony as to a shirt which another witness swore was one left at his home by Gibson on the morning after the murder, and a witness swore told of his arrival at home on the night of the murder with his sleeve and the bottom of his trousers leg covered with mud.

Meyer Reisin, employed by Eli Dunkelman, 25 his pack yard at 117 West Richmond street, declared that Gibson was the same man who had come to the yard three times on the Thursday before the murder asking for Rosenthal, and wishing to tell him that "Mr. Smith" wanted to see him upon very particular business.

John Woodhouse, who roomed with Mrs. Rose at 149 Ontario street, where Gibson's father and family lived at the time of the murder, swore that on the morning after the murder he had heard a protracted sound, as of somebody brushing clothes in the room across the hall from his own, and in which Gibson slept.

An adjournment was taken until Thursday.

Two Years for Lobbing Punch.

Brockville, April 30.—William Bertram, who has been found guilty of an unprovoked assault upon Walter Hall, was yesterday sentenced by the police magistrate to two years less one day in the Central Prison.

Bertram, who has won some renown as a pugilist, slammed Hall leaving a hotel and without excuse, landed a right swing to the face, breaking the man's nose.

Probing Guelph's Fire Department.

Guelph, April 30.—An investigation will commence to-night into the petition of the local firemen complaining of lack of harmony between the men and the chief. Mayor Thorp will preside, and the fire and light committee will act as jury. Counsel have been engaged by both parties, and considerable interest is being taken in probable developments.

WOULD ANNEX A STRIP OF NORTH MONAGHAN

Legal Committee Begins Movement to Enlarge City's Territory—Some of the Reasons Advanced

WOULD BENEFIT RESIDENTS

That the city is sincere in its endeavour to secure the annexation of a strip of North Monaghan was evidenced by a motion passed by the Legal Committee on Monday night to circulate a petition among the residents of the section affected with a view to learning their views in regard to the proposal.

This matter has already been referred to in the Examiner, and the citizens of several civilians and ratepayers of the township have been published.

Fire Protection.

An alderman, in speaking of the plan, recently, pointed out the benefits that would be received by those coming into the city. Adequate fire protection is one of the first assets that would be provided. At present, the fire department is willing, or rather, has been willing, to lend whatever assistance may lie in its power to residents outside the corporation. Fire protection, this alderman stated, was a serious consideration to the householder who is beyond the city limits. This was amply demonstrated a few years ago when a house near the Catholic cemetery was burned to the ground, with not even a hand raised to check the flames.

Fire protection will be one of the first things offered to the residents in the territory under consideration. Mayor Bradburn stated last night that electric lights and fire protection would be the first things granted.

The question of tax rate, according to the alderman, would not be a serious matter, as the property in the new territory would not be assessed highly, and, on the other hand, the property would increase in value as soon as it became part of the city. Owners of land would benefit extensively by this fact.

There is a water service practically into Byersville at present, and, the district south of the Driving Park is within easy distance of the main sewer.

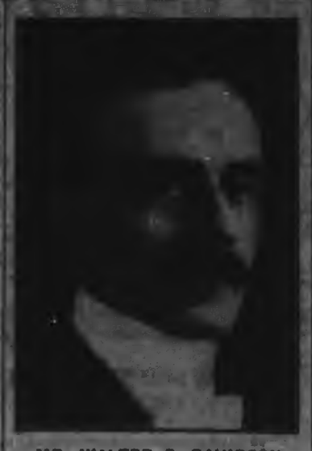
If it were not for the fact that quite a few of the residents outside the boundary are eager to secure annexation the Legal Committee would not be influenced in going ahead with the question, but they have been practically assured of assistance in promoting the movement.

Need Factory Sites.

The city is anxious to secure territory for manufacturing purposes, in order that they may have sites to recommend to the representatives of various concerns. This is an important consideration for there would be good railway facilities south west of the city, and factory sites are necessary to every city wishing to progress. The alderman who was interviewed stated that this would be an indirect benefit to the residents of North Monaghan, who share, to a certain extent, in the city's advancement. It would be particularly beneficial if, at the same time the annexation of a strip of the township were secured.

Ald. Brown presided at the Legal Committee meeting, and there were present, Mayor Bradburn, Ald. Anderson, Duffus and Gordon.

It was moved by Ald. Gordon, seconded by Ald. Duffus, that steps be taken to secure the annexation of that part of North Monaghan, between the western boundary of the city and the dividing line between lots 11 and 12 of the township, the line stretching south from Smith street, extended to the road north of Crawford's Grove; and that part of the township lying east of this dividing line to the river and south of the south boundary of the city. This strip is practically in the shape of a capital "L".



MR. WALTER S. DAVIDSON, Who was given a farewell dinner by his friends last night. Mr. Davidson leaves to-morrow for Calgary, where he will reside in future.

THIS SEASON ABOVE AVERAGE

Furriers Report the Catch This Year as Larger Than Usual —End of Season To-day

75c PREVAILING PRICE

To-day is the last for trapping, and Peterborough was invaded this morning by Indians from various points, whose tales denoted a good catch. On interviewing several of the local furriers this was found to be correct, as the catch this year has been above the average. While a large quantity came from the south, about the Rice Lake district, the majority this season is from the north. The prices ranged from 74 to "1" cents, the prevailing price being 75 cents. Last year the skins only realized an average of 30 cents while the year previous saw a price of three times that sum. Messrs. Lech and Sons purchased several thousands of pelts, including the catch of Mr. Dan. Whetung and Messrs. Barrie and Sons also purchased a large quantity. The furriers are allowed ten days' grace to clear, after which they are liable to a fine. In the case of a factory, however, where a stock has to be kept a special permit may be obtained from the government.

Fell Ten Stories In Toronto's Big New Sky Scraper

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, APRIL 30.—With an awful shriek that struck terror into the hearts of hundreds of people on the busy corner of King and Yonge streets this morning at eight-thirty, John Cockle, carpenter, aged forty, fell down the materials hoist, from the tenth storey of the Canadian Pacific cloud scraper, being built here, to the basement, one hundred and fifty feet below. Death was instantaneous, the neck and many bones being broken. Employees had been prohibited from using the hoist.

THE MORGUE SHIP HAS ARRIVED AT HALIFAX

FIRST COLLECTION OF GARBAGE TO BE MADE TO-MORROW

Everything in Readiness and Co-operation of Citizens Expected to Facilitate Its Working

THREE WAGGONS OUT

The city's garbage collecting system begins operations to-morrow, and the "I-told-you-so's" who, out of a spirit of pettiness predicted the failure of the Council to evolve a collecting scheme, are perhaps disgruntled with the success of the steps taken thus far. The collector, Mr. Chas. Scriver, has three new waggons, appropriately painted and ready for the introductory work to-morrow.

They will be inspected on the market square to-morrow morning, and afterwards will begin upon the regular duties for Wednesday. This includes all hotels, fruit and fish stores and restaurants on Charlotte, Simcoe, Hunter and Brock, between Water and Aylmer streets; and Aylmer from Charlotte street to Murray street.

The residents who will be called upon to-morrow, have been notified by Inspector Spence, and have been asked to provide the necessary barrels or other receptacles for the garbage, ashes, etc.

The city officials request the co-operation of the citizens in facilitating the operations of the garbage collecting systems. They point out that this has been provided as an aid to the protection of the public health, and as such every citizen should do whatever lies in his power to make the collection of garbage as complete as it should be. Often new ideas and methods are considered in a critical manner and persons are inclined to hold aloof, instead of lending their sympathy and assistance. All the citizens share, to a certain extent, in the responsibility of making the new scheme a success, and the city officials invite whatever aid can be given.

RED MILL THEATRE

Coming! Coming! Monday and Tuesday Only "The Death Ship or Coffin Ship"

Coming! Coming! Monday and Tuesday only, "The Death Ship" or "Coffin Ship." This picture is entirely different from any shown in this city, and give one a vivid idea of what a shipwreck at sea is really like. This is a $200,000 attraction, and shows a storm lighthouse blown up, mastz of a ship breaking and the ship sinking. This picture is produced in three reels; 3,000 feet of film; one show in itself, and is taken in memory of the fateful ship "Titanic." Wait for this picture; it is worth waiting for. Admission, 5 cents to all.

FATHER OF "MUTT AND JEFF" NOW A BENEDICT

NEW YORK, APRIL 30.—It became known yesterday that "Bud" Fisher, the cartoonist, had become a benedict. Despite the fact that he has, for some time, been fully aware of the marital intentions of a close friend of his, one Mack, he deliberately embarked on the sea of matrimony via the elopement route. The young woman is Miss Pauline Welch, a pretty little blonde vaudeville actress. The wedding took place Friday night and, while neither of the elopers told anybody where they were going on their honeymoon, it is believed they are well on their way to San Francisco.

The news of the wedding came as a surprise to Mr. Fisher's friends. He had apartments where he was equipped to live the life of a confirmed bachelor. Mrs. Fisher lived at the Hotel Bristol with her mother. Mrs. Welch knew nothing of the plans of her daughter to wed and the news came as a shock to her. She seems greatly concerned about Mr. Fisher's first name. She says she doesn't believe it is "Bud," but she has no idea what it is.

"Mackay-Bennett" Reports That 209 Bodies Were Picked Up But That Some Had to Be Buried at Sea

A HARROWING SCENE

Special Wire to The Examiner.

HALIFAX, N.S., APRIL 30.—With the spire showing from the Citadel, and the dome of the city jail, the cable-ship MacKay-Bennett steamed into harbour to-day, carrying the remains of the dead found floating on the sea following the Titanic disaster, two weeks ago Sunday. The city is still in mourning and the presence of the relatives and friends of the dead made every body feel a sympathetic kinship in the disaster. Many hundreds were allowed on the Government Gun Scope, where the vessel landed, and seldom was such a sombre, blustering crowd ever gathered together in a Canadian port, where such scenes in the present are fortunately rare.

Members of the crew, talking over the side said that everybody picked up had been in a life belt, and there were no bullet holes in any. Many unconfined dead lay on the forward deck covered with tarpaulins. As understairs some aboard it was decided to take off these bodies first. The White Star line officials had boarded the ship down the harbour, and they superintended the arrangements attendant upon the docking. The first body removed was that of a seaman. When the tarpaulin was thrown back more than fifty dead bodies were disclosed. They all lay on their backs, the cold water keeping down into their clothing, and some were in a state of apparent repose, the contorted features of others were too horrible to describe. Men with stretchers quickly came on board and the work of removal was begun swiftly.

The official report from Captain Lardner is that the bodies of 306 victims of the Titanic disaster were picked up at sea.

One hundred and sixteen bodies were buried at sea. These bodies were found to be in such a condition as to preclude their being brought to port. One hundred and ninety bodies were on board the cableship MacKay-Bennett, when she made port to-day. Of these two were women. The body of John Jacob Astor the millionaire, was identified on board the MacKay-Bennett, by the jewellery he wore, and a few cards found in a card case in his pocket, according to members of the crew.

Captain Richard Roberts, seeking Col. Astor's body, reported Col. Astor's body; reported that he was sure the identification was proper. He added, however, that the body identified as that of George B. Widener, of Philadelphia, was so mutilated that identification was still in doubt. Capt. Lardner could not say positively whether it was that Mr. Widener or his valet.

A coffin pulled from the pile on the after deck of the Mackay, was opened and Captain Richard Roberts of the Astor yacht looked at the body it contained. After gazing at it for a moment he turned away saying: "It is he." Among the unidentified dead was the tiny figure of a baby girl apparently about two years old. The child's body had been picked up by one of the crew of the Mackay. It was floating on a bit of wreckage. By no means could the little body be identified. The crew of the Mackay took charge of the body and it will be buried in Halifax at the expense of the mines. For two hours the work of removing the bodies went on with the regularity of clock work. The waggons gave out and the hearses of all the undertakers were pressed into service.

The gloomy work of transferring bodies from Mackay-Bennett steamer to the temporary morgue was completed at noon and the majority of the relatives claimed bodies and attended to their disposition there. For fifty or more of the Titanic's dead recovered by the Mackay-Bennett there are no claimants here and they will be interred in the local cemetery. Probably one of the most important of the new particulars gathered by the sailors of the steamer was the fact that one of the collapsible lifeboats was half submerged with a woman's red silk underskirts tied to the end of an oar. Near this boat were the bodies of a number of women and a few sailors. It was evident that the skirt had been used to signal for assistance, which never came before the flimsy boat turned them all out struggling into the water. How this boat was launched and drifted away from its companions unnoticed, will never be known. The watches in the pockets of the passengers all stopped between 2.10 and 2.15 a.m.

The Mackay-Bennett sighted the

EFFORTS TO SECURE NEW INDUSTRIES ARE BEING MADE

Manufacturers' Committee is Alive to Duties—Could Have Factory if Willing to Give Exemption Bonus

NOT NEGLECTING CITY

The city's pursuit of the elusive new industries goes on steadily, and civic officials have strings out for several concerns that may or may not be secured for Peterborough. The Manufacturers' Committee met last night, with Ald. Gillespie presiding, and with Mayor Bradburn, Mr. T. Eastoned, Aldermen Gordon, Duncan and Duffus present. It has not been customary to report the proceedings of the committee in respect to its communications with the representatives of industrial concerns, but sometimes the question is asked on the street as to what Peterborough is doing in this direction.

Every citizen is eager to have new factories come here, and probably none more so than Mayor Bradburn. But some concessions asked are considered unreasonable, and the committee does not proceed further with them.

One letter read last night was from a manufacturer in the United States, but too much was asked in the form of a bonus, and the [illegible] rejected as offer that was made by the Mayor when the company's representative was in Peterborough some time ago.

Another concern that is thinking of locating in Canada has promised Mr. Armstrong and Mayor Bradburn that

A CITIZEN'S POINT OF VIEW OF EXHIBITION GROUNDS PURCHASE

A good citizen of Peterborough called at The Examiner yesterday to say that he did not agree with The Examiner and Review, or those gentlemen advocating the purchase by the city of the Exhibition Grounds. He was asked to place his views in writing before the electors but he demurred, saying that he did not wish, as practically a newcomer to Peterborough, to seem to be intruding his opinions upon citizens of longer residence.

The Examiner, after listening to the views of the gentleman, decided to respect his modesty, and to give the ratepayers the benefit of his views of the matter.

The gentleman in question thinks the city should purchase the grounds, anyway. But instead of devoting them to exhibition purposes, the property should be used for building sites, and made suitable for this purpose by extending George and Aylmer streets south, thereby opening the streets and practically extending the city limits and streets to the river.

He points out that at the present rate of extension of residences in the southern part of the city, the exhibition grounds will soon be surrounded by buildings—especially on the south. In that event, residents to the south would have to make a long detour on either side of the grounds to reach the schools and churches existing at present in the southern part of the city—that is, the Church of the Sacred Heart and St. James Church, and the King Edward and Lake Street Schools.

He thinks that the inconvenience of circumnavigating thirty acres of ground, walled in with a board fence, to gain access to schools, churches, and the central part of the city would more than counterbalance the benefits of a two or three days' exhibition.

The gentleman thinks that if $30,000 were voted by the city, and used to buy a suitable site for an exhibition grounds, more distant from the city but accessible to street railway—extended—and by Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railways, a better thing would be done, and there would be something left of the $30,000 left to help erect buildings. These buildings could be made permanent and last for all time; they would not have to be torn down as would buildings on the present grounds when the property becomes too valuable to hold for exhibition purposes.

In the meantime, if the exhibition grounds were converted into building sites, within a few years the increase in assessment would go far to recoup the city for the expenditure of $30,000 in acquiring exhibition grounds further out of the city.

The Examiner gives the version of a citizen who is a thoughtful man and has had experience and observation of the disadvantages resulting from exhibition grounds placed relatively to the city in the same position as Peterborough's exhibition grounds are at present.

"BE BRITISH."

The noble, ringing words, "Be British, ever" uttered in the time of danger, by Captain Smith of the Titanic, have echoed round the world, and have been made the subject of countless sermons and newspaper articles. But with some this spirit is soon forgotten, and we had, on Saturday night, in the heart of the city, an exhibition of hoodlumism, in which every sentiment of law and order and sympathy with constituted authority founded upon a little application of "Be British" was outraged. Some roughs, under drink, misbehaved themselves in a public place, and naturally resisted arrest by the policemen. This was to be expected. And it was to be expected that some chums of their kidney would interfere and try to prevent the arrest. This action was natural, under the circumstances, and in view of the drunken condition of the men. But what was astonishing was that the onlookers, many of whom constituted the elements of a mob, should sympathise with the toughs and peace-breakers, and jeer the policemen, the representatives of the "Be-British" spirit—law and order—and even go to the extreme of assailing the police officers with stones. Thus these persons put themselves on a level with the toughs, and without the excuse of being drunk. They became toughs themselves in their sober senses. Such a spirit of sympathy with lawlessness and disorder shows that in spite of our boasted civilization, with a church building or establishment for every thousand of our population, we have the elements amongst us of unbridled and perilous anarchy.

A few months ago we had the air filled with buncombe appeals to the "British Born" to save the country from the danger of trading with our neighbours. It would be un-British to do so. The British-born were herded and handled to serve the ends of the basest and most hypocritical political trickery. British principles were prostituted to the success of a party that forgot, when elected, every principle of British loyalty and politically cohabited with the declared enemies of everything British.

This course of action tended to bring the name British, and all it represents of fair play, law and order, and good citizenship, into contempt.

On Saturday night we found some of the British born, such as were used as tools last September, forgetting everything British, and outraging British law and order; and we found the class that sympathised with, and were misled by, the hollow hypocrisy of the appeal to the British Born," aiding and abetting resistance to law that shamed and denied all that is represented by the grand battle cry of the battle of noble and self-sacrificing life, "Be British". We have here another illustration of the truimph of the saying of that grand old cynic, Dr. Johnston, that "Patriotism is the last refuge of a scoundrel." A noble cause or noble principle can have no worse enemy than the pretending friend who prostitutes it to the promotion of an ignoble and unworthy cause, like the success of a game of political trickery.

PHILIP DRUNK AND PHILIP SOBER.

We have had abundant evidence for an unprejudiced mind, to show that Conservative politicians have two standards of attitude and action; one standard based on their personal convictions and real opinions; the other to be used for political purposes.

When Sir Wilfrid Laurier adopted his naval policy, founded upon an unanimous resolution of Parliament, there was universal approval. When it was merely an abstract question, involving the principle of Canada's duty to share the burden of Imperial defence, it was great and good. The Toronto News and conservative politicians generally, subscribed to it heartily, but as soon as it became a concrete question, as soon as Sir Wilfrid Laurier based legislative action upon the unanimous sentiment expressed by vote of parliament, then the News and Conservative politicians became its most violent assailants. While the Naval Act was passing through parliament and after it became law. The News denounced it as a policy "unworthy of Canada and her position in the empire"; it created a "tin pot" navy and it was in every way inadequate, and it did not satisfy the British sentiment of Canada. Ever since the Naval Bill was passed, the News has been hammering Laurier and his "tin pot" navy and his inadequate naval policy.

All this criticism on behalf of the Conservative party argued that if that party gained power, something "worthy of Canada's place in the Empire" would be done—something big, and, above all British, would be done.

And what do we see? The Conservatives came into power, largely by virtue of their theoretically ultra-imperial, ultra-loyal and ultra-British appeal to the electorate. Has the Laurier naval policy been improved upon? Has the Naval Act been improved? Not at all; nothing has been done. But something has been undone. At the demand, nay, at the command, of the anti-British, anti-imperial and disloyal Nationalist element which Mr. Borden recognised by embodying in his cabinet, Mr. Borden, on behalf of the great "British" party he represented, killed the Naval Act, and though eight months and a session of parliament have elapsed, he has done nothing to supplant,and in fact, has never mentioned the subject of the navy except when forced by the prodding questions of the opposition. The Toronto News led the crusade against the only Canadian that had conceived and applied a naval policy acceptable to the Lords of the Admiralty and adequate to the "requirements of loyal Canadians," and Mr. J. S. Willison as editor, was the Jove that made the thunder. Yet, we have Mr. J. S. Willison in private, in his moments of personal sanity—"Philip drunk, become Philip sober"; when he could speak the truth—we find him applauding the naval policy of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. He told the Englishmen of Toronto at a St. George's Day banquet that "the naval programme of the Laurier Administration was at least a beginning," and continued in these words:

"I want you gentlemen to remember and to hold in respect those French-Canadian Liberals who fought a hard fight in the initial period of this struggle for contribution to Imperial defence."

And Mr. Willison in his capacity as editor of the Toronto News, joined with the Conservatives and politicians in making the "struggle" of these "disloyal" French-Canadian citizens "for contribution to imperial defence" so much harder by their partizan and (essentially) anti-British, anti-Canadian and anti-imperial attitude. Time, will doubtless vindicate the Laurier naval policy and coincidently discredit the factitious and factious opposition it has received from the hands of the "party of loyalty"—if we are to judge by the result of an appeal for Philip drunk to Philip sober.

PRESIDENT TALKED NONSENSE.

The Toronto News is now printing with a tremendous display of black type a letter from President Taft to Mr. Roosevelt, predicting that reciprocity in natural products would make Canada only an adjunct of the United States. The answer to this is that President Taft was talking nonsense, just as the News and others who predicted similar results, were talking nonsense.

However, there was more excuse for the President. He was naturally impressed with the greatness of his country. He was over-confident as to the United States. He did not appreciate the greatness of the country with which he was dealing. But as Canadians, we do not share President Taft's view. We believe in our own country. We do not believe that its destiny will be affected by its trade. We do not believe that our own tariff or the American tariff will lead to political union. We do not believe that we shall be swallowed up by a country because it sells us cotton or buys our wheat. The difference between us and those who agree with President Taft, and the News is that we have confidence in our own country.

President Taft's view is absolutely falsified by the trade returns just published. They show that more than half our total trade is with the United States, that we import from that country goods to the value of $300,000,000, or more than three times our imports from Great Britain. Yet annexationist feeling in Canada is not growing. The faster our American trade grows, the more annexation sentiment declines, until it is now virtually extinct.—Toronto Star.

"TITANIC" FUND IS OPENED

The Peterborough fund in aid of relatives of the victims of the Titanic disaster, has been opened, and the Examiner will be pleased to receive and acknowledge any subscriptions that the people of this city may bring in. The fund is in charge of Mayor Bradburn, Ald. Gordon and the City Treasurer, who will see that the donations received are sent to the proper parties. No doubt there will be a prompt response from the people of Peterborough to this most deserving object.

SCOUT RALLY ON FRIDAY

There will be a Scout rally in the Armouries on Friday night next. The 1st and 3rd Troops are requested to turn out in full number. Patrol leaders, corporals, and assistant scoutmasters will be chosen. The first drill will be held. It is necessary for the bugle band to be present. Weather permitting, Scouts are requested to wear uniforms. Every Scout must have his staff. Arrangements are being made for a committee meeting of Scout officials. Any boy wishing to become a Scout is asked to report on Friday next at the Armouries to Commissioner Miller. There is no entrance fee. All boys who do not smoke are welcome. Now is the time to join so as to get into the spring work.

ONE SINGLE PILL GAVE GREAT RELIEF

FOUR BOXES CURED HIM

PLUMSTEELVILLE, Ont.

"I suffered from Kidney Trouble for several years, and tried numerous remedies and doctors' prescriptions without permanent relief, my case being chronic. After reading about Gin Pills, and as it is a well known fact that Juniper without alcohol is excellent for the Kidneys, I decided to try Gin Pills. One single pill gave me great relief. I have now taken almost four boxes of Gin Pills and find myself completely cured. No more bad dreams, increase in weight—clear eyes—fresh color—more strength and vigor. This is what Gin Pills have done for me".

Annual Week Of Prayer And Self-Denial

The attention of our readers is called to the annual week of self-denial and prayer in connection with the Salvation Army in Canada, from May 5th to 12th. The purpose of this special effort is, as is now generally well understood, to raise funds for the maintenance and further extension of the many and varied branches of this wonderful organization in both the home and foreign mission fields.

In addition to the personal sacrifices of the individual members of the army themselves, an appeal is made to all who are interested in rescue work and philanthropic work and hundreds of Canada's citizens of every rank and station in life now enjoy it an honour and privilege to thus participate themselves with the good work.

The "target" to be reached locally is $500, and a general canvass of the city will be made within the next two weeks. All collectors will be furnished with special self-denial collecting books, duly certified by the commanding officer. Contributions by mail will be promptly acknowledged, if sent to Ensign J. H. Merrett, 320 King street, city. It is sincerely hoped that all friends will respond liberally to this appeal, thus giving encouragement to the work of the local corps, as well as to the organization as a whole.

THE HERPICIDE GIRL IS THANKFUL

I am always grateful for real blessings, and I know of nothing that I need to be more thankful for than Newbro's Herpicide. Thousands of ladies not only in the United States but all over the world, feel the same way about it. To this wonderful scalp and hair remedy they owe their soft, long, beautiful hair.

Mary J. Terry, of Lovejoy, Ill., writes: "My hair came out until there was just a scanty cover for the scalp. I tried everything I ever heard of or read about until I finally used Herpicide. There is nothing like it. My head is now covered with new hair. I shall forever praise Herpicide."

Most hair troubles come from dandruff. Newbro's Herpicide removes this dandruff by killing the germ which causes it. It also stimulates a flow of blood which nourishes the follicles. The scalp being healthy, the hair does not come out and the new hair is allowed to grow.

There are other preparations which they say are "just as good" as Herpicide. It is not advisable to try them. Instead of doing any good they may do positive harm.

No one is ever disappointed in Newbro's Herpicide. The results are always the same, always satisfactory, as is manifested by the fact that Herpicide has been sold for years and has thousands of satisfied friends. It is the only genuine, original dandruff germ destroyer. There is nothing "just as good."

One dollar size bottles are sold and guaranteed by all druggists.

Applications at good barber shops.

Send 10c. in postage for sample and book to The Herpicide Co., Dept. R., Detroit, Mich.

WHAT STRIKES YOU IN NEW BRUNSWICK

PEOPLE ALL HAVE CONFIDENCE IN DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

Everywhere you find people who have been cured of Rheumatism, Lumbago, Bright's Disease or some other form of Kidney Disease — cure is always Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Cameron's Mills, Kent Co., N.B., April 29.—(Special.)—The one thing that strikes a visitor to New Brunswick is the confidence its people have in Dodd's Kidney Pills as a cure for any and all form of Kidney Disease. They have used them and they know by their own experience that Dodd's Kidney Pills are all that is claimed for them. Everywhere you go you find this confidence. It is expressed in this village by Mrs. Joseph P. Daigle.

"I have great confidence in Dodd's Kidney Pills," she says. "Six boxes cured me of my Kidney Disease."

All over the Province you find people who have been cured of Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Diabetes, Backache, or some other form of Kidney Disease by Dodd's Kidney Pills. You cannot find a case in which they have been given a fair trial that the results have not been beneficial.

Sinking Of The "Arctic"

(The Arctic collided with another vessel in a voyage from Liverpool to New York in September, 1854.)

The ball strikes, the wheels revolve, the signal gun beats its echoes in every structure along the shore, and the Arctic glides joyfully forth from the Mersey, and turns her prow to the winding channel, and begins her homeward run. The pilot stood at the wheel the men saw him. Death sat upon the prow, and no eye beheld him. Whoever stood at the wheel in all the voyage, Death was the pilot that steered the craft, and none knew it. He neither revealed his presence nor whispered his errand.

And so hope was effulgent, and like gaiety disported itself, and joy was with every guest. Amid all the inconveniences of the voyage, there was still that which hushed every murmur. "Home is not far away." And every morning it was still one night nearer home. Eight days had passed. They beheld that distant bank of mist that for ever haunts the vast shallows of Newfoundland. Boldly they made it, and plunging in, its pliant wreaths wrapped them about. They shall never emerge. The last sunlight has flashed from that deck. The last voyage is done to ship and passengers. At noon there came noiselessly stealing from the north, that fated instrument of destruction. In that mysterious shroud the vast atmosphere of mist, both steamers were holding their way with rushing prow and roaring wheels, but invisible.

At a league's distance unconscious, with rushing prow and roaring wheels, and at nearer approach unwarned within hail and, bearing right towards each other, unseen, unfelt—till in a moment more, emerging from the grey mists, the ill-omened Vesta dealt her deadly stroke to the Arctic. The death blow was scarcely felt along the mighty hull. She neither reeled nor shivered. Neither commander nor officers deemed that they had suffered harm. Prompt upon humanity, the brave Luce (let his name be ever spoken with admiration and respect) ordered away his boat with the first officer to inquire if the stranger had suffered harm. As Gourley went over the ship's side, O! that some good angel had called to the brave commander in the words of Paul on a like occasion, "Except these abide in the ship ye cannot be saved."

They departed, and with them the hope of the ship; for now the waters, gaining upon the hold, and rising up upon the fires, revealed the mortal blow. O! had now that stern, brave mate, Gourley, been on deck, whom the sailors were wont to mind—had he stood to execute efficiently the commander's will—we may believe that we should not have had to blush for the cowardice and recreancy of the crew, nor weep for the untimely dead. But apparently each subordinate officer lost all presence of mind, then courage, and so honour. In a wild scramble that ignoble mob of firemen, engineers, waiters, and crew rushed for the boats and abandoned the helpless women, children and men to the mercy of the deep. Four hours there were from the catastrophe of the collision to the catastrophe of sinking.

O, what a burial was here! Not as when one is borne from his home among weeping throngs, and gently carried to the green fields and laid peacefully beneath the turf and flowers. No priest stood to pronounce burial service. It was an ocean grave. The mists alone shrouded the burial place. No spade prepared the grave, nor sexton filled up the hollowed earth. Down, down they sank, and the quick returning waters smoothed out every ripple, and left the sea as placid as before.

TELEPHONE GIRL STRUCK BLIND AT WORK

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J., APRIL 29.—Not until they heard Miss Ethel Hiltner, 17 years old, ask her family physician at the telephone to come to her aid, did several other young woman operators in the telephone exchange here learn that Miss Hiltner had been stricken blind when seated alongside them.

"I've gone blind doctor; won't you come to me This is Miss Hiltner," one of the other operators heard her companion say. The girl had been unable to see for several minutes, and when she realized the extent of her affliction "plugged in" on the switchboard in front of which she had been working and established a connection with the home of Dr. Marcus.

As she disconnected the plugs after communicating with Dr. Marcus Miss Hiltner stood up and tried to walk across the room. She fell fainting. Several other operators ran to her assistance. She was revived, but refused to be taken to a hospital and insisted upon returning to her home so she might be there when Dr. Marcus arrived.

Accompanied by two of the operators Miss Hiltner was taken in a taxicab to her home. After she had been examined by Dr. Marcus and other specialists it was said that the young woman's affliction probably would be permanent.

MARKET GARDENERS PAY NO LICENSE

Local Man Says They Make Their Money in the City and Reside Outside

Several men well acquainted with local market conditions were recommending certain changes, this morning, believing that their ideas were worth while.

"There are a number of market gardeners around this town," said one, "who peddle their products about the city, live out in the country a mile or two, and contribute not one cent to the upkeep of the municipality. If a local fruit dealer takes a basket of oranges around the streets he is liable to a fine unless he has a license. It is a good plan to protect the merchants, as much as possible, but gardeners and fruit men carry vegetables and fruits, such as are sold by these country peddlers, who go from house to house and from street to street, and contribute their taxes to one of the townships about the city. There should be a license on these people or everyone should have to pay it."

Market Customs.

"That's like the way they do on the market," said another man. "The rate on the market is ten cents for a double waggon with a team, and five cents for a single outfit. I have seen them bring in two single waggons, piled up pretty high, and when they reached the market they would put the entire load upon one waggon to avoid paying for the other. They save five cents in this manner".

"There are some, too," the first man returned, "who bring a double waggon, with a load worth from $75 to $100, and they pay the same amount as the man who has goods worth only $20. Butchers, too, get their money's worth out of the tolls. I've seen them bring seven and eight head of cattle, quartered, and all they paid for selling this lot was ten cents."

Lost Control Of His Temper

Once there was a man whose liver was not working right. When dressing in the morning he had trouble with his collar. Then he lost the collar button. Then he said something.

By the time he got to breakfast he was so irritated that he had no appetite, and quarrelled with his wife. He went to the office with a headache, and when he got there was impossible to business. He bungled it.

When your find yourself easily irritated and lose control of yourself and your temper, look to the condition of the liver, and take one of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills at bedtime.

The dark-brown taste will not bother you in the mornings, the tongue will clear up, digestion will improve and you will not have the tired, worn-out feelings which accompany a sluggish condition of the liver.

Stocking Lakes With Brook Trout

St. Paul, Minn., April 27.—One hundred million wall-eyed pike and four million brook trout will be distributed throughout the lakes and streams of Minnesota this year to provide amusement for sportsmen. The last of the trout are just leaving the hatcheries and crews of men are in the great North woods gathering pike spawn to be hurried to the hatching tanks. Within 60 days the distribution will be finished and a record established of 200,573,700 small fish or "fry," as commonly called, liberated in free waters within seven years. This record is probably unequaled.

In addition to the pike and trout, possibly a half million bass will be planted this fall, when the season for gathering arrives.

When the hot days come, when the asphalt begins to soften, the streets to bake and steam in the wake of the water wagon, and office men dream of lakes surrounded by giant trees and spruce and tamarack, it is expected the rush to the famous fishing haunts of the Gopher state will begin. There are 10,000 lakes in Minnesota, in some of which no white man has ever cast a line. Practically all of them teem with bass, pike, crappie, trout and muskallonge. In the northern part of the state, especially in districts where no lumbering has been done, are virgin lakes unequalled in all the world for game fishing.

Planting approximately 400,000,000 fish fry, propagating them and caring for big game has cost Minnesota $755,238.64 during the past ten years. Included in this sum is the cost of nine tons of beef liver, the dinner

JOCKEY WEDS JAPANESE NURSE

Who Helped Him Back to Health and Happiness.

SEATTLE, WASH., APRIL 29.—In order to marry a girl who nursed him back to health, following a racetrack accident, in which he received serious hurts, Harry Pigrott, well-known jockey, came here with her, and they were wedded at the court house by the Rev. Angus Mantell.

Miss Hanna Horia, the bride, is the daughter of a Japanese. Mr. Pigrott is from Newark, N. J. The couple visited Rast immediately after the ceremony.

DRUG HABIT GRIPS PARIS.

Investigations following a recent epidemic of fatalities in the Quartier Latin of Paris have revealed that the drug habit has gained on Paris late. In one store alone dope fiends buy no less than one hundred pints of cocaine and morphine every week.

So prevalent is the dope habit that a prominent physician declares he can detect its victims by the score every time he takes a round of the cafes. Ether is no longer fashionable, but especially in the artist quarters, morphine is used recklessly. Even the uninitiated can detect those addicted to it in an evening's stroll.

Paris, in the opinion of this physician, is the most drug-cursed city in the world, for, while rich women of other capitals satisfy indulge in various dangerous ways of stimulating their jaded forces, the dope habit in Paris has spread through every class until wholesale degeneracy is threatened.

RAILWAY NOTES

All railroads in the Canadian West complain that their construction programmes are being delayed by a shortage of steel; the demand created by the unprecedented activity in Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia particularly being out of all proportion to the available supply within the Dominions. So serious is the situation that a petition, it is reported, is being sent by the Saskatchewan Legislature to the Federal House, asking that the present duty on steel rails be removed so that the companies may secure what material is necessary fro the United States.

The report for February of arrivals and departures of steamers at Prince Rupert, just received at headquarters of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway in Montreal, shows 60 arrivals and 56 departures at that port for the month as compared with 50 arrivals and 53 departures in January.

Advices have just been received at the Grand Trunk head offices in Montreal to the effect that between September 1st, 1911, and March 1st, 1912, there were 9,788,913 bushels of grain taken into the company's West-for elevator at Fort William. Of this amount 6,982,586 bushels have been shipped out, leaving a balance of 2,-659,493 bushels in store at the present time.

The Twenty-seventh Annual Statement of the Grand Trunk Insurance and Provident Society has been recently published and shows the organization to be in a highly satisfactory position. 3,666 members received from the Society in sick benefits and insurance $45,288 during 1911, or $12.24 per member, while the total number of members certified to be unfitted for further work was 41, the average being 52.80 years as compared with 49.79 years in 1910.

The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway has at present 19 new stations under construction along its lines, and it is expected that all of these will be completed and ready for service before the Spring rush of passenger traffic sets in. The names of the towns at which these stations are being built are as follows: Pacific Junction, Beaudry, Cabot, Ellis, Harte, Knox, Imrie, Hargwen, Obud, Roundorell, Jasper House, Henry House, Fort Qu'Appelle, Semmer MP 4 Alberta.

Cost Dr. Parsons, Victoria Harbor, Ont., writes: "I have used Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills for constipation, biliousness, and kidney trouble, and find them a splendid medicine. I have also used them for my children, and can recommend them to all mothers as a safe and reliable medicine for children."

During the week ending March 30, the Grand Trunk Railway received from Portland, Maine, 1,000 immigrants from Scandinavia arriving at Portland, Halifax, and St. John, who were destined for Ontario and Western Canada. The immigration rush is on and the advent received indicates many another travel of this description from now on until the end of May.

SAGE TEA WILL DARKEN THE HAIR

Restores Faded and Gray Hair to Natural Colour—Dandruff Quickly Removed

There is nothing new about the idea of using sage for restoring the color of the hair. Our great-grandmothers kept their locks soft, dark, and glossy by using a "sage tea." Whenever their hair fell out or took on a dull, faded or streaked appearance they made a brew of sage leaves and applied it to their hair, with wonderfully beneficial effect.

Nowadays we don't have to resort to old-time tiresome methods of gathering the herbs and making the tea. This is done by skilful chemists better than we could do it ourselves, and all we have to do is to call for the ready-made product. Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy, containing sage in he proper strength, with the addition of sulphur, another old-time scalp remedy.

The manufacturers of this remedy authorize druggists to sell it under guarantee that the money will be refunded if it fails to do exactly as represented.

Don't neglect your hair. Get a bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur to-day, and notice he difference after a few days' use.

This preparation is offered to the public a fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists.

REPORTS OF PETERBORO' S. S. ASSOCIATION

Were Received at Last Night's Meeting—A Number of New Officers Were Elected

Annual reports were received from the officers of the Peterborough Sunday School Association at the public meeting held in connection with the convention at Park street Baptist church last evening. These reports, with the exception of that from the Home Department, indicate progress.

The treasurer's report presented by Mr. A. J. Johnston, showed a substantial balance on hand. The report in "elementary grades" by Mrs. Lewis, showed that marked progress had been made in that all-important department. All the schools had been kept in touch with and several recommendations were made for the improvement of the Sunday school work. These embraced a more correct system of grading, separate rooms curtained off, and one or two other items. The Sunday schools of St. Paul's and St. James churches, so the report stated, came nearer the standard of the ideal Sunday school than any others in the city. The latter church had instituted a teachers' training course.

Mr. Robinson presented the report of the Home department. This department was at a low ebb, the report stated. Out of fourteen Sunday schools in the city, only two had kept up the Home department.

Officers Elected.

The report of the Nominating committee recommended the election of the following officers:

President—Rev. W. C. Biddiford, re-elected.

1st Vice-President—Mr. R. J. Kidd, re-elected.

2nd Vice-President—Mr. Jas. Edgar.

Secretary—Mr. F. D. Kerr, re-elected

Treasurer—Mr. A. J. Johnston, re-elected.

Supt. of Teacher Training—Mr. W. J. Chisholm.

Supt. of Home Department—Mr. T. W. Robinson.

Supt. of Primary Department—Mrs. E. D. Lewis.

Supt. of A. B. Classes—Mrs. Brock.

Supt. of Mission Department—Mrs. Fe-

Supt. of Temperance Department—Mr. A. B. Cunningham.

This report was received and adopted.

Farewell Banquet To Mr. W. S. Davidson Held Last Evening

Many Prominent Men of City Assemble to Do Honor to Their Departing Friend—Bright Speeches

The [illegible] entertainment [illegible] proposed [illegible] evening [illegible] Mr. W. S. Davidson, of the firm of Hall, Hladd and Davidson, lawyers, who is leaving shortly to reside permanently in Calgary, Alta.

His Honour Judge Hoyles presided and during the proceedings of the evening Mr. Davidson was the recipient of a handsome signet ring which was presented on behalf of the assembly by Mayor W. H. Bradburn, and also of a splendid fountain pen from the members of the Belmont Club, presented by Mr. C. Fee.

After full justice had been done to the viands outspread, the chairman read the following letter from Mr. R. R. Hall, the senior partner in the firm, which will experience a loss in the departure of Mr. Davidson.

I exceedingly regret that, owing to the dangerous illness of my brother in Ross Hospital, Lindsay, I will have to be absent from the city this evening and shall be unable to attend the banquet given by the citizens of Peterborough in honour of my partner, Mr. W. S. Davidson on the occasion of his departure for Calgary.

Permit me to say that during the eight years that Mr. Davidson has been my partner that our relationship has always been of the most pleasant and friendly character, neither unbroken nor sullied by even a frown. I am very sorry that he has seen his way clear to leave our firm but at the same time I am happy to learn that he is going to improve his position and opportunities in the great west and thence I have much pleasure in joining with you in wishing him every success and prosperity in his new home.

Yours faithfully,
R. R. HALL.

His Honour then proposed a toast to the King, saying:

It is lamentable that we are losing many of our able young men, who are leaving for a wider field in the West, but whether in the East, or in the West, we all honour King George V. and I ask you to drink a toast to "The King".

Mr. W. H. Denham.

In proposing a toast to the guest of the evening Mr. W. H. Denham said:

I have learned to respect and admire Mr. Davidson, and it is with the greatest regret that I think of his going. He has been one of our number—he has shown himself to be one of the brightest gentlemen in Peterborough. I hardly know what to say to do him justice. He has made a success here and we have no fear about his doing likewise in the North West.

All of us are of uncertain residence and when I came to Peterborough I was among strangers, and it is men like Mr. Davidson who have caused me to become greatly attached to the city. Before I ask the gathering to drink the toast of the guest of the evening the Mayor will say a few words.

Mayor W. H. Bradburn.

When I read in the paper, one day last week, that Mr. Walter Davidson intended leaving Peterborough, for the West, said Mr. Bradburn, I was greatly surprised. I feel that we are losing a good citizen and a good fellow all round. He has proved himself a good fellow—he has mixed with us in our different entertainments, in our different sports, and he has always take his part, and perhaps held up somebody else at the same time. When we part from a friend, such as Mr. Davidson, there comes upon us a feeling of deep regret because friends are few and hard to make. But it was never hard to make a friend of Mr. Davidson, and when he goes to the West there is no doubt it that he will make friends there, too. All I can say, Mr. President, and gentlemen, is to wish Mr. Davidson, in his new sphere, every success and I know he will meet with success.

On behalf of the gentlemen present I wish to present you with this signet ring as a token of their feelings toward you.

Mr. W. S. Davidson.

In responding, Mr. Davidson said: I am sure I do not know how to thank you for coming here and honouring me in this manner—for the many kind things you have said of me and for this present which you have made me. I am sure it was not necessary to give me this token to remind me of my friends in Peterborough. I never realized what it was to part with you until to-night, and I assure you that it will be a very long time before I shall forget Peterborough.

Hon. J. R. Stratton.

Eulogistic speeches were also made by other prominent gentlemen. Mr. Stratton, in a brief address, said:

I am glad to join with you in saying a kind word for the guest of the evening. I have been acquainted with Mr. Davidson since his boyhood and it is with feelings of regret that I learn that he is leaving the city and going to the West. As I have said many times I think there are opportunities in the West for young men, more so, perhaps, than in some of the older cities such as our own, and I trust that he will have a happy life in the West, and that he will share in some of the good things in the way of quarter sections that I understand are being divided up. I trust that when he comes back he will be able to settle down and live quietly without the hustle that is necessary to make a living in the East.

Mr. Davidson always looks on the bright side of things, and it is in that manner that he has made the citizens of Peterborough admire and love him. I need not dwell upon the ability [illegible] Davidson. His [illegible] ability in [illegible] dispatch. I have pleasure in saying with you in the hope that Mr. Davidson will go to the front in the City of Calgary, and that we shall hear of him for years to come.

Mr. Orme Gordon.

I am sorry to see Mr. Walter Davidson go away, said Mr. Orme. He has been one of the live wires ready to take a hand at anything that turned up, and a real good sport. I am glad to see that he is going [illegible] a city with seven [illegible] and I hope Cal he will find the [illegible].

Alderman Gordon.

Mr. Gordon, who was the next speaker, said:

The departure of Mr. Davidson is a loss to the city, as well as to us, personally. It is true that he is going to a fine city, but after all it is not as beautiful as ours. However, I think that in that city the people will realize that he is the real original Calgary eye-opener.

It is a pity that such promising young men as Mr. Davidson leave us from time to time, but we must endeavour to replace them for the city needs such men. I am sure the City of Peterborough extends its wish that he will have the very brightest future the West can give to a man of Mr. Davidson's type, standard, and disposition.

Mr. G. A. Gillespie.

Mr. Gillespie said: I can only recapitulate what the Mayor and Mr. Gordon have said that Peterborough loses one of its brightest men. We know that wherever Mr. Davidson goes the praises of Peterborough will be sung and we wish him every success in his new venture.

Mr. E. C. Patterson.

Mr. Patterson said he would not detain the assembly long, but as a citizen of Peterborough, and as a member of the Peterborough Club Executive, the departure of Mr. Davidson was regretted. We wish him God speed and success.

Mr. C. Fee.

Mr. C. Fee, representing the Belmont Club, then addressed the gathering and said:

We have heard of the many qualities of Mr. Davidson, but there is yet another of which I wish to speak. We have had many amateur minstrel shows in the city which have been ably assisted by Mr. Davidson, and the Belmont Club realizes that he is a really good fellow and are sorry to lose him. I would, on their behalf, ask you to accept this fountain pen, which Mr. Fred Heaslop will present to you as a token of their esteem.

Mr. Davidson Ably Responded.

Brief addresses were also rendered by Messrs. W. McIlroy of the Belmont Club, E. C. McLeod, the successor to Mr. Davidson, representing the Lacrosse League, Lynch of the Chemong Yacht Club, and W. Thompson of the Jacks Lake Club and E. Deane.

A toast was then proposed to the professions and with it was coupled the names of Messrs. F. D. Kerr and E. L. Goodwill, who ably responded.

The Musical Element.

In their usual well-balanced and polished style the Philharonic Quartette, namely Messrs. H. Lee, J. Cairns, J. New and A. New rendered vocal quartettes, which were enthusiastically recalled. Their voices, individually rich and well controlled, were heard to great advantage, and among their contributions were "We Remember," "O Peaceful Night," and a beautiful setting by Batchelder of "Killarney."

The evening closed shortly after midnight with the singing of "Auld Lang Syne."

BRIDGE AT GANNON'S NARROW'S DAMAGED

Mr. oJs. Stabler and his son, Harry Stabler, of Harvey, are in the city today. They left their home this morning at 4.45 o'clock, walked the first mile, canoed the next five miles, and walked six miles from Gannon's Narrows to the Ennismore cross, where they took the stage for Peterborough. Mr. Stabler reports that the bridge at the Narrows has been damaged with the high water and ice, to the extent of $200. The County will require to take immediate steps to put the bridge in commission again for traffic. The bridge at Sandy Creek has been disturbed and the township will have to spend about $50 to have it placed in position again.

ECZEMA ON THE HEAD

Mr. Peterson, South Bay, Ont., writes: "For years I suffered a sort of eczema on the head. I tried four different doctors, giving each a fair trial, but the disease grew worse and spread to my arm. I got Dr. Chase's Ointment, and it has entirely cured me. I give you my name because I want other sufferers to know about this splendid Ointment."

Progress is The Watchword Of The Peterborough S.S. Association

Annual Convention of the Association Was Concluded With a Public Meeting at Park Street Last Evening—Two Excellent Addresses by Rev. Mr. Halpenny and Rev. Mr. Cragg Respectively.

"The keynote of success in the work of the Sunday school of to-day is organization."—Rev. C. E. Cragg.

"I am a vision in Peterborough of the adult Bible movement banded together, standing with one voice and striking a blow in the direction of moral reform and in favor of common sense in electing their officers."—Rev. E. W. Halpenny.

"The old time Sunday school teacher was more thought to be the procrastinating leader in the school. This position of prominence has now reverted to the members of the school, with the result that we get a greater degree of permanency and a higher standard of organization."—Rev. C. E. Cragg.

"Twenty dollars gave to the world the greatest Sunday school man that the world has ever known. I refer to Marion Laurence."—Rev. E. W. Halpenny.

"The introduction of senior departments is a fact that will tend to solve the big [illegible] problem."—Rev. C. E. Cragg.

"It's the rarest thing for a Sunday school superintendent to resign even the secretary of an adult class, [illegible] the teacher of another alternating themselves from Sunday school."—Rev. E. W. Halpenny.

"Give men something to do and they will do it. Apply this axiom to the senior members of the Sunday school and note the effect."—Rev. C. E. Cragg.

"Some teachers are over-estimated, others are under-estimated. It is hard to find a balance."—Rev. E. W. Halpenny.

"The Sunday school is an open door of world-wide vision and possibilities which bring man into more vital touch with Jesus Christ."—Rev. C. E. Cragg.

An open challenge to parents: "Can you think of the time in your life when you went to the Sunday school and thanked the teacher for the service rendered to your child?"—Rev. E. W. Halpenny.

The Sunday school room of Park St. Baptist Church was comfortably filled last evening, when an open meeting of the Peterborough Sunday School Association was held. It was a fitting climax to the two-day convention of the association, which opened with a well-attended rally of Sunday school workers at Knox Church on Sunday afternoon, and terminated at the conclusion of last night's meeting.

A number of conferences in connection with the various departments of Sunday school work were held during the afternoon and evening. These sessions were addressed by Rev. E. W. Halpenny and Mr. H. B. Cowan and some good suggestions for the advancement of Sunday school work imparted to those who were on hand to receive them.

The keen interest manifested in the convention is indicative of success. This interest, coupled with individual effort and co-operation of the Sunday school workers of Peterborough, will no doubt create an epoch-making year in the history of this all important phase of church work.

Rev. G. W. Riddiford presided, the meeting being opened with the usual devotional exercises.

ADDRESS BY REV. CHAS. E. CRAGG.

The adult Bible movement [illegible] of much vital importance that is to [illegible] a standing asset. To some it appears as being a [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] considered [illegible] adults and adolescents [illegible] considered suitable for a Sunday school. But there has been a great change in that [illegible] during the last quarter of a century. Three new churches have recently been built in this city, and in each one of these the need for [illegible] school accommodation has been directly emphasized in a practical manner. This indicates a change in what was considered to be the province of the church, where only children were supposed to go. Superintendents talked to these children and became childish. This had the effect of making the Sunday school repellant to the older folks. That day is past, and we are thankfully gratified to realize the change that has come over the Sunday school of the present day.

The keynote of success in the work of the Sunday school of to-day is organization. [illegible] in this we have taken a leaf from the business world, where organization is recognized as one of the [illegible] factors in the attainment of success. [illegible] the principle of organization to the Sunday school [illegible] growth and [illegible] the apathetic [illegible]

[illegible] OF ADULT SUNDAY SCHOOL.

The [illegible] was then thoroughly [illegible] the Sunday school. The position of [illegible] has been reverted to the members of the school, with the result that we get a greater degree of permanency and a higher standard of organization. Give men something to do, and they will do it. Apply this axiom to the [illegible] of the Sunday school and note the effect. There is a growing tendency of men to attend Sunday school. The introduction of senior departments has been largely responsible for this. It will also tend to solve the big [illegible] problem.

Ninety per cent of the members of the Church become members before they are twenty-one years of age. The possibilities of the Sunday school cannot be estimated. It is an open door of world-wide vision and possibilities which bring men into more vital touch with Jesus Christ.

FIVE POINTS OFTEN OVERLOOKED.

Rev. E. W. Halpenny, general secretary of the Peterborough Sunday School Association, addressed the gathering for about thirty minutes. He was in good form, and exerted his extraordinary fire and magnetism to splendid effect. His subject was originally "Trifles," but his oration was largely an impassioned justification for the existence of the Adult Bible Class movement. He interspersed his remarks with numerous verbal illustrations. The speaker instanced a case in Vancouver, where the commission had refused six liquor licences on the strength of a petition presented by the Adult Bible Class movement of that city. The same thing could be accomplished in Peterborough if the right methods were adopted.

Marion Laurence was the greatest friend of Sunday school men the world has ever known. There was a time when he had barely enough to buy groceries for his family. A great convention was approaching, when a prominent member of the church of which Laurence was a member, advanced him twenty dollars to defray his expenses to the convention. That convention gave to the world the greatest Sunday school man the world has ever known.

Rev. Mr. Halpenny emphasized the importance of [illegible] attention to details in connection with the carrying on of Sunday school work. He also outlined five essential points which are often overlooked in the class-room. They are courtesy, [illegible] ment, greeting, invitation and [illegible] It's the rarest thing to meet with the courtesy of an answer when teachers, almost [illegible] from Sunday school. A word of [illegible] is also a rarity. Some teachers are over-estimated, others are under-estimated. It is hard to find a balance. Encouragement and greeting should be freely extended to those to whom the battle of life is a hard one.

A BAR TO SUCCESS.

You can't possibly expect success when you introduce the two-foot pole idea of coming into contact with your class. If your class is on desk to receive you, loss of prestige and confidence will inevitably follow. Always be on hand to greet the members of your class, extend to them the warm hand of fellowship. If you have occasion to invite them to your home for an evening, invite two or three, the presence of the whole class would only serve to incite a row. Above all, do not under-estimate the value of "invitation." There are a number lying around outside who are not being reached, they are waiting for an invitation. Don't overlook the small trifles, they are worthy of closer attention than [illegible] details. The ultimate success of your work hinges upon them. A Presbyterian Church worker once said that there were two [illegible] of the Sunday school, one [illegible] the church and the other led [illegible] in particular. For every two Sunday school scholars that pass into the church, three are unaccounted for. Figures out of every five Sunday schools, from Fort William to the Atlantic, report no additions to their Sunday school.

At the close of the meeting, Rev. Mr. Riddiford, on behalf of the convention, extended the thanks of those concerned in the success and advancement of Sunday school work, for the splendid services rendered by Rev. E. W. Halpenny.

Those on board feel positive that it was the berg that was responsible for the disaster. It was cracked in several places and huge rents were visible, while quite a distance from the side of the berg there projected a wedge-shaped blade, which was probably responsible for tearing open the side of the giant liner and allowing the waters of the ocean to flood her compartments. The berg bore every indication of having been shattered by some great impact.

Other instances could be mentioned to show that Peterborough has not been asleep in the scramble for factories. This is referred to because of the many expressions heard by "croakers" who have possibly been encouraged to a certain extent by the quiet methods of the Manufacturers' Committee and those who attend to the duties of trying to bring new factories to this city.

TWO NEW C.P.R. TRAINS TO COME THROUGH PETERBOROUGH

[illegible] Toronto, Hamilton & Buffalo Railway Company, [illegible] Peterborough, Toronto and Hamilton, [illegible] Toronto to Hamilton, a distance of [illegible] miles, leaving the Union Station at 8.30 in the morning, and returning to Toronto at 7.30 in the evening. By means of this new train, the two day express between Toronto and Havelock will be relieved of all the local traffic between Havelock and Toronto. These day expresses leave and arrive at Toronto at 9 a.m. and 7 p.m. respectively. At present they are overworked. The Tweed accommodations up and down will remain about as they are.

The Ottawa train will probably leave Toronto as late as 11.30 at night and will be the first to come in in the morning. It will be to and from the Union Station, and will be a high-class train in every respect, and will, especially during the session, carry more passengers than any train going or coming into the city to the east. It will have high-class equipment.

KILLED INSTANTLY

ALBANY, APRIL 29.—Hiscell Parsons, of Schenectady, superintendent of the General Electric Company, was killed instantly on Sunday afternoon when a rear tire of his car blew out, causing the machine to pitch upside down into a ditch. J. C. Nicholson of Schenectady, the chauffeur, is in St. Peter's Hospital here with a crushed leg.

He jumped, but did not quite clear the car and his right leg was caught and crushed under the machine.

B. H. Washbrod, of Amsterdam, Mr. Parson's secretary, who occupied the rear seat, escaped injury. He does not remember whether he jumped or was pitched out.

Mr. Parsons was at the wheel when the accident happened and the chauffeur was seated alongside. Mr. Parsons tried to get out of the car through the back seat, but was pinned under the rear of the car. His head was crushed flat. He was but 45 years old.

CHANGE IN PROGRAMME FOR FORMAL OPENING

A change has taken place in the programme for the opening of the Peterborough Protestant Home to-night, necessitated by the inability to be present of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor. At 8.30 a dedicatory service will be conducted by members of the Ministerial Association. Then Mayor Smithurn will take the chair and addresses will be given by the local parliamentary representatives, Judge Boyer of Cobourg, resident ministers and an entertainment programme will follow.

ADVANCE GUARD OF PETERBORO' CANADIAN LEAGUE CLUB ARRIVED IN CITY LAST NIGHT

Pitcher Edward Bartlett, of Rochester and First Baseman Connolly of Newburg, First to Report to Manager Templin.

OTHERS TO-MORROW NIGHT

The advance guard of Peterborough's Canadian League team arrived last night. Pitcher Edward Bartlett of Rochester, N.Y., and First-base man R. A. Connolly, of Newburgh, N. Y., landed in town on the 7.47 C.P.R. train and lost no time in reporting to Manager Templin at the Oriental. The two boys came on from Buffalo together, but did not become acquainted until they reached Peterborough, when they found they were to be team mates. Both are likely looking ball players. Bartlett, who struck out 8 men in three games in the Rochester City League last year, is a well-set-up youngster who has yet to cast his first vote. He is dead anxious to make good here, as this is his first tim out in professional company, and should he live up to his last season's performances he will certainly be heard from around the circuit. He has been working out as steadily as the weather would permit and is in pretty fair condition.

First-baseman Connolly is a rangy player and has an ideal build for the first corner position. He has considerable minor league experience and looks like a good man.

The rest of the bunch will be along to-morrow night, when Peterborough will get its first glimpse of the majority of the ball team that is to wear the blue and white of this city in the Canadian League this season. The classy squad that have been carefully hand-picked by Manager Templin are due here on the 7.47 C.P.R. train tomorrow night and a number of fans will be at the station to welcome the White Caps. It is expected that fourteen players will be on hand to-morrow night, which, with Manager Templin, Outfielder Johnston of Toronto, Infielder Bennie of Hamilton, Pitcher Bartlett and First-baseman Connolly, will make nineteen players who will be out on Thursday for their first practice at Nicholls Oval. One more player, Pitcher Nork of Dickinson College, is under contract and will not report until the end of May, while Templin expects to land a pitcher from the Springfield, Connecticut League Club next week. There is no end word in the letters collected by the doughty little local leader. Instead of grabbing everybody who applied to him for a berth as some of the other managers have done, Templin has gathered his men wisely and the men he is bringing here are players of whose capabilities he is fully aware. He will have the smallest training squad of any team in the League, giving Peterborough a team with the least possible expense, but he believes his men will make good. Of course he is prepared for emergencies and in the event of some of his crew not coming up to their previous performances he has a number of substitutes located whom he can land at a moment's notice so that he is ready for anything that may turn up.

In regard to his battery staff he is confident that nothing in the League will have anything on his selections. In Frank Brode, Irwin Trout and Jas Mooney, he has three peppery, experienced and aggressive catchers, who are in the game all the way. It is likely that all three will be carried, alternating in right field, as all three can hit some. His pitching staff looks good, John Derr the young southpaw whom he landed yesterday from the Haverhill team of the New England League, is a boy who should burn things up around the circuit. Templin shakes hands with himself every time he thinks of this portsider coming to Peterborough and expects him to be of invaluable assistance. Pitcher Harry Scull of Reading, Pa., is also a left-hander and the club will therefore be well provided for in the matter of southpaws. The starboard flingers include Pitchers Ed. Bartlett, of Rochester, whose performances last year in semi-professional ball were remarkable, Wr. Schaeffer, a giant heaver from Reading, Elmer D. Beaver, the pedagogue twirler from Schuylkill Haven, Pa., and Percy Davis of Philadelphia, who comes highly recommended. In reserve is Bryan Nork the Dickinson College captain, who will be available at the end of next month.

The first base position lies between Frank Dolan of Wilmington, Del., and R. A. Connolly of Newburgh, N.Y., the former a left-handed hitter and thrower, and the latter a right-hander. Dolan has the most experience and is a splendid hitter, but Connolly is also said to be a comer and will give Dolan a hard battle for the position.

Templin will play second base himself, which will ensure the sure-stop being located after in proper fashion.

There will be a fight for the other two infield berths. For short-stop, "Babe" Tully of Reading, looks good for the position. He is a big fellow, a wonderfully fast fielder and has a fine whip. Jos. Ulmer, a fast infielder from Philadelphia, will be a contender all the way and will likely be carried as a utility man in any event. For third base there is Earl Hartman, a fearless, aggressive youngster, just out of his teens, whom Templin says is a fast fielder and on his toes all the time. Hartman will be given a chase for the difficult corner by Banzie, a "rookie" from the Hamilton City League. The Ambitious city boy is so sure he can make good with the White Caps that he is paying his own expenses here in order to get a try-out.

For the outfield Willie Schwartz and Jimmy Heard of Reading are expected to land left and centre field fields respectively. Both have had considerable minor league experience, cover lots of ground and hit well. Outfielder Johnston hit over the .400 mark in the Beaches League, Toronto, last season and will be given a chance to make good here.

Manager Templin refuses to make any prophesies. He is not given to the Irl Hicks' stuff like some of the leaders around the circuit, but he says he is satisfied with his team and with the prospects generally. The Ottawa Journal dope that the White Caps might, perhaps, be a first division possibility, however, drew the remark yesterday from "Old Folks": "Wait until we get going and we'll show them something."

With fine weather, the squad will be limbering up at Nicholls Oval on Thursday morning, and from then on, Templin will chase them at top speed until the fireworks begin, two weeks from to-day, at Hamilton.

BASEBALL

The first work-out of the season in connection with the Peterborough Canadian League team took place at Nicholls' Oval this afternoon, when Manager Templin, Pitcher Bartlett and First Baseman Connolly warmed up for an hour or so, getting the kinks out of their system. Stan Cruswell, the local south-paw, reported to Manager Templin this afternoon, and the local leader will give the youngster the benefit of his experience and coaching during the training season.

CASE SETTLED IN COUNTY COURT

Defendant in Case Was Fined Five Dollars and Costs

The case of Frederick Eason vs. James Dickson, complainant and defendant, respectively, both residents of Otonabee, in which the defendant is alleged to have committed trespassing, was settled in the County Court by Magistrate Dumble to-day.

The information complained that James J. Dickson, on April 16th last, wrongfully entered upon informant's land and trapped muskrats, contrary to the Ontario Game Protection Act. This Act provides that where land is enclosed by fences or in the case of water, boundary posts, these posts to be placed on the water's edge and notices at least twelve inches square put up forbidding hunting; these posts to be so placed that they may be seen from post to post. Parties entering such land are guilty of trespass and liable to a fine of from $10 to $5.00.

The informant's land was marsh, or drowned land, made by the raising of Rice Lake by the Hastings dam. In low-water it was simply marsh, covered by bulrushes, etc., and in high-water was deep enough for the passage of gasoline launches.

The defendant saw the notices and was notified not to trespass. It seems that the marsh was a part of a large one, consisting of one hundred acres and flanking on both sides of the river where Dickson and his father before him, had hunted for fifty years.

The defendant had no interest in the lands. The informant had bought it, together with other adjacent land and was in possession under the agreement to purchase.

Mr. Gordon, for the defendant, objected:

(1) That the Magistrate had no jurisdiction, as the title of the land was in question.

(2) That the drowned land was a part of the river and navigable. Anyone had a right to go on this portion of navigable river. The muskrats were wild animals and were nobody's property. Anybody was at liberty to take them. The order reserves the right to use navigable waters contained in the patent deed. The defendant therefore, was not a trespasser.

The Magistrate held (1) Ontario statute 7, Edward VII, Chap 49, created crime and the court to try it. Therefore it was within the Magistrate's jurisdiction.

(2) That the defendant set up no title whatever to the land, and that the informant's title on agreement to purchase, gave him sufficient title to take action against wrong-doers or trespassers on his property.

(3) That the marsh in question was not a part of Indian river, but private property. That the waterfront of the land properly fenced with three posts and notices, under requirement of statute, and that notices were sufficient. The defendant was a persistent trespasser, as he declared he would exercise the right of hunting upon the land until stopped by law.

The defendant was fined $5 and costs, amounting in all to $13.

CASE SETTLED IN COUNTY COURT

Defendant in Case Was Fined Five Dollars and Costs

The case of Frederick Esson vs. James Dickson, complainant and defendant, respectively, both residents of Otonabee, in which the defendant is alleged to have committed trespassing, was settled in the County Court by Magistrate Dumble to-day.

The information complained that James J. Dickson, on April 16th last, wrongfully entered upon informant's land and trapped muskrats, contrary to the Ontario Game Protection Act. This Act provides that where land is enclosed by fences or in the case of water, boundary posts, these posts to be placed on the water's edge and notices at least twelve inches square put up forbidding hunting; these posts to be so placed that they may be seen from post to post. Parties entering such land are guilty of trespass and liable to a fine of from $20 to $5.00.

The informant's land was marsh, or drowned land, made by the raising of Rice Lake by the Hastings dam. In low-water it was simply marsh, covered by bulrushes, etc., and in high-water was deep enough for the passage of gasoline launches.

The defendant saw the notices and was notified not to trespass. It seems that the marsh was a part of a large one, consisting of one hundred cres and flanking on both sides of the river where Dickson and his father before him, had hunted for fifty years.

The defendant had no interest in the lands. The informant had bought it, together with other adjacent land and was in possession under the agreement to purchase.

Mr. Gordon, for the defendant, objected:

(1) That the Magistrate had no jurisdiction, as the title of the land was in question.

(2) That the drowned land was a part of the river and navigable. Anyone had a right to go on this portion of navigable river. The muskrats were wild animals and were nobody's property. Anybody was at liberty to take them. The order reserves the right to use navigable waters contained in the patent deed. The defendant therefore, was not a trespasser.

The Magistrate held (1) Ontario statute 7, Edward VII, Chap 49, created crime and the court to try it. Therefore it was within the Magistrate's jurisdiction.

(2) That the defendant set up no title whatever to the land, and that the informant's title on agreement to purchase, gave him sufficient title to take action against wrong-doers or trespassers on his property.

(3) That the marsh in question was not a part of Indian river, but private property. That the waterfront of the land properly fenced with three posts and notices, under requirement of statute, and that notices were sufficient. The defendant was a persistent trespasser, as he declared he would exercise the right of hunting upon the land until stopped by law.

The defendant was fined $5 and costs, amounting in all to $18.

WILL NOT BE AT "HOME" OPENING

A telphone message was received this morning by His Honour Sir John Gibson, Lieutenant-Governor, stating that owing to engagements that necessarily detained him in Toronto, would prevent his being present to-night at the formal opening of the new Protestant Home building. Hon. Senator Cox also 'phones that he cannot be present on the occasion for similar reasons.

Water Is Still High In Lake

Mr. Andrew Jobe, of Bridgenorth, who was in the city to-day, reports that the water is still high in Chemong Lake, well above the normal height at this time of the year. However, the ice has gone out, and it is expected that the water will soon drop down to somewhere near its usual depth. Although the water flowed over both approaches of the bridge, the structure itself did not break away this season, and the traffic over the bridge was not interfered with.

STRIKE HAS BEEN AVERTED

Machinists Will Not Strike at Present—Demand 9 Hour Day

[illegible]

As further developments have arisen in connection with the machinists of the city, who some time ago made a request for a nine hour day. The strike, which was expected to materialize on May 1st, has been indefinitely postponed, until the International Union take such steps as they see fit to enforce the demands of the local union. It is understood that Adams Hall Ltd., granted the machinists in their employ, a nine hour day instead of the ten hour day as formerly.

SOME THINGS AND OTHERS

House-cleaning is on and the vacuum cleaner plays a big part in it. Apropos, the ladies think that if all the suction wasted on tobacco pipes, cigars and cigarettes during the year, were concentrated during the few days of house-cleaning, in vacuum cleaners, there would be fewer tired women and millionaire tobacco manufacturers.

"Keep out," strikes one as an incongruous notice to be put on a church door, yet such can be seen on the doors of the new Baptist church on Murray street, in letters of such a size that they who see may read. It is only fair to explain, however, that the notice is evidently for the purpose of keeping out the prying youth and others who might seek entrance for some nefarious purpose, and no doubt when the church is completed there will be just as conspicuous an invitation to "come in."

"'Arry" in Peterborough! Has it come to this. A resident declares that he saw on the streets yesterday, a gentleman dressed in a suit similar to the typical garb of the Whitechapel coster. The coat was adorned with "pearlies" on the cuffs, on the pockets, and two rows down the front. Had the trousers been more bell shaped, with a row of "pearlies" down each leg, and the wearer playing a "marf-horgan" the representation would have been perfect.

To-morrow, the systematic and official civic collection of garbage will begin. Citizens are requested to co-operate with the collection of garbage;

MAY DAY

But There Are No Labour Troubles Here

Wednesday, May 1st, is May Day, on which day labour troubles usually break if there be any brewing. This year, however, Ontario is reported to be exceptionally quiet, and in Peterborough at any rate there is ideal peace. Reports from labour headquarters state that there is nothing of any importance in connection with May Day here, and it will likely pass without a thought.

Your Druggist Stops That Itch

If you are suffering from Eczema, Psoriasis or any other kind of skin trouble, drop into our store for instant relief. We will stop that itch in two seconds.

We have sold other remedies for skin troubles, but none that we could recommend as highly as this, a mild wash of Oil of Wintergreen, Thymol, and a few other ingredients that have wrought such wonderful cures all over the Dominion.

This compound is known as D. D. D. Prescription for Eczema and it will cool and heal the itchy, burning skin as nothing else can.

Of course other druggists have D. D. D. Prescription—go to them if you can't come to us—but don't accept some big-profit substitute. But if you will come to our store, we have had the agency for this remedy for so many years that we can tell you all about D. D. D. Prescription and how it cures Eczema.

Or, you can get a free trial bottle by writing D.D.D. Laboratories, 49 Colborne St., Toronto; McDermid & Jury and E. L. Payne, druggists.

The New Ready-to-Use Graining Process

We have passed the age of paint for interior decoration, and have learned to appreciate the beauties of natural wood.

Chi-Namel Gives The New Hardwood Effect In Either Gloss or Dull Mission Finish

To the many owners of homes in which the doors, casings, and other woodwork are either painted or poorly varnished, and in which the floors are of soft wood designed to be covered with Carpets, the Ready-to-Use Graining Process, which anyone can use, makes possible the up-to-date hardwood effect at a low cost of only 2½c per square foot of surface. The use of this Graining Process is equally practical for furniture, tables, book cases, chairs, etc.

We are demonstrating this Process this week and solicit a call from you to see for yourself how it is done.

Quebec Breakwater Crumbles.

Quebec, May 1.—Somewhat of a sensation has been caused by the report that the Government will be compelled to rebuild part of the breakwater extension, which cost nearly a million dollars. The whole frontage is in such an unstable condition, it is said, that a masonry wall will have to be built at a cost of $960,000. It is also stated that the harbor commissioners made representations to the late Government to this effect, pointing out that the construction was faulty.

HARVEST OF DEATH MORE FRUITFUL THAN ANTICIPATED

Scene Was a Dismal One as 306 Victims of "Titanic" Bits were Pass Through Halifax—Were Carefully Guarded

Halifax, May 1.—The sun shone brightly in Halifax yesterday, but there was nevertheless a specter of darkness over the city that could be felt from the time that the church bells began their solemn tolling as the Mackay-Bennett, her after deck piled high with coffins and her forward deck with unshrouded bodies, lying two deep, appeared.

Not more than a score of people saw the bodies carried off the ship to the pier by bareheaded sailors, who rapidly and silently transferred them to the big squad of undertakers. In less than five minutes after the first body was landed the initial hearse in a string of twenty, started off for the extemporised morgue, the sentries at the gate for three hours long saluting with dreary monotony as the dead carriages passed out the dockyard to climb the steep streets.

Never before was the dockyard so carefully guarded. Soldiers on the roofs of the departmental buildings within the walls and on every eminence patrolled, with special instructions to stop every attempt at photographing. In these efforts the police were successful, so that it is doubtful if a single picture was taken. A Halifax photographer who joined forces with three Americans who sought to take pictures was caught by Sergt. Kennedy of the Dominion police, his camera was confiscated and his films were destroyed.

It was startling to see a detachment of Halifax police come up with the Mackay-Bennett. They had boarded the ship at quarantine and their purpose was to prevent newspaper men or photographers getting on the ship in the harbor. A moving picture man followed her up, but at the pier his work was ended.

The story told by Captain Lardner and Captain Hind was a practical narration of facts with no embellishments, simply telling of the search for bodies, which resulted in a harvest of death far more fruitful than had ever been anticipated, for the ship took away about seventy coffins and she snatched from the sea three hundred and six bodies.

So great did the burden of the dead become that Capt. Lardner was forced to return bodies to the sea. Of the 306 found, 106 was returned to the depths, leaving 190 on arrival at Halifax. Of that 190 there were 131 identified, and 59 unidentified. The pathos of this was seen at the morgue yesterday, when friends of F. Sutton of Philadelphia, who had long been here waiting for his body, had to be told that Sutton was one of the identified who had been recommitted to the waters.

At the identification room in the morgue all the satisfaction Mr. Sutton's friends had was to be shown his personal effects.

The bodies of ten were taken to the undertaken rooms of Snow & Co. very soon after landing. They were the remains of M. C. Long of Worcester, Mass.; F. D. Millett of Washington, and E. C. Ostby, which were forwarded by rail last night. Seven other bodies go to-day, those of Col. John Jacob Astor, Isidor Straus, G. Rosenshine, of New York; W. D. Douglas of Minneapolis; W. Vanderhaef of New York; H. J. Allison of Montreal, and E. C. Crosby.

Col. Astor's body goes with the Astor car. The others go by express.

One of the earliest visitors to the morgue was Senator Mackeen, who vainly sought for the remains of Hugo Ross of Winnipeg.

Must Have Canadian Crews.

Winnipeg, May 1.—Committees from both sides of the line representing the several orders of trainmen, conductors, engineers and firemen, are trying to settle the trouble which appears imminent over the Hill lines operating from the border to Winnipeg with American crews run through from Grand Forks, N.D.

To-day the Great Northern and Northern Pacific begin to operate their own trains into Winnipeg. These trains have been operated previously with Canadian crews from the border to this city. The management claim it is the part of economy to bring the trains through with their own crews.

There is no law to stop them, but the railway union on the Canadian side say they will prevent it, even by a strike if necessary.

Seamen Charged With Mutiny.

Portsmouth, May 1.—The seamen of the White Star liner Olympic who left that vessel after the strike of the firemen last week, were brought to the police court here yesterday on a charge of mutiny. The testimony given was merely a repetition of the events connected with the trouble that occurred when the vessel was leaving Southampton. The hearing was adjourned until May 4.

Succeeds Hon. Mr. Lemieux's Father.

Montreal, May 1.—J. E. Corbeil, who, for some thirty years, has been chief of the department of alcohol analysis in the Montreal customs house, has just been nominated inspector-in-chief of customs for the district of Montreal. He replaces H. A. Lemieux, father of Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, who has been superannuated.

Venezuelan Cabinet Resigns.

Caracas, Venezuela, May 1.—The Venezuelan Cabinet resigned yesterday. The reason for the step is not indicated.

New Steamer Launched.

Collingwood, May 1.—The launching of the new Canadian Government steamer "Estivan," which is to be used in the lighthouse service on the Pacific Coast, took place at the yards of the Collingwood Shipbuilding Co. here yesterday afternoon. Miss Helen Currie, daughter of Major J. A. Currie, M.P. for North Simcoe, christened the boat. Following the ceremony, a banquet was held at which Hon. J. D. Hazen, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and Hon. T. W. Crothers, Minister of Labor, spoke. The banquet was tendered by the Collingwood Board of Trade in honor of the two Cabinet Ministers and Major Currie, and was the most notable in the history of the town.

Hon. Mr. Hazen delivered an address on the large program before the Government in the matter of shipbuilding and ship industries, and general marine improvements. The visitors were later entertained at a civic luncheon.

No Elevated Line in Montreal.

Ottawa, May 1.—The city of Montreal, in a protracted hearing before the Minister of Railways, yesterday put up a vigorous fight against approval of the elevated railway, part of the extensive tunnel and terminal plan in Montreal, and won out.

Hon. Mr. Cochrane approved the tunnel under the mountain and to Lagauchetierre street, but referred the rest to the Railway Commission.

Looking For Murderer

Police Are Searching for Person Who Slew L. D. Porter on Lonely Road

VICTIM WAS NOT POPULAR

Minden, Ont., May 1.—Nothing else but the murder of Louis Porter is talked about here. The details point plainly to the fact that the man was murdered from ambuscade close to the road when returning from inspecting some traps which he had set near a rapid two miles from his father's house. The murder took place six miles north of Minden on the Cameron road. The dead man's father says that he left his house about 7 o'clock on Thursday night, and Alex. Ellis, brother-in-law of the murdered man, tells of seeing him pass his house a few minutes later. He says that about an hour afterwards he heard two shots.

When the body was discovered by a search party which worked unsuccessfully all of Saturday and came upon it Sunday noon, it lay in the hollow by an uprooted tree two hundred and fifty yards west of the road and toward Gull Lake. There was evidence that the body had been dragged from the road to this hiding place. The coat collar was drawn up over the head and was smeared along the clothing, and the sock on the left leg had been rolled down over the boot. A number of stones had been overturned by the dragging.

Blood stains on the road told a vivid tale of the tragedy. There was a streak of blood forty-two feet long, ending in a pool. The man had been evidently shot at the beginning of this and had been dropped where the pool was found.

Dr. Pogue has completed a post-mortem upon the body. He discovered three wounds, which does away with the idea that Porter had been shot with his own rifle, as he had only two cartridges when he left his father's house. One wound entered the arm two inches above the elbow inside and back, and comes out about two inches below in the forearm. The second wound, which entered at the right shoulder, penetrated both lungs and shattered the ribs circling the breast, and lodged at the back of the left shoulder.

It is believed that the third wound was inflicted after he had fallen. It entered the abdomen and fractured the pelvis, and the bullet was found in the muscles of the hip at the back. Dr. Pogue says that the man did not die until after he received this wound.

Two men have been found who say that about dusk on Thursday evening they heard shots coming from the place where the murder was committed. They are Charles Wood and Andrew Harrison, who live a short distance south from this place, at the head of Gull Lake. They declare positively that they heard five shots in rapid succession just at dusk on Thursday night. This differs from Ellis, who says that he heard only two shots, with a considerable interval between them.

The body of Porter was buried in the Minden cemetery yesterday afternoon. Nearly everybody in the village and vicinity turned out to attend.

Ellis, the man who last saw Porter alive, is a brother-in-law of the dead man, and it is said that neither Porter nor his father had been friendly with Ellis for some years. In the many theories which are being put forward to explain the murder, there seems to be agreement upon one thing, and that is that Porter was killed by some one who feared him greatly.

It is understood that the dead man had many enemies. No arrest has yet been made, nor is it likely that any will be until after the completion of the inquest, which resumes on Friday night, but which will likely be adjourned until some day next week, before the bulk of the testimony is taken. A provincial detective has been asked for and is expected to-day.

Brantford Man Defrauded Shippers

Brantford, May 1.—H. G. Poulin, who conducted a business from 474 Ontario street, Montreal, with Western Ontario people, was fined $300 here yesterday in the police court, with the option of one year in the Central, for perpetrating fraud.

Poulin had various shipments consigned to his address, which place, however, had never been opened all winter. He secured the shipments, disposed of them, and the shippers never heard from him. L. H. Thompson, Elora, was the most recent victim, having sent a quantity of jute bags to Poulin.

Titanic Funds $1,250,000.

London, May 1.—The Titanic funds, including those collected in Canada and the United States, now aggregate well over $1,250,000. The mayor of Southampton points out, however, that a large number of people are at that place, and he wants the collection to continue. It will not be surprising if the amount eventually reached $2,500,000 on this side, as there are still the proceeds of numerous theatrical and musical performances to come, and most of the incoming steamers are bringing in additional funds collected on the passage. The benefit performance on the Mauretania realized $8,250. The Kaiserin Augusta Victoria brought $1,250.

Taft Is Leading

President and Roosevelt Neck and Neck in Massachusetts

COLONEL TAKES BOSTON

Boston, May 1.—Returns from Presidential primaries held throughout the state yesterday were so incomplete at midnight that it was impossible to say whether Col. Theodore Roosevelt had succeeded in inducing the voters of his party to elect the majority of thirty-six delegates from Massachusetts to the national convention in his favor.

While Boston gave the President a small majority on the Presidential preference vote, the Roosevelt delegates got big majorities. The manufacturing towns gave Col. Roosevelt majorities, and even some of the Cape Cod towns. Senator Murray Crane's home district went against the President.

The Republican vote was much larger than that cast by the Democrats, Champ Clark getting big majorities over Woodrow Wilson throughout.

Returns from 471 out of the 1,068 election precincts, including parts of ten cities and 160 towns out of 39 cities and 320 towns, give:

Republican preferences: La Follette 653, Roosevelt 25,451, Taft 25,215.

Delegates at large: Baxter (heading Roosevelt group) 25,125, Crane (heading Taft group) 21,977.

Democratic preferences: Clark 16,819, Wilson 7,511.

Delegates at large: Coughlin (pledged to Foss) 16,101, Williams (for primary preference) 5,435.

Complete returns from the city of Boston give: Republican preferences: La Follette 249, Roosevelt 10,651, Taft 11,322.

Delegates at large: Baxter 10,913, Crane 10,078.

Democratic preferences: Clark 14,209, Wilson 5,879.

Delegates at large: Coughlin (pledged to Foss) 13,389, Williams 4,680.

Asked About Mail Contracts.

Washington, D.C., May 1.—Mr. Ismay in his evidence yesterday said that none of the company's ships was in the British navy reserve. He told of mail contracts with the British Government but denied that there was anything in the contract calling for high speed.

"Is there any minimum speed?"

"Yes, I think that we are not allowed to put mails on a ship that makes less than 16 knots an hour," Mr. Ismay replied.

Senator Smith questioned the witness at length as to the details of the mail contract. Witness declared that the mail bounty was so small that in itself "would not induce any one to build big ships."

Mr. Ismay said another sister ship to the Olympic is now being built.

MR. PATTERSON SUES.

He Takes Action For Damages Against Michael Farr.

Goderich, May 1.—Evidence of a flatly contradictory nature was given at the sitting of the commission investigating Centre Huron license matters, arising from the charges of Michael Farr, hotelman, that Wm. Patterson, chairman of the license board, had sought a bribe as a condition of Farr's license being renewed.

Patterson's evidence yesterday was that Farr had made a tentative offer to give him (Patterson) $300 if the safety of his license could be guaranteed, and that he had declined to consider any such proposal.

Also conflicting were the statements of James E. Reynolds, another boniface, and John Kelly. The former said that he had neither suggested using money personally to secure renewal of his license, nor had he heard rumors of any such action on the part of others, while Kelly declared Reynolds had spoken of "putting up."

Farr's statement that neither Patterson nor Inspector Asquith was in the habit of paying for meals at his hotel, brought from Commissioner Eudo Saunders a remark that such a practice was reprehensible.

The enquiry will probably be concluded to-day.

William Patterson, chairman of the board, is instituting an action for $5,000 damages for libel against Farr on account of the statement of the latter when in the witness box at the investigation Monday, that Mr. Patterson had offered to secure Farr against the cancellation of his license for the consideration of $300.

It was suggested that the investigation be allowed to stand over pending the trial of the libel suit, but the Provincial Secretary Manns emphatically declined to decede to, and the investigation will go on.

The few lights visible, some stationary, with others dancing about like will-o'-the-wisps, revealed imperfectly the contour of various buildings, but Keith turned sharply to the right, anxious to slip past without being challenged by a sentry. Beyond the brow of the bluff other lights now became visible, flickering here and there, marking where a straggling town had sprung up under the protection of the post—a town garish enough in the daylight, composed mostly of shacks and tents, but now with its deficiencies mercifully concealed by the enveloping darkness. The trail, easily followed, led directly along its single street, but Keith circled the outskirts through a wilderness of tin-cans and heaps of other debris, until he halted his charges beside the black shadow of the only two-storey edifice in the place. This was the Occidental, the hospitality of which he had frequently tested.

A light streamed from out the front windows, but, uncertain who might be harboured within, Keith tapped gently at the back door. It was not opened immediately, and when it was finally shoved aside the merest crack, no glow of light revealed the darkened interior. The voice which spoke, however, was amply sufficient to identify its owner.

"Is that ye agin, Murphy, a-playin' av yer dirthy thricks?"

"No, Mrs. Murphy," he hastened to explain, "this is Keith—Jack Keith, of the 'Bar X.'"

"The Lord deliver us!" was the instant exclamation, the door opening wide. "They do be afther tellin' me to-night av the throuble ye was in over at Carson, an' Oi t'ought maybe ye moight turn up this way. It was a nate thrick ye played on the loikes av 'em, Jack, bot this is a dom poor place fer ye ter hide in. Bedad, there's a half-dozen in the parly now talkin' about it, wid a couple av officers from the fort. Is the nager wid ye?"

"Yes, but we have no intention of hiding here. I'd rather take my chance in the open. The fact is, Kate, we started off for the 'Bar X.'"

"Av course ye did; Oi was shure av it."

"But down on the Salt Fork we ran across a young girl whom Black Bart had inveigled down that way on a lie. We had a bit of a fight, and got her away from him. This is what brought us back here—to put the girl where she will be safe out of his clutches."

The door was wide open now, and Mrs. Murphy outside, her interest at fever heat.

"Ye had a foight wid Black Bart! Oh, ye divil! An' ye licked the dirthy spalpane, an' got away wid the gyurl! Glory be! And would Oi take her Well, Oi would. Niver doubt that, me bye. She may be the Quane av Shaba an' she may be a Digger Injun Squaw, but the loikes av him had betther kape away from Kate Murphy. It's glad Oi am ter do it! Bring her in. O I don't want ter hear no more."

"Just a word, Kate; I don't know whether she has any money or not, but I'll pay her bill, as soon as it is safe for me to come back."

"Oh, the divil take her bill. She'll have the best in the house, anyhow, an' Oi'm only hopin' that fellow will turn up huntin' her. Oi'd loike ter take one slap at the spalpane."

Fully convinced as to Mrs. Murphy's goodwill, Keith slipped back into the darkness, and returned with the girl. Introductions were superfluous, as the mistress of the Occidental cared little regarding ceremony.

"An' is this you, my dear" she burst out, endeavouring to curb her voice to secretive softness. "Shure Jack Keith has told me all about it, an' it's safe it is yez goin' ter be here. Come on in; Oi'll give ye number forty-two; thet's next behint me own room, an' we'll go up the back sthairs. Hilp the young loidy, Jack, fer shure ye know the way."

She disappeared, evidently with some hospitable purpose in view, and Keith, clasping the girl's hand, undertook the delicate task of safely escorting her through the dark kitchen, and up the dimly remembered stairs. Only a word or two passed between them, but as they neared the second storey a light suddenly streamed out through the opened door of a room at their left. Mrs. Murphy greeted them at the landing, and for the first time saw the girl's weary white face, her eyes filled with appeal, and the warm Irish heart responded instantly.

"Ye poor little lamb; it's the bid ye want, an' a dhrap o' whisky. Jack Keith, why didn't ye till me she was done up wid the hard ride? Here, honey, sit down in the rocker till Oi get ye a wee dhrink. It'll bring the roses back to the cheeks av ye." She was gone, bustling down the dark stairs, and the two were alone in the room, the girl looking up into his face, her head resting against the cushioned back of the chair. He though he saw a glimmer of tears in the depths of her lash-shaded eyes, and her round white throat seemed to choke.

"You will be perfectly secure here," he said, soothingly, and can remain as long as you please. Mrs. Murphy will guard you as though you were her own daughter. She is a bit rough, maybe, but a big-hearted woman, and despises Hawley. She nursed me once through a touch of typhoid—yes, by Jove," glancing about in sudden recognition, "and in this very room, too."

The girl's glance wandered over the plain, neat furnishings, and the rather pathetic attempts at decoration, yet with apparently no thought for them.

"You—you have not told me where you were going."

He laughed uneasily, as though he prefer to make light of the whole matter.

"Really, I have hardly decided, the world is so wide, and I had no reason to suppose you interested."

"But I am interested," resenting his tone of assumed indifference. "I would not want to feel that our acquaintance was to wholly end now."

"Do you really mean that"

"Why should I not? You have been a real friend to me; I shall remember you always with a gratitude beyond words. I want you to know this, and that—that I shall ever wish to retain that friendship."

Keith struggled with himself, doubtful of what he had best say, swayed by unfamiliar emotions.

"You may be sure I shall never forget," he blurted forth, desperately, "and, if you really wish it, I'll certainly see you again."

"I do," earnestly.

"Then, I'll surely find a way. I don't know now in what direction we will ride, but I'm not going very far until I clear up that murder out yonder on the trail; that is my particular job just now."

Before she could answer, Mrs. Murphy re-entered, and forced her to drink the concoction prepared, the girl accpting with smiling protest. The landlady, empty glass in hand, swept her eyes about the room.

"Bedad, but the place looks betther than iver Oi'd belaved, wid the gyurl Oi've got tindin' to it. She's that lazy she goes ter slape swapin' the flure. Jack, would ye moind hilpin' me move the bid; shure, it'a rale mahogany, ah' so heavy it breaks me back intoirely to push it 'round."

He took hold willingly enough, and the two together ran the heavy contrivance across the room to the position selected. Once a leg caught in the rag carpet, and Keith lifted it ut, bending low to get a firmer grip. Then he held out his hand to the girl.

"It is not going to be good-bye then, Miss Hope; I'll find you."

She smiled up into his eyes, much of the weariness gone from her face.

"I am going to believe that," she answered, gladly. "because I want to."

Mrs. Murphy lingered until his steps sounded on the stairs, as he slowly felt his way down through the darkness.

"He do be a moighty foine bye, Jack Keith," she said, apparently addressing the side wall. "Oi wish Oi'd knowed him whin Oi was a gyurl; shure, it's not Murphy me noime'd be now, Oi'm t'inkin'."

Left alone, the girl bowed her head on her hands, a hot tear stealing down through her fingers. As she glanced up again, something that glittered on the floor beside the bed caught her eyes. She stopped and picked it up, holding the trinket to the light, staring at it as though fascinated. It was the locket Keith had taken from the neck of the dead man at Cimmaron Crossing. Her nervous fingers pressed the spring, and the painted face within looked up into her own, and still clasping it within her hand, she sank upon her knees, burying her face on the bed.

"Where did he get that?" her lips kept repeating, "Wherever did he get that"

CHAPTER XV.

Keith possessed sufficient means for several months of idleness, and even if he had not, his reputation as a plains scout would assure him employment at any of the more important scattered army posts. Reliable men for such service were in demand. The restlessness of the various Indian tribes, made specially manifest by raids on the more advanced settlements, and extending over a constantly widening territory, required continuous interchange of communications between commanders of detachments. Bold and reckless spirits had flocked to the frontier in these days following the Civil War, but all were not of the type to encourage confidence in military authorities. Keith had already frequently served in this capacity, and abundantly proved his worth under rigorous demands of both endurance and intelligence, and he could feel assured of permanent employment whenever desired. Not a few of the more prominent officers he had met personally during the late war—including Sheridan, to whom he had once borne a flag of truce—yet the spirit of the Confederacy still lingered in his heart; not in any feeling of either hatred or revenge, but in an unwillingness to serve the blue uniform, and a memory of antagonism which would not entirely disappear. He had surrendered at Appomattox, conquered, yet he could not quite adjust himself to becoming companion-in-arms with those against whom he had fought valiantly for four years. Some of the wounds of that conflict still smarted. A natural soldier, anxious to help the harassed settlers, eager enough to be actively employed, he still held aloof from army connections except as a volunteer in case of emergency.

Just now other considerations caused him to desire freedom. He had been accused of murder, imprisoned for it, and in order to escape, had been compelled to steal horses, the most heinous crime on the frontier. Not only for his own protection and safety must the truth of that occurrence at the Cimmaron Crossing be made clear, but he also had now a personal affair with "Black Bart" Hawley to be permanently settled They had already clashed twice, and Keith intended they should meet again.

Memory of the girl was still in his mind as he and Neb rode silently forth on the black prairie, leading the extra horse behind them. He endeavoured to drive the recollection from his mind, so he might concentrate it upon plans for the future, but somehow she mysteriously wove her own personality into those plans, and he was ever seeing the pleading in her eyes, and listening to the soft Southern accent of her voice. Of late years he had been unaccustomed to association with women of high type, and there was that touch of the gentlewoman about this girl which had awakened deep interest. Of course he knew that in her case it was merely an inheritance of her past, and could not truly represent the present Christie Maclaire of the music-halls. However fascinating she might be, she could not be worthy any serious consideration. In spite of his rough life the social spirit of the old South was implanted in his blood, and no woman of that class could hold him captive. Yet, some way, she refused to be banished or left behind. Even Neb must have been obsessed by a similar spirit, for he suddenly observed:

"Dat am sutt'nly a mighty fine gal, Massa Jack. I ain't seen nothin' to compare wid her since I quit ol' Virginia—'deed I ain't."

Keith glanced back at his black satellite, barely able to distinguish the fellow's dim outlines.

"You think her a lady, then?" he questioned, giving thoughtless utterance to his own imagination.

"'Deed I does!" the thick voice somewhat indignant. "I reck'n I knows de real quality when I sees it. I'se 'sociated wid quality white folks befo'."

"But, Neb, she's a singer in dance halls."

"I don't believe it, Massa Jack."

"Well, I wouldn't if I could help it. She don't seem like that kind, but I recognized her as soon as I got her face in the light. She was at the Gaiety in Independence, the last time I was there. Hawley knew her too, and called her by name."

Neb rubbed his eyes, and slapped his pony's flank, unable to answer, yet still unconvinced.

"I reck'n both ob yer might be mistook," he insisted doggedly.

"Not likely," and Keith's brief laugh was not altogether devoid of bitterness. "We both called her Christie Maclaire, and she didn't even deny the name; she was evidently not proud of it, but there was no denial that she was the girl."

"Dat wasn't like no name dat you called her when we was ridin'."

"No; she didn't approve of the other, and told me to call her Hope, but I reckon she's Christie Maclaire all right."

They rode on through the black, silent night as rapidly as their tired horses would consent to travel. Keith led directly across the open prairie, guiding his course by the stars, and purposely avoiding the trails, where some suspicious eye might mark their passage. His first object was to get safely away from the scattered settlements lying east of Carson City. Beyond their radius he could safely dispose of the horses they rode, disappear from view, and find time to develop future plans. As to the girl—well, he would keep his word with her, of course, and see her again sometime. There would be no difficulty about that, but otherwise she should retain no influence over him. She belonged rather to Hawley's class than his.

It was a lonely, tiresome ride, during which Neb made various efforts to talk, but finding his white companion uncommunicative, at last relapsed into rather sullen silence. The horses plodded on steadily, and when daylight finally dawned, the two men found themselves in a depression leading down to the Smoky River. Here they came to a water hole, where they could safely hide themselves and their stock. With both Indians and white men to be guarded against, they took all the necessary precautions, picketing the horses closely under the shadows, and not venturing upon building any fire. Neb threw himself on the turf and was instantly asleep, but Keith climbed the steep side of the gully, and made searching survey of the horizon. The wide area to south, east, and west revealed nothing to his searching eyes, except the dull brown of the slightly rolling plains, with no life apparent save some distant grazing antelope, but to the north extended more broken country with a faint glimmer of water between the hills. Satisfied they were unobserved, he slid back again into the depression. As he turned to lie down he took hold of the saddle belonging to Hawley's horse. In the unbuckled holster his eye observed the glimmer of a bit of white paper. He drew it forth, and gazed at it unthinkingly. It was an envelope, robbed of its contents, evidently not sent through the mails as it had not been stamped, but across its face was plainly written, "Miss Christie Maclaire." He stared at it, his lips firm set, his grey eyes darkening. If he possessed any doubts before as to her identity, they were all thoroughly dissipated now.

As he lay there, with head pillowed on the saddle, his body aching from fatigue yet totally unable to sleep, staring open-eyed into the blue of the sky, the girl they had left behind awoke from uneasy slumber, aroused by the entrance of Mrs. Murphy. For an instant she failed to comprehend her position, but the strong brogue of the energetic landlady broke in sharply:

"A bit av a cup av coffee fer ye, honey," she explained, crossing to the bed. "Shure, an' there's nuthin' loike it when ye first wake up. Howly Mither, but it's toird 'nough ye do be lookin' yet."

HORSE'S LEG SWELLED

Animal Was Too Sore and Lame to Work—Quickly Cured by "Nerviline."

"I have had a long experience in treating horses, and I can safely say that I know of no liniment for strains, sprains, and swelling that is so useful around the stable as Nerviline." Thus writes Mr. Joshua E. Murchison, from his home, Crofts Hill P. O. I had a fine young mare that wrenched her right fore leg, and from the shoulder down she was stiff, sore, and swollen. I applied Nerviline, and it worked like a charm; in fact, that mare was in shape to work a day after I used Nerviline.

Nerviline is a Trusty Liniment

"We have used Nerviline on our farm for twenty-five years and never found it wanting. For man or beast 't is a wonderful liniment."

We have received nearly five thousand letters, recommending Nerviline as a general household liniment, as an all-round cure for aches and pains. One million bottles used each year. Try it yourself. Large bottles of Nerviline 50c; trial size, 25c. All dealers, or The Catarrhozone Company, Kingston, Ont.

The Weak, Lame, Aching Back

Comes From The Kidneys.

Those who have never been troubled with kidney trouble do not know the suffering and misery which those afflicted undergo.

On the first sign of backache Doan's Kidney Pills should be taken immediately so as to avoid years of suffering from kidney trouble.

They go right to the seat of the trouble, heal the delicate membranes of the kidneys and make their action regular and natural.

Mrs. Joseph Throop, Upper Point de Bute, N.B., writes:—"I cannot speak too well of Doan's Kidney Pills. For two years I was so tired life was a burden, and I got up more tired than when I went to bed, and my back was so lame I could hardly straighten up. I took different kinds of medicine, but none of them did me any good until a friend advised me to try Doan's Kidney Pills. I did so, and to-day I don't know what it is to be tired, and my lame back is all gone. I can recommend them to any person suffering with lame back and that terrible tired feeling."

Price 50 cents per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

THE CONCERT

(Short Story.)

The Singer had made a great hit with the audience by his first song. She stood smiling and bowing in the centre of the stage like a tall white lily among the black coats of the orchestra. Her white satin gown fitted her like a sheath. Her neck and shoulders, creamy and soft as the petals of a white rose lost nothing in contrast with the folds of shining satin. She looked so adorably young and sweet and altogether lovely that the First Violin wanted to fall at her feet and kiss the toe of her little white satin slipper. She stood as near that he might have put out his hand and touched hers, but he could only look at her with all his worshipful soul in his dark eyes.

The Pianist looked at her too. But his was a look of pride, of consciousness of possession, of satisfaction, at her success. Her talent was acknowledged, her beauty undeniable, and now he would wear this jewel himself, he would make her his wife. This was her first public concert. Everything depends on first impressions. She had scored a victory. She would go on from triumph to triumph.

She had sung "Vesianelle." Now for an encore she was singing "If I Were a Rose." In her voice was all the pathos and passion that was lacking in the foreign song. It stirred to its very depths the heart of the First Violin. He fairly quivered with the tenseness of his emotions.

"For I'd have all earth and heav'n in you, my dear,
If I were a rose abloom in your garden."

His heart sang the words with the Singer.

The song was ended. The hall rang with applause. The Singer bent her head in pleased acknowledgment. Her lowered eyes swept the seats of the orchestra and rested for one brief breathless, ecstatic moment on the love-lit face of the First Violin. His warm blood stained his cheeks and a look of dark hair swept low on his handsome forehead.

The Singer turned to leave the stage, and as she swept so close to him her garments brushed his knee a tiny square of filmy lace dropped from her careless hand and fell at his feet. If it had been a diamond from the mines of Golconda he would not have grasped it more eagerly. He crushed it in the palm of his hand, waiting until he could thrust it unseen into his pocket. He only knew that he was playing mechanically with the rest, but what he could not have told. Over and over the words of her song floated through his brain.

"Folded close within your hand so warm and white,
If among your tresses then you should place me;
Or, dear love, against your softly throbbing heart—
Then content in love's gloaming rapture
Would I breathe my very life and soul apart,
If I were a rose abloom in your garden."

In the ante-room the Pianist was congratulating the Singer. Yet she knew it was the singing and not the singer, the artist and not the woman, that had stirred his imagination.

The Pianist was a thorough musician. He had lived and moved and had his being in the world of music. What place had he in his heart for a mere woman? He was not even making love to her now. He was so sure of her.

"After the concert is over we will go to Aldrich's for supper," he was saying. "I have ordered a special table with flowers, white roses, your special favourites—"

She waved him aside. "We must go now. It is my turn to sing again."

The concert was over. The audience had left the hall. The Singer was putting on her wraps in the dressing room. Outside stood the First Violin, waiting for a chance to speak to her, to tell her how lovely she looked, how gloriously she sang: to tuck the ridiculous little handkerchief into her precious hand, to receive, perhaps, a kindly smile, a gracious word, and then surrender her for ever to the gloating Pianist, who was waiting impatiently at the outer door to conduct her to supper at Aldrich's.

At last the Singer appeared. The heart of the First Violin was thumping so loudly that it was a wonder the Pianist at the other end of the hall did not hear it. The things that he had thought to tell her trembled unsaid upon his lips. She put her hand in his outstretched one and let it lie there without attempting to withdraw it.

"I love you, oh, I love you!" was what he said, not what he meant to say.

"Hush! Yes, I know," she uttered softly. "I saw it in your eyes. It is love like yours that a woman would give all for. It is I you love and not my voice."

The Pianist at the further door was becoming fretful. The carriage was waiting outside. The horses were pawing the ground relentlessly.

The Pianist walked toward the Singer. "Come," he said curtly. "It is getting late." He frowned at the First Violin.

"Ah," said the Singer, "do not wait for us. We are going to have supper at the Bohemian restaurant around the corner, the First Violin and I."

"What!" roared the Pianist, aghast with rage. "You promised to take supper with me at Aldrich's."

"I beg your pardon," replied the Singer. "I did nothing of the sort. You said you had ordered supper there, but you did not ask me if I would accept it."

"But—but—" the Pianist stamped his foot. "Madam, I forbid my future wife to dine with——"

The Singer shrugged her shoulders. "That is nothing to me. Excuse me, Monsieur Pianist. Permit me to introduce you to my future husband, the First Violin!"

"I thought it was understood that I was to marry you. Have I not been paying attentions to you for the last year?" thundered the Pianist. "I should like to know why you are not under obligation to marry me?"

"You never asked me to marry you, sir," she said, making him a mocking bow and sweeping past him on the arm of the First Violin, who was treading rapturously on air and holding his breath lest it should all prove an enchanting dream.—Boston Post.

HOUSEHOLD NOTES

The Ideal Home.

[A lady subscriber has sent us in three articles on The Ideal Home, that we believe will be read with interest as they apepar from week to week. The writer certainly has an "Ideal Home," and we regret that at her request we have so suppress the name.—Editor.]

My ideal home is not necessarily adorned with the trappings of wealth; neither must it be saddened by pinching poverty. A competence there must be; which, with industry and thrift will preserve its inmates from painful anxieties.

In this home, the husband is the breadwinner, the wife the home-maker, and together they reign as king and queen over the little realm. The children, for there are children in my ideal home, are loyal and obedient subjects, every one; and it never occurs to them to question the divine right of their king and queen to rule.

Order and system prevail; but love and self-sacrifice for Love's sake animates all hearts within this home, an dto be good and do good is their constant rule of conduct. Health, smiling goddess, stands at its portal and scatters happiness and prosperity with lavish hands. The table is not only the place where nature's recurring wants are daily supplied, but a school of manners; yet there harmless mirth disports itself unrebuked, and thought unfettered flows. Books there are in abundance, bringing the culture of all countries and all ages within reach of this charmed circle. Flowers bloom in the window and smile at you from the garden paths with their suggestion of beauty and refinement. Yet, whatever else may be there, the guests who frequent this house are its choicest, most valued ornaments.

Let a child feel you are displeased, not at him, but at the sin he commits. Can an angry person do this?

* * * *

It is very important for the comfort of a home that harassing and depressing subjects of conversation should be excluded, except when it is absolutely necessary to talk about them; and that a habit should be formed of talking cheerfully and good-humouredly, and of refraining from what jars on other people, such as rudeness, impatience, and fault-finding.

* * * *

Many a man is rich without money. Thousands of men with nothing in their pockets and thousands without even a pocket, are rich. A man born with a good sound constitution, a good stomach, a good heart and brain, a pretty good head piece is rich. Good bones are better than gold; tough muscles, than silver and nerves that flash fire and carry energy to every function, and it is better than a landed estate to have the right kind of a father and mother. The man is rich who has a good disposition who is naturally kind, patient, cheerful, forgiving, hopeful and who has a flavour of fun in his composition. The hardest thing to get along with in this life is man's own self. A cross, selfish fellow, a despondent, and complaining fellow, a time and care burdened man, these are all born deformed on the inside. They do not limp, but their thoughts sometimes do.

* * * *

True happiness lies not in living for ourselves alone, but in the performance of every duty that will ameliorate the condition of mankind in general. It seems to have been part of the Divine plan to put man into the world in such a condition that from his birth to his grave he is dependent on some one. When we look around us we see our every interest interlocked and lives and hearts overlap each other to such an extent that we cannot live in happiness unless we possess some degree of benevolence, and were it not for this Divine plan the pathway of many would be cheerless indeed. When we consider the frailty of human life and the common lot of all, we often wonder at the indifference of some to attain that greater happiness and nobler life, which can only be found in the golden text, "Do unto others as you wish to be done by."

There is no better test of purity and true goodness than reluctance to think evil of one's neighbours and absolute incapacity to believe an evil report about good men, except the most trustworthy evidence.

Give girls an object in life—let them fit themselves thoroughly to pursue that object, and there will be fewer unhappy marriages, and less work for the divorce courts.

Specialist Did Skin Trouble No Good

Very Itchy and Disfiguring. Got a Little Cuticura Soap and Ointment and Was Cured.

"For two months I suffered with skin trouble on my arms, and on my legs from my knees down. My arms were badly disfigured, and I kept them covered. It came like the hives, and was very itchy. I consulted a specialist, who gave me medicine, as well as an ointment, but seemed to do no good. It was beginning to appear on my face.

"I got a little Cuticura Ointment and some Cuticura Soap. The first bottle of Ointment seemed to relieve me, before the Cuticura Ointment was finished I was cured. I have not had the least sign of trouble. I think it would have spread over my whole body if Cuticura Soap and Ointment had not cured me. I am delighted with them, and do feel pleased to think I have such a thing I can have confidence in. I tell all my friends about them, and I think Cuticura Ointment is the best I ever saw." Cold-Sore Begins to Heal With First Use of Cuticura Ointment.

"Cuticura Ointment cured a very bad cold-sore that gave me hours of severe pain and loss of sleep. I tried lots of other remedies but nothing did me any good till I tried Cuticura Ointment, and from the very first application it began to heal and now there is not even a scar left." (Signed) Mrs. W. Boyce, Mermaid Farm, P.E.I., Jan. 8, '12.

For more than a generation Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment have afforded the speediest, safest and most economical treatment for skin and scalp troubles of young and old. GIRLS WHO SMOKE.

Apropos of eNw York's fashionable hotel that permits ladies to smoke, Mme. Simone, the Parisian actress, said the other day:

"Well, why shouldn't ladies smoke? There's nothing ungraceful in the habit. On the contrary, to see a pretty woman with a cigarette is a very charming picture.

"Those who object to smoking among women have never, perhaps, seen smoking done decorously. This idea of smoking is that of the old Provencila woman.

"A society girl, calling on this old woman in her cottage, took a cigarette from her gold case, fitted it in a tube of amber, and said:

"'You don't mind if I smoke, do you?'

"'Why, of course not, dearie! Of course not!' said the old woman. 'Jeanne,' she added to her servant, 'go fetch a spill-on!'"

THE BROKEN RESOLUTION.

"'A man can't make a better New Year resolution than, in season and out of season, to mind his own business.'"

The speaker was Representative Henry of Texas. With his grim and witty smile he resumed:

"A Texan at a hotel got acquainted with a millionaire. One night in the hotel lobby as the two men puffed their cigars, the Texan said—

"'I make it a rule to mind my own business, sir.'

"'And a very good rule it is, too, said the millionaire placidly.

"'Yes, sir,' the Texan went on, 'back in '98 I made a New Year resolution to mind my own business, and, by heck, I've stuck to it ever since.'

"'Good,' said the millionaire, as he reclined in his leather armchair and smoked with half-closed eyes. 'Good.'

"'But, sir,' said the Texan, 'there are times when a man must speak out; and I want to tell you, sir, that you are making a terrible mistake in employing as private secretary the young fellow you do. He's not worthy of a position of such trust. The fact is, I've seen him drunk in fashionable theatres and restaurants at least a dozen times. He joy-rides in your motor car in the small hours with all sorts of bad company. He's been seen plugging heavily at several gambling houses. By jingo, sir, I wouldn't trust him with a ten-cent piece. I guess you hired him out of charity—to reform him and all that, eh?'

"'Well, yes, I suppose I did,' muttered the millionaire, and, very red in the face, he added, 'You see, he's my son!'"

A RECITAL

The recital given by Miss Erma Hooper, in the Conservatory of Music Hall, Monday night, was a distinct triumph for this rising young musician. Miss Hooper is a pupil of Miss McGill, and her contributions, last evening, indicated ability of rare promise. The programme proved to be one of exceptional merit, and the many difficult numbers which it contained were executed in a manner that amply demonstrated the versatility of the artist.

Miss Laura Logan and Mr. Edward Hanrahan assisted in the programe, in a manner that was a great credit to themselves and equally great assistance to the artist. The former is a pupil of Miss Choate, and the latter a pupil of Mr. Nelson. Their work was worthy of the warm reception which it received at the hands of a large audience.

The programme was as follows:

1. "Arabesque" ..... Lack
2. Song: "The Blacksmith" ..... Slater
3. (a) "Sanata Op. 49 (No. 1) ..... Beethoven
   (b) "Two Larks" ..... Leschetsky
   (c) "Confidence" ..... Mendelssohn
4. Violin solo: "Legende" ..... Bohn
5. Ballads:

"SALT RHEUM"

Had It On Hands For Two Years.

FINALLY SO DID NOT KNOW WHAT TO DO.

Tried Three Doctors and Went to Hospital.

All skin diseases are more or less occasioned by a bad state of the blood, and no one can expect to be free from some form or other of skin trouble unless the blood is kept in good shape. All skin diseases can be very easily cured by the wonderful blood cleansing properties of Burdock Blood Bitters.

This is due to the unrivalled purifying action of Burdock Blood Bitters on the blood, coupled with the thorough manner in which it cleanses and expels the impurities from the body.

Mrs. Richard Coutine, White Head, Que., writes:—"I have been bothered with salt rheum, on my hands, for two years, and it looked so I did not know what to do. I tried three doctors, and even went to Montreal to the hospital without getting any relief. I was advised to try Burdock Blood Bitters, so I got three bottles, and before I had the second used I found a big change, and now to-day I am cured."

Burdock Blood Bitters has been on the market for about 36 years and is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

MAJOR MARSHALL HOWELL

BRIGADIER GENERAL J. MADISON DRAKE, historian of the Army and Navy Medal of Honor Legion, has the records of many extraordinary adventures of the civil war in which individual heroes of the great struggle were pitted against long odds. Among them is that of Marshall Howell, of the Ninth New Jersey Volunteers, who is still hale and hearty, residing at Pen Argyle, Pa. The facts for the story here given were furnished by General Drake.

(Copyright, 1911, by the New York Herald Co. All rights reserved.)

THEY picked Marshall Howell for the service because they noted in him that combination of daring and coolness which recommends men for the hazardous work of the spy and that unselfish patriotism which leads men to accept the chance of inglorious and wretched death.

It was before Petersburg, about June 1, 1864. General Butler had just received a severe check from the forces under Beauregard at Drewry's Bluff and was then occupying an impregnable position at Bermuda Hundred. It was essential that some information be obtained concerning the fortifications at Petersburg, the conditions in that city and the disposition of the Confederates in the neighborhood.

General Butler instituted inquiries among his troops for volunteers willing to venture into the hostile lines on this dangerous mission. Colonel James Stewart, Jr., commander of the Ninth New Jersey Volunteers, presented the name of Howell, a private in Company H, of his regiment, and after consideration of his record for bravery and efficiency he was selected.

Howell prepared for the undertaking with a careful disguise. A ragged suit of butternut was obtained from a Confederate prisoner, shoes to match. For weapons he took a revolver of large calibre and a long bowie knife, keen as a razor. If captured he was to represent himself as a guerilla of Southern sympathies or a Confederate who had wandered from his command. From General Butler he received broad instructions as to the information desired and a roll of new Confederate paper money. For the rest he was to trust to his wits and to his knowledge of the country about Walthall Junction and Swift Creek, where he had previously done scout duty and which he would have to traverse in approaching the city.

He left the federal lines after dark and travelled all night toward Petersburg without incident, following the bypaths and woodland trails. By dawn he was well up to the enemy's ground on the outskirts of the city, near the left bank of the Appomattox. It was his intention to take shelter for the day in a copse, but in making his way through the underbrush he came upon a small clearing in which stood a tiny slab cabin. An aged negro was pottering about the garden, and Howell, assuring himself that there was no one else about, approached him.

The negro was suspicious at first, but the scout set to work to win his confidence and let fall cautious hints of his mission, which met quick sympathy and response. Finally Howell ventured upon an open plea for assistance, which resulted in a complete understanding with the old fellow. He was invited to breakfast, and while he ate his host showed that he was eager and able to aid the cause of the Union.

This meeting proved the happiest possible chance for Howell. The negro was remarkably intelligent and had been in constant touch with the situation in Petersburg, which he visited daily. The scout remained hidden in the cabin throughout the day, obtaining valuable facts as to the Confederate strength, fortifications and movements about the city. The negro supplied him with recent copies of Petersburg papers which were highly important to Howell's purpose and helped him to a knowledge of the surrounding roads.

After spending the night in the cabin the scout felt sure enough of his position to attempt next morning a partial circuit of the Confederate camps. While engaged in this dangerous proceeding he was very nearly surprised by no less a person than General Beauregard himself. He had secreted himself behind a fence on a rise overlooking some of the camps when the sudden beat of hoofs sounded along the road. He had just time to fling himself into a depression when a little band of mounted officers in gray uniform swept by. At their head he recognized the able commander of the enemy's forces, and shortly at sight of the dog the negro became paralyzed with fright. He was instantly seized by the soldiers. All residents of the neighborhood were forbidden to be out of doors at night under the military occupation.

Pursuit by the Bloodhound.

Profiting by the darkness and the momentary confusion Howell dashed aside into the woods and headed in the direction of the river. He was not certain that he had been seen and when he broke out upon the bank he could hear no sounds of pursuit. Groping along for some distance he came to the edge of the city water front. He ran out upon a crumbling wharf and heard the deep baying of a bloodhound in leash.

Howell knew instantly that his escape had been discovered and that the dog was on his trail. Plunging from the wharf into the shallows of the river he began to make his way along the shore, guiding his steps and steadying himself against the current by the branches that thrust out over the stream. He was a strong swimmer, but he hesitated to trust himself to the swollen and turbulent waters. For himself he felt no fear. But he carried with him a responsibility that made life a precious thing.

He heard the dog spring out upon the wharf, and the crashing in the thicket showed that its keepers were just behind. Too late he knew that he should have covered his trail by leaving the wharf at the opposite side and wading around or under it. It was soon evident from excited shouts that the dog had indicated the spot at which he had taken to the water and that the pursuit was approaching along the shore.

He hurried on and had just determined to take to the deeper water when he blundered headlong over a floating object. It was a canoe, a rough dug out of the rudest description, such as the negroes of the vicinity made by primitive processes. He cut the rope by which it was moored with his bowie knife, waded as far as he dared, pushing the craft before him, and then scrambled awkwardly aboard.

There was a small paddle in the bottom of the canoe, an inadequate strip of wood, and with this he tried to head across the stream. The current caught the dugout and whirled it like a leaf, forcing it back into an eddy, where Howell strove helplessly, unable to direct his course or to get headway. At this instant the bloodhound was swimming after Howell, gaining on him perceptibly. Shots were fired at the retreating craft, but it was now so far down stream as to be a poor mark, and the pursuers on the land began to run along the bank, encouraging the pursuer in the water.

It was a strange, mad race. Howell, kneeling in the crazy canoe, labored as he could with his frail paddle, sometimes gaining toward the friendly side sometimes losing again as the swirl of the river drew him away. The dog had fallen silent. With a glance over his shoulder the scout saw that he must be overtaken. The great black head in which the eyes burned with baleful reflection of the moonlight, came on mercilessly as the ravening beast drove along with powerful strokes. Each time he looked the distance between him and the animal was less, and try as he might he could not increase it.

There came a respite when the cloud swept over the moon. Howell redoubled his efforts to cut across stream, hoping that under cover of darkness the hound might swing on down the current. But when the light broke out again the head was scarcely ten feet behind him and the Confederates, hurrying along the shore, raised a cry of triumph.

Howell drew his revolver and, half turning where he crouched, took quick aim and fired. The hammer of the weapon fell short. Rapidly he pulled again and again, and each time the revolver missed fire. In wading from the wharf he had been soaked to the armpits and the caps on all the chambers were useless.

Bowie Knife His Weapon.

The bloodhound was now close at hand, its white fangs showing as it came through the water toward its prey. Howell gave over paddling and raised the strip of wood, bringing it down with all his strength upon the animal's head. The puny weapon fell to slivers in his grasp, and he was left with no means of defence but his Bowie knife.

Drawing the keen blade from his right boot leg, he awaited the attack. When the dog was within reach he slashed violently. At the same instant the hound thrust itself almost clear of the water with a powerful stroke and plunged forward. Howell's movement, which had been futile, had brought the gunwale low. The animal landed half in the canoe and the scout could feel its hot breath in his face as it brought its jaws together with a ringing snap.

Water was pouring in over the side. The dog strove frantically to draw itself in and reach Howell. The scout, thrown violently from his balance, sprawled and floundered. He was helpless for the moment. He clung to the lifted gunwale, bringing his weight to bear upon it and force it down.

The canoe righted partly and the hound was tilted backward. At the same instant Howell was able to brace himself briefly and thrust with his knife once more.

The dog, every muscle strained in the effort to overcome the check and hurl itself over the edge, gave him a fleeting chance. The savage jaws snapped at him once more, but he felt the blade strike the skin of the throat over the tense cords. With a sawing motion he slipped the knife through the flesh.

A spasmodic leap that all but capsized the water logged craft, a hot gush of red, and the animal fell away, its hateful eyes glaring upon Howell to the last.

The Confederates, who had witnessed the struggle with satisfaction, together with a number of the rest of their company and returned their shouting. But the canoe was now beyond range and the broken character of the shore made further pursuit unclean. Howell found himself relieved of immediate danger from his enemies, but in a very precarious position. The canoe was almost full. He had no means of guiding it. And he had lost his hat, with which he might have baled.

Using his hands as a scoop he set about lowering the water in the craft. It was weary, discouraging work, but along toward dawn he had so far progressed that he was no longer in danger of swamping. Meanwhile he had been floating with the current, quite at the mercy of its vagaries, and he noticed that the canoe was being borne ever nearer and nearer to the side on which the Confederate army was encamped.

Several times he saw the glow of dying camp fires and heard the stamping of picketed horses. It seemed not unlikely that he must drift aimlessly until some hostile outpost sighted and captured him. He tried paddling with his hands, and at last, just as the sky began to lighten, he was able to bring the canoe to the inshore that it grounded on a jutting bar.

He was now in the enemy's territory, where he must make shift to spend the day. His first care was to roll and empty the canoe, his next to find a place along the water's edge where he might hide it. Coming to a spot where the bushes overhung the stream, he shoved the dugout inside the natural barrier, moored it as best he could and stretched himself at full length upon the bottom.

For fourteen hours Howell kept that position. He dared not move, scarcely to breathe. The sun rose to the calling of many bugles, and presently the stir of an extensive camp told him that he had taken up quarters within a stone's throw of the main Confederate position. The pleasant scent of cooking wafted to him. He fed on that scent for breakfast, dinner and supper.

All day long soldiers in gray uniform were strolling along the shore above him. A group of them went bathing on the bar. He could hear every word they spoke, and he feared lest some more venturesome should swim abreast the bushes where he lay concealed. In the afternoon a young private found an overhanging rock not ten paces from him whereon he installed himself with rod and line. Howell was a silent partner in that fishing venture, and the fisherman himself never wished half so earnestly for good luck as did Howell, that the man might speedily betake himself off. Later horses were led down to the brink, and there was another danger of discovery from the cavalrymen.

It was with thankful heart that the famished scout saw the day waning. He waited until darkness had fallen and then cautiously lifted his cramped limbs and struggled ashore. He cut down a sapling with his knife and fashioned himself a pole wherewith he might propel the dugout. Not until midnight, however, was he ready to leave his hiding place. He waited until all the camp fires had died down and the moon was again high before thrusting out into the stream and resuming his journey.

Returning to the Union Lines.

Fatigued, half starved, the scout poled his way through the night. He was running a continual risk from pickets and sentries and dared not take the middle of the stream. Keeping the bank he slipped slowly from shadow to shadow. So carefully did he negotiate the passage that he was not once challenged, although he was several times within sight and hailing distance of outposts.

At the breaking of the second dawn he was safe. Standing up in his frail canoe he saw the first rays of the rising sun streaking the mists of the morning with golden bars, while ahead, over the vista of river and slope and haze, they caught and glorified a distant flag—the Stars and Stripes. He knew then that he had come to Fort Abram Zabriskie.

General Butler found that the reports brought by Howell were invaluable. The knowledge of the Confederate position gained through the dangerous trip aided him materially in planning and pursuing his campaign.

To show the scout how well satisfied he was with his efforts General Butler gave Howell $500 and a furlough. The scout returned to his command in time to take a notable part in the desperate fighting that marked the closing scenes of the war.

Drawing the Keen Blade from His Right Boot Leg He Awaited th e Attack

Tragedy of the Beleaguered Guardians of Allagash Dam.

AWAY up in Northern Maine, sixty miles from the Canadian boundary, is Chase carry, the swiftest bit of water on the Allagash River, and the dread of log drivers as well as of all the sportsmen who pass that way. The big rocks that encumber the channel were once piled up in a great dam, the destruction of which forms one of the most exciting episodes in the history of the early wars between the Yankee and Bluenose lumbermen.

In the fall of 1868 Joe Labree and his partner, Jack McCord, drifted into the settlement Suncook, out of money and looking for work. Times were not the same then as now, when a man can make $3 or $4 a day by paddling sportsmen from lake to lake, and summer was a dull time. About that time two Bangor men named Conners came down the west branch of the Penobscot, picking up men to work in the woods cutting logs at "a dollar a day till snow flies." Joe and Jack jumped at the chance, and soon were members of a crew of thirty men, poling their way up the sluggish Umbazookaus en route to the head waters of the Allagash.

At the period of these events all lumber cut on the Allagash or on any of its tributaries, had, of necessity, to be driven down that river and into New Brunswick, via St. John. To avoid sending so much good American lumber to New Brunswick mills for manufacture, the Conners brothers conceived the idea of building a large dam near the head waters of the Allagash, and thus, by flooding the small lakes lying south of Chamberlain Lake, form a continuous water force from the Allagash to Bangor.

The site of the proposed dam was on an elbow in the river, four miles above Churchill Lake. The men found plenty of suitable timber, and, favored by good weather, made rapid progress, so that when the first cold snap came the dam was nearly completed.

One day two visitors were in camp who had come up from the lower settlements of Canada. They had noticed the fall of water in the river caused by the big dam and had come up to investigate. They said nothing, but it was very evident from their looks and actions that they were not at all pleased with the enterprise, which meant lower water on the Allagash and perhaps hard driving the following spring. Other Canadians came and looked over the dam, but the Conners brothers paid no attention to them and the work was pushed on to completion.

Winter came on and the snow lay three feet deep on the ground, so that work had to be suspended, and the men got ready to return to the settlements. At the last moment the Conners brothers approached Joe Labree and his friend Jack McCard and made them a liberal offer to remain in camp all winter and keep watch over the dam. They said that they did not fear any trouble with the Canadians, but believed it best to be on the safe side. The offer was accepted, and when the crew went out McCard went with them, returning a week later with supplies and a large number of traps.

It was a pleasant and lazy life that Joe and Jack led for the next two months. Nothing was seen or heard from the down river men, game was plentiful and occasionally they would take a run up to Churchill Lake for a day's fishing, always returning with as much trout as they could carry. Five feet of snow lay in the woods and many a hunting trip the two watchers took to the neighboring mountains on their snowshoes. The interior of their cabin was filled with skins and heads that would bring them a handful of money when they should come out in the spring.

One evening, well along in March, McCard, who had been on a visit to the traps, returned with a troubled look. He had seen tracks on the river a few rods below the dam. Drifting snow had made it impossible to trace the tracks, but he was certain that they had not been made by himself or his chum. The two were much disturbed and stayed up late into the night discussing the matter. They were sure that a passing trapper could not have failed to see the cabin, and would hardly have passed without calling in. They came to the conclusion that whoever made the tracks was not on a friendly errand, but nothing was heard from the mysterious footprints, and in a few days the matter was forgotten.

On the afternoon of March 17 a violent snowstorm set in, accompanied by a high wind that whirled and tossed the snow so that it was impossible to see a rod away. All that night and the next day the snow fell, while the men in the cabin watched the drifts pile higher and higher against the dark wall of the forest across the river. At noon of the third day it cleared and a visit was paid to the nearest traps, which were found buried under tremendous drifts. It was intensely cold and the men were glad to get back to the roaring fire in the cabin.

Being very tired the partners turned in early that night. How long they slept is not known, but along toward midnight they were awakened by a glare of light on the cabin walls. Springing from their bunks and looking out they were astonished to see the other cabins near by and the head works of the great dam in flames, while by the light of the fire they could see two men, one crouched in the bushes only a few rods from their cabin with a rifle in his hands, the other standing by and holding a blazing torch.

Before they could get their clothes on the fire was eating through the walls of their cabin, and now a storm of bullets came flying through the chinks between the logs and in at the windows. The cabin burned so rapidly that to hesitate meant to be burned alive, while to venture out meant a run for life, half clothed, into the wilderness, for it was plain that the men at the dam were bent on murder. The occupants decided to go out, that being the only chance for life. McCard was in the lead. He had scarcely stepped to the door when a bullet struck him fair in the forehead and he fell dead in his tracks, while Labree, who was close behind, got a bullet in the left shoulder.

With one glance at his murdered partner, Labree sped on toward the woods, and as he looked back, at a distance of five hundred yards, he heard a terrible explosion. The earth and sky seemed to be lit up for miles around, as from a thousand electric lights. Then all became dark again, and Labree felt as if the earth had opened and swallowed him up. Finally lights appeared again, and he saw that the dam had been blown up. The place had changed so that he hardly recognized it as having been only a few minutes before the head of a one thousand horse power water system. The timber work had been shattered into splinters, and boulders weighing tons had been distributed far down the stream.

Joe Labree made the thirty miles to the nearest settlement, wading through the deep snow, tortured alike by the pain of the wound in his shoulder and the fear of being murdered at every step. He reached the cabin of John Gonyer in an exhausted condition. He was kindly cared for, but when he told his fearful story they only shook their heads and looked sad. They thought him insane.

No one ever found out who blew up the Allagash dam or who was the assassin of Joe's partner. McCard, but it has been said that when Joe was telling his experience at a hotel in Andover, New Brunswick some time afterward, a man jumped from behind the counter and, catching him by the throat, yelled, "It was you we wanted, not the other fellow!" The next day a prominent man was missing from Andover, and it was supposed that he was one of the men who had been employed by the New Brunswick lumbermen to blow up the dam on the Allagash.

GOOD PROFIT IN ELK FARM

These Animals Could be Raised for Meat Just as Cattle Are—Elk Won't Jump Fences.

Mr. George W. Rose, who has a herd of about a hundred elk in the Ozark Mountains, declares that in many parts of the United States elk meat can be produced at less cost per pound than beef, mutton or pork. These animals afford a much greater proportion of dressed meat than cattle do.

When it comes to clearing out underbrush they are more useful than goats. They browse as low as the goats and also twice as high. He advises using both varieties of animals, however, and says that one elk and five goats to five acres will eliminate the brush and weeds. What is more, brush thus cleared stays cleared.

It is asserted that for other reasons no better arrangement can be made than to graze a few elk with sheep and goats. The elk is the natural enemy of dogs and wolves. Mr. Rose says he suffered great depreciation on his stock until he put a few elk in with them. Since then there has been no loss from that cause. A few elk in ten acre pasture will absolutely protect the flocks therein. Even the dogs belonging to the place could not be induced to enter a pasture containing elk.

The cost of stocking an elk preserve is not great, says Fur News. Young elk in perfect condition may be bought for $100 per head or less. A few years ago Mr. Wilson, of Lewisburg, Ohio, paid $100 for three head. A Michigan breeder recently offered a dozen head, all fine specimens, but age and sex not given, for $500.

This is of course a low price, not more than cattle would bring and less than the venison would be worth if they could be sold in that form. The price of such stock is determined by the law of supply and demand, and as long as the present restrictions on the sale of deer and elk are maintained low prices are likely to prevail.

Live elk sold at forced sale have been known to net the owners less than $35 a head, but conditions would soon change if the laws concerning the sale and shipment of venison were generally made favorable for producing it in preserves. The demand for breeding stock would grow and increase the cost of starting, as well as the returns from the business.

The natural food supply is an important consideration in choosing a range for the elk. While elk have done well in blue grass pasture and on the prairie grasses alone they do far better on preserves which have a variety of food—grasses, bushes and trees. Rough lands well watered by streams and having a considerable proportion of forested area are best adapted to their wants.

On an average such lands will support about the same number of elk as of cattle on the same area without impairing the range. There should be thickets enough to furnish winter browse for the animals. A supply of winter forage of other kinds will prevent the too rapid destruction of shrubbery in thickets.

Except in times of snow elk will keep in excellent condition on ordinary grass pasture, but a system of management which regularly furnishes other food to the animals will be found better. For winter hay and corn fodder furnish excellent forage, but alfalfa hay has proved to be the most satisfactory dry food that can be given to either elk or deer.

A little oats or corn, whole or chopped, may be fed each day. Next to hay and corn, and feeding corn and salt affords the best opportunities for winning confidence of the animals and taming them. Salt should be furnished liberally to all deer kept in inclosures. Running water, although not essential, is of great importance in maintaining elk in good condition.

Elk are not nervous like the common deer and seldom jump an ordinary fence. A fence five feet in height is usually sufficient to confine elk, and Henry Binsing, of Cora, Wyo., thinks a four foot woven wire fence is ample. When they escape from an enclosure in which they have been fed they usually return of their own accord. Some herds may be driven like ordinary cattle. A small enclosure for a vicious bull elk should have a strong fence seven or eight feet high.

Male elk have frequently been trained to harness and driven in public. Lorenzo Stratton trained a pair to harness and began exhibiting them at the Cattaraugus County (New York) fair in 1853. They were a feature of the fair for several years, until he sold them in Europe. Exhibitions of trotting elks were common at county fairs in the Middle West a few years ago. Mr. W. H. Barnes, of Sioux City, Iowa, trained a pair and drove them harnessed to a light vehicle. He afterward taught one of them to dive from a platform thirty feet high into a pool of water, and later he exhibited the animal in this act to admiring crowds in Europe.

THE KAISER'S SOLDIERS

A non-commissioned officer of the 17th Hussar Regiment appeared before a court-martial at Brunswick Germany, on a charge of having maltreated a subordinate. He struck the man so violently on the head as to break the ear-drum. "I was in the right," he told the judge. "This man has disobeyed. Besides I only gave him an average blow." "What do you mean by an average blow?" asked the president of the court. "Why a blow which is not satisfied with the full force of the arm." In view of this explanation the court was indulgent and sentenced the non-commissioned officer to only eleven days imprisonment.

An English Chemist has Discovered How to [illegible]

In England the ladies have entirely abandoned wearing rats, which is due entirely to this new discovery.

It has been proven that Henna leaves contain the ingredients that will positively grow hair. That they contain this long-desired-for article is proven every day.

The Americans are now placing on the market a preparation containing the extract from Henna leaves, which is having a phenomenal sale.

This preparation is called SALVIA, and is being sold with a guarantee to cure Dandruff and to grow hair in abundance. Being daintily perfumed, SALVIA makes a most pleasant hair dressing. McDermid and Jury, your druggist, is the first to import this preparation into Peterborough, and a large, generous bottle can be purchased for 50c. Also sold at Payne's drug store.

YOUNGEST MILKMAID

She Will Be Very Wealthy When She Grows Up.

England's youngest milkmaid surprisingly enough, is a little aristocrat, who will be a very wealthy girl when she grows up. This little Miriam Rothschild, a daughter of the Hon. Charles Rothschild, and a granddaughter of Lord Rothschild, who, at the age of three, started milking the Jersey cows at the Home Farm, Lord Rothschild's place at Tring.

Evidently Miriam was a real milkmaid in some previous incarnation, for, practically from the start, she was able to milk with both hands and get good results. "In fact," says a friend, "and this is very remarkable, she had a better idea of milking in the correct way than some boys who start at a much later age."

MR. WILL CROOKS

Labor Orator on Duty to Nation Wife, and Home

Mr. Will Crooks, M.P., speaking in England, gave utterance to the following original aphorisms among others:

Some people's conception of manhood is that a man should be master in his own house. But I say that a man should never be master in his own house. Marriage is a partnership, and don't you forget it.

The man who thinks that the "I don't-care-for-anyone attitude is the manly attitude will live long enough to realise that no one cares for him.

There are no clever people now adays, except those between the age of eighteen and twenty-four. They know absolutely everything they do.

The foundation of the British Empire exist in the homes of the toilers of the nation, and you and I are bound to try to make those homes reasonably and sensibly happy.

"What a fool I should look," says the average husband when told that he should behave as well towards his wife after marriage as before it. "Why, it would look as if I was courting." My answer to him is: My dear chap, you could never look a bigger fool than you did when you were courting.

So long as the ordinary man sublets his responsibilities so long will the present deplorable state of things continue to exist.

I want you to leave off apologising for being working man. Let the people who don't work do the apologising.

BRITAIN LEADING WORLD'S TRADE

A statement issued by the London board of trade endeavors to afford a comparison of the volume of trade of the chief industrial countries of the world. From this statement it appears that in millions of pounds sterling, the import trade of the various countries last year had the following values:—

United Kingdom	494
Germany	383
France	268
United States	263
Belgium	157
Italy	110
Austria-Hungary	106
Russia	92
Canada	84
British India	77
Japan	46
Spain	35
British South Africa	31
Egypt	22

The export trade values were:—

United Kingdom	574
United States	340
Germany	334
France	291
Russia	180
British India	130
Belgium	110
Austria-Hungary	86
Italy	79
British South Africa	47
Canada	43
Japan	32
Spain	30
Egypt	19

Coupled these figures show the volume of trade for each country to have been:—

United Kingdom 930; increase on previous year, 28.
Germany, 701; increase, 49.
United States, 604; increase, 62.
France, 449; increase, 24.
Belgium, 247; increase, 15.
Russia, 231; increase, 18.
British India, 201; increase, 15.
Austria-Hungary, 187; increase, 9.

NOT A NEW SCHEME

Countess Found Him With Know How to Raise Money

A good story is circulated in the clubs and drawing rooms of London. A certain Earl finding himself temporarily short of money, bethought himself of the family jewels, some of which were of considerable value. Upon some pretext or other to get them from his Countess and set out to one of the best known firms of jewellers in the city, and gave instructions for them to be copied exactly in the best artificial stones it was possible to obtain, insisting that the imitation should be so exact that her ladyship would not detect the substitution. The manager listened deferentially, and when his lordship had finished, almost took his breath away by informing him that the Countess had given precisely similar instructions over two years previously, and that what he held in his hands at the moment were the results of he firm's workmanship, and that the genuine articles reposed in their safes at that moment as security for a substantial sum they had advanced her ladyship upon them. Now the Earl is wondering what his wife did with the proceeds.

NO CHANCE FOR THE BOY

Wealthy Young Widow Wanted Her Son to Hobnob With Prince

A wealthy young widow whose home is in the United States but who is now temporarily residing in England, has received something of a shock. She read that the Prince of Wales was shortly to be entered at Magdalen College, Oxford, and saw here a chance for possible social advancement. She therefore gravely wrote a letter to "the secretary" of the College, asking what his fees were per term and if anything extra would be charged for her son, aged twelve, to have a room next to his Royal Highness. Evidently she took the place for some sort of a private institution, and the reply that her son was much too young to be entered there and that it was usual for an undergraduate to matriculate before he went up caused her considerable astonishment. Report has it that she promptly sent and bought a dictionary in order to look up the word "matriculate."

MEN—YOU NEED NERVE

EARLY INDISCRETIONS AND EXCESSES HAVE UNDERMINED YOUR SYSTEM

The nerves control all actions of the body so that anything that debilitates them will weaken all organs of the system. Early indiscretion and Excesses have ruined thousands of promising young men. Nervous drains sap their vigor and vitality and they never develop to a proper condition of manhood. They remain weaklings, mentally, physically and sexually. Have you fears? Are you nervous and weak, despondent and gloomy, specks before the eyes with dark circles under them, weak back, kidneys irritable, palpitation of the heart, bashful, debilitating dreams, sediment in urine, pimples on the face, eyes sunken, hollow cheeks, careworn expression, poor memory, lifeless, distrustful, lack energy and strength, tired mornings, restless nights, changeable moods, premature decay, bone pains, hair loose, etc.

This is the condition our New Method Treatment is GUARANTEED TO CURE

We have treated Diseases of Men for almost a lifetime and do not have to experiment. Consult us FREE OF CHARGE and we will tell you whether you are curable or not.

Public Aroused at Verdict.

Campbellton, N.B., May 1.—A mass meeting of the citizens was held here Monday night to protest against the recent verdict acquitting Dr. W. W. Doherty on a charge of murder in causing the death of Daniel J. Bruce during an argument in the last Dominion election. It was stated at the time that the point of Doherty's umbrella was driven into Bruce's eye, and death followed. Doherty was acquitted and there has been some press criticism. At Monday night's meeting Mayor Murray presided, and resolutions were carried, moved by Rev. T. H. Drumm, and seconded by A. G. Adams.

The resolutions declared that the public conscience had been shocked by the acquittal of Dr. Doherty; that they believed there was a grave miscarriage of justice, and that the Attorney-General's Department be requested to investigate the conduct of the trial and consider means to prevent a recurrance.

Widow to Sue "White Star."

Washington, D.C., May 1.—Under a proceeding in Admiralty Court here yesterday, J. Bruce Ismay, managing director of the International Mercantile Marine, was summoned to appear yesterday afternoon before a commissioner to give testimony to be used in a suit of Mrs. Louise Robbins of New York against the White Star Line. Mrs. Robbins' husband was lost in the Titanic disaster.

Subpoenas also were issued by the Admiralty Court for the surviving officers of the Titanic.

Hotelman's Sudden Death.

Bobcaygeon, May 1.—J. H. Thompson, proprietor of the Rockland House, was stricken with paralysis yesterday morning and died in an hour. He had been in the best of health.

Could Handcuffs Through.

Toronto, May 1.—Arthur Jarvis of Derryowl, committed to Central Prison on the six months for theft, made a clean getaway from a policeman he escorted at the corner of Queen street and Dundas avenue last night. In a crowded gang of 12 prisoners Jarvis was brought to Toronto by John J. Ryan of 92 Parliament street, who is connected with the department of supplies and property. When the train arrived at the Union Station about 9 o'clock Ryan got his men in an express wagon in order to carry them to the prison. All were handcuffed attached to a long chain.

Jarvis was the end man in the wagon and at the corner of Queen and Dundas he very quietly slipped off and ran along a side street. Ryan did not notice that he only had 11 men in the wagon until the vehicle had gone some distance; then he notified a constable. But Jarvis could not be found.

Jarvis broke away by means of a file, which it is believed he picked up somewhere at the Union Station. Probably he found it in the baggage-room, through which the 12 prisoners were taken to the wagon, or there is a possibility that it was surreptitiously handed to him by a local pal.

Jarvis has a bad record, having been confined in Central Prison on several occasions. He is about 28 years of age.

Turkish Vessel Wrecked.

Smyrna, May 1.—The steamer Texas, belonging to the Archipelago-American Steamship Co., struck a mine at the entrance to the Gulf of Smyrna Monday evening and sank. It is reported that 80 of the 100 passengers were rescued.

The Texas was flying the Turkish flag and was engaged in carrying mails from Constantinople to the Levant.

The Gulf of Smyrna is one of the finest harbors in the Mediterranean, and Smyrna itself is the principal seaport of Asiatic Turkey. The entrance to the gulf was extensively mined some time ago by the Turkish authorities in order to protect the port against an attack by the Italian fleet.

The Texas was a vessel of 961 tons net register, built at Newcastle, Eng., in 1883. She was at first called the Olympia, then re-christened the Marguerita, and finally received the name of the Texas.

Unsightly Skin Diseases

Disfiguring skin diseases always seem to appear on the face and hands, so that they cause a feeling of shame, as well as pain and suffering.

Internal treatments have never proven very satisfactory in the treatment of eczema and similar skin troubles, but when Dr. Chase's Ointment is applied you can see for yourself and feel for yourself the benefits which are being obtained.

It soothes the inflamed, irritated skin so that itching ceases, and by its extraordinary healing power causes a new, smooth skin to form where the sores have been.

In every home there are many uses for Dr. Chase's Ointment, as for pimples and blackheads, barber's itch, chafing, erysipelas, chilblains and wherever there is itching skin or a sore or ulcer that refuses to heal. This ointment is pure, clean and pleasant to use and may be applied to the most delicate skin.

Suit Against Harvester Co.

St. Paul, Minn., May 1.—The Government yesterday began its long-planned anti-trust suit against the International Harvester Co., in the Federal District Court here is a petition in equity, this $140,000,000 corporation, popularly called the Harvester Trust, is declared to exist in violation of the Sherman Law, and its dissolution is sought by means of injunctions which will prevent interstate trade, and by the appointment of a receivership. Monopoly and enhanced prices are charged.

In explaining the dispositions of the stock, the petition says that $3,451,-868 was issued to J. P. Morgan & Co., for underwriting services and legal expenses, and $2,148,197 to the same firm in reimbursement for the cash expended to secure the property of the Milwaukee Harvester Co.

Belleville is Growing.

"I Suffered Intense Pains in My Left Side."

Do you realize it is better to be safe than sorry, that it is the best policy to back the world's done before the heart is failing?

Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy

cured Mrs. C. C. Gokey, of A pain here, one of heart disease, such a thousands are now suffering with. Read what she says:

"Before I began taking Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy I had been suffering from heart trouble for some two years. I had grown so weak that it was impossible for me to do my ordinary work in a reliable way, and I suffered intense pain in my left side and under the left shoulder blade. I would sink away on the left side, and was so short of breath that I thought I should never be able to take a full breath again. The least excitement would bring on the most distressing palpitation. I had scarcely taken a half bottle of the Heart Remedy before I could see a marked change in my condition. I began to feel well, had a good appetite, and improved so rapidly that when I had taken six bottles I was completely cured.

THE GENIUS OF OHIO.

It Shows in Inventiveness as Well as in Statesmanship.

"It is not only in statesmen and soldiers and presidents that Ohio has been great. In invention Ohio stands supreme," said John A. Poland, a lawyer of Chillicothe. "The Wright brothers are the most recent inventors who have given to the world a revolutionizing invention.

"The first friction match made in the United States was made in Zanesville, O. In 1842 a man of the name of McGinnis kept a general store there, where he sold everything, including drugs. One day a clerk in McGinnis' was given an order to mix in a mortar a quantity of sulphur and phosphorus. He did it and delivered the compound to his customer.

"That evening the stove boy, a lad named Sheward, in cleaning out the mortar used some shavings to scrape out the mixture that was left. He thought nothing more about it until the next day, when he picked up one of the shavings and carelessly drew one across the counter. It ignited. He directed the attention of McGinnis to the phenomenon, and the latter began to study.

"The result was that McGinnis manufactured the first sulphur matches made in the United States. The store boy afterward became Judge Sheward of Dunkirk, N. Y.

"The first photographs produced in the United States were made at Zanesville. Daguerre, who discovered photography, had made known his secret, and Alexander C. Ross, reading it, improvised a camera from an old accordion and produced the first daguerreotypes. There are some of these old pictures still treasured by the people of Zanesville."—Washington Post.

LONDON'S LATEST FREAK.

The Ethna Club, Which is Both Intellectual and Aesthetic.

The latest freak club in London is called the Ethna. It has rooms on a street just off Piccadilly, and here women and women members meet for intellectual converse.

The rule of the club demands that there shall be as little distinction in the dress and appearance of the members as possible, and both men and women don long flowing white garments of sacklike shape and sandals before they enter the dimly lighted rooms of the club, writes the London correspondent of the Boston Advertiser. Most of the men are clean shaven, and a few of the women have short hair, while those who have long hair twist their locks about their heads as tightly as possible.

No introductions are ever made. Any member is permitted to talk to any other and to talk freely and openly on any subject. The object of the club is to foster free discussion between men and women. Visitors are occasionally allowed, but they must, of course, wear the flowing robes and sandals.

The membership is very limited, and a positive requisite is intellectual work of some sort. Most of the members are writers, others are interested in social problems and work on committees, while still others are members of the great band of men and women in London who seem always on the outlook for the very latest thing in fads and fancies.

Robbed His Employer.

Belleville, May 1.—Joseph Foley, a young man who stole a watch and money and other articles from his employer, Mr. Daniel Grage, while the latter and family were away on Sunday evening, was arrested at Napanee and brought back to this city. He was tried yesterday and pleaded guilty and was remanded for a week for sentence. He had been previously convicted for theft.

Liveryman Ended Life.

Brockville, May 1.—J. Hodge, a well-known citizen of Cardinal Village, ended his life by drinking carbolic acid. Hodge left his home early Monday morning and not returning a search was instituted, with the result that about noon yesterday his body was found under a beathouse. Hodge conducted a livery business, was about 25 years of age, and was married.

Milkers and Springers

Many of the cows now being offered are milkers, or the class for which there is no really reliable demand. More cows could be placed to advantage, as wanted than are coming forward and $60 to $65 would be paid for such, or up to $70 or even higher for something fancy in the Durham or Holstein line, but few of this class are being offered, sales $50 and $60 was paid to-day, and one extra cow was sold at $65, by Fred Armstrong. The ordinary light class of milk cows sell down around $50 and $55, and only inferior sell below these figures.

Veal Calves.

About 200 veal calves were on sale to-day. Prices ranged from $4 to $7 per cwt. for the bulk, as will be seen by sales given below.

Sheep and Lambs.

Wesley Dunn quoted sheep, ewes, at $5.50 to $6.50; rams, $4.50 to $5; yearlings at $6 to $6.50 per cwt.; spring lambs at $8 to $7 each.

Hogs.

Early in the day $6.75 was the price paid, but in the afternoon, $6.90 and $6.95 for selects fed and watered, and $6.40 to $6.65 f.o.b. cars was reported as being paid.

East Buffalo Cattle Market.

EAST BUFFALO, April 30.—Cattle—Receipts 100 head. Market active and strong. Prime steers, $8.60 to $8.75; butcher grades, $6 to $8.

WELCOME WORDS TO WOMEN

Women who suffer with disorders peculiar to their sex should write to Dr. Pierce and receive free the advice of a physician of over 40 years' experience—a skilled and successful specialist in the diseases of women. Every letter of this sort has the most careful consideration and is regarded as sacredly confidential. Many sensitively modest women write fully to Dr. Pierce what they would shrink from telling to their local physician. The local physician is pretty sure to say that he cannot do anything without "an examination." Dr. Pierce holds that these distasteful examinations are generally needless—and that no woman, except in very rare cases, should submit to them.

Dr. Pierce's treatment will cure you right in the privacy of your own home. His "Favorite Prescription" has cured hundreds of thousands, some of them the worst of cases.

It is the only medicine of its kind that is the product of a regularly graduated physician. The only one good enough that its makers dare to print its every ingredient on its outside wrapper. There's no secrecy. It will bear examination. No alcohol and no habit-forming drugs are found in it. Some unscrupulous medicine dealers may offer you a substitute. Don't take it. Don't trifle with your health. Write to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, Pres., at Buffalo, N. Y.,—today the advice received and be well.

DEMOCRAT MAY STEP IN AS PRESIDENT

Terrific Fight is Expected at the Chicago Convention—Massachusetts Split Even Between Roosevelt and Taft

A COMPROMISE CANDIDATE

Special to The Examiner:

BOSTON, MASS., MAY 1.—Practically all the returns of the Republican primaries throughout Massachusetts were known at noon to-day, and the last definite result shows eighteen delegates for Roosevelt and eighteen for Taft. This means an even split in the much-canvassed State of Massachusetts. The leaders of both sides now have to admit the possibility of the ultimate selection of La Follette, as a compromise candidate. In any event there is portended terrific fight at the Chicago convention. Independent sources through out the States are of the opinion that the final result of the Republican split will be the slipping in of a Democrat as the next President of the United States.

WILL RETURN TO THEIR SHIPS

Special Wire to The Examiner.

LIVERPOOL, MAY 1.—A committee of shipowners and representatives of the Seamen and Firemen's Union, and the Transport Workers Federation has to hold a conference in May for the discussion of the conditions which led to the recent trouble with the Seamen and Firemen. In the meantime all the men will return to their ships.

STATES THE TRUTH

Richmond Hill, L. I.—Albert Porter, who has lived here for some time, believes that when a man is bad health finds something that is just what he needs, it is his duty to let the facts be known.

He says: "All winter I had a bad cold and a cough which I could not get rid of. I was badly run down besides. A short time ago I started using Vinol and my cough is gone now and I feel well in every way. This shows what Vinol will do for anyone in that condition and I strongly recommend it to everyone."

The reason Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron preparation without oil, cured Mr. Porter is because it went directly to the seat of the trouble which was his weakened, run-down condition. Its curative, blood-enriching and strengthening properties built up his health and his cough disappeared as a natural result.

We guarantee that Vinol will do all we claim, and will pay back your money if Vinol does not satisfy you. McDermid and Jury, druggists, corner George and Charlotte streets; also Payne's drug store, corner George and Simcoe streets.

TEN FAMILIES FROM OLD LAND WILL EMIGRATE TO PETERBORO'

Parties Interested in Their Immigration Will Receive the Assurance of Mr. Howson That Suitable Employment Will Be Provided For Them.

A quintette of immigrants arrived in the city this morning and were quickly placed by Mr. Howson, local immigration officer, two of them going to Norwood, and the remaining couple to South Monaghan. There is still room for about 800 more, but it is scarcely probable that the supply of farm help in this district will come within gunshot of satisfying the demand.

Mr. Howson was in receipt of a communication this morning from Mr. C. Branch, secretary of an employment committee of the Borough of East Ham, London, England, acting on the advice of Mr. Obed Smith, Superintendent of Emigration for Gt. Britain. The latter has written Mr. Howson relative to the prospect of securing employment, as farm labourers, for ten families. The ages of the heads of these families range from 41 to 28 years.

WILL FURNISH THE PROOF

The employment committee signify their willingness to assist these families to emigrate if their future welfare were assured. Proof of employment as farm labourers for these people from Mr. Howson will ensure the consent of Mr. Obed Smith to their emigration.

Needless to say, Mr. Howson is fully prepared and willing to procure the necessary proof required, and in the course of three weeks or so we may expect to see the objects of this notice landed in Peterborough.

WOULD ASSIST BACHELOR FARMERS

The matter in which S. de Rotzsein, an English Baron and Colonel, finds himself interested—that of supplying the Canadian farmers with suitable wives—has not been dealt with as yet by Mr. Howson. The considerate Baron states in his letter to the local immigration officer, that he has 500 English, 300 German and 200 Scandinavian women who are prepared to marry Canadians in the spring.

The writer makes the request that lonely bachelor farmers write to him, enclosing their pedigree, and other necessary qualifications for entry in the matrimonial field. To these he will reply by enclosing photographs and descriptions of the blushing would-be brides. He also goes on to say that he has about 100 Scandinavian and 250 German farm hands who are wiling to change their address to Canada in consideration of finding suitable employment; farm labour preferred.

PICTURESQUE EMBROIDERIES

Garments Worn in "The Chocolate Soldier" were made by the Bulgarian Peasants and are heavy with intricate designs in needlework.

Perhaps never before in the history of the stage has the craze for local colour led a manager to go to the far-off country where the action of his play was supposed to take place in order to get costumes, scenery, and even furniture that would make the verisimilitude. Yet we will have such an instance here when the much heralded "Chocolate Soldier" comes to the Grand next Wednesday, May 8th and the wonderful dresses of the Bulgarian peasants, as pictured above, will be shown in all their glory of dazzling embroidery.

When F. C. Whitney decided to produce the opera, which is based on George Bernard Shaw's "Arms and the man" made famous by the late Richard Mansfield, he went into the Dragoman Pass of Bulgaria and there bought up dozens of the costumes, shoes, headdresses, coats and uniforms upon which the peasants, men and women, had spent years of toil and which in many instances are the trousseaux of the girls made by themselves, intending to lay them by for the nuptial day. It took more than three months for Mr. Whitney's agent, after the manager had left the country, to complete the purchase.

In nearly every instance the embroideries, gorgeous reds, yellows, greens, and in a few instances, blues, are made on a foundation of heavy linen woven on hand looms and as thick as cloth. They are what the women and men wear at their festivals and dances. Every one is different, each girl having worked out her own fancy. On one occasion in New York when one of the costumes was destroyed by carelessness the costumers nearly had fits in their effort to replace it. No person could be found who could even approximate the work in the rest of the dresses.

Not only are the dresses of the women thus emblazoned, but the clothes worn by the men peasants are weighted down with embroideries. The long, closely fitting trousers of heavy lamb's wool cloth, the hand woven linen skirts with their flowing sleeves, the funny little jackets all are decorated with fine set stitches of the most vivid colours. The coats that these peasants wear dangling coquettishly from one shoulder are no light weight, by the way, they are made of cloth that is like iron and as thick as a board.

A gorgeous figure is the Bulgarian peasant when he is dressed for a gala occasion. But he works for it. During the long winter the whole family, men as well as women, spend hours each day doing the wonderful embroidery on their clothes. Even the native sandals, of heavy buckskin and kid worn by the men in "The Chocolate Soldier" are hand-embroidered.

"We picked up these peasant costumes here and there in the Bulgarian mountains," said Mr. Whitney's agent, who came on here with the dresses. You will see that every one of them is stamped on the inside with the stamp of the Bulgarian government, for there we had to pay a duty to take them out of the country. It was not pleasant, either, getting the costumes there. One had to carry cash, no checks or drafts for these people, and there are brigands in Bulgaria, don't forget that. At first when you go to a hut, the whole family declares it has nothing to sell. But presently, when they see the cash, the father will say: 'Where is that dress you made for the wedding?' Then there is a great bargaining over the dress; they expect you to beat them down. The girl weeps to see her trousseau go, but what can she do? These people work in the summer on the estates of the nobles, but in the winter there is nothing to do and they are very poor. When you understand that about 150 of the women's dresses and an equal number of men's costumes had to be picked up in this way, some idea of the work entailed may be gained."

Perhaps the most lavishly embroidered garment in the opera is the wedding dress worn by Alice Yorke as Nadina. With it she wears a wedding bonnet, a curious affair laden with the fruits of the fields and hung with long strings of coins.

"These coins represent the Bulgarian bride's dowry," the costume agent said, "and the fruits on the bonnet symbolize the harvest and fruition of the girl's hopes, her marriage to her peasant or soldier lover. But if you want to see something really gorgeous, look at the red overdress worn by Nadina in the third act. A Bulgarian girl worked a whole winter on that garment. An audience cannot half appreciate the details of the work on this dress, for it is impossible to see them all from the front."

The whole garment is composed of innumerable little squares, woven odt or red silk thread and made up over hand woven linen, dyed with vegetable dyes as an Indian dyes his thread for his blanket or the Persian for his rug. Scattered over it are tiny bits of glittering glass, cunningly knitted in with silk. Some of these garments were of heroic size when they arrived in this country for the Bulgarian girl is no sylph as a rule. They had to be taken in a lot to fit the trim figures of the chorus.

The first cost of these costumes would strike an American as ridiculous considering that in some instances a year had been spent in making them. The agent said he paid $15.00 for that gorgeous red dress, but he reminds one of the cost of collection, the duty out of Bulgaria and the duty to bring them in here.

"Fifteen dollars is not much, eh?" he says, "but during the long winter a Bulgarian family can live on that. It is a great deal to them. That remarkable furniture in the first act is the exact replica of some found in the room of a young Bulgarian woman of the higher class. The Altar, particularly, is a [illegible] piece of art work and was made by native workmen, so were the hangings."

CANADIAN CLUB MEETS ON FRIDAY

Mr. E. F. B. Johnstone, K.C., of Toronto, Will Address the Members—Nominating Committee to Report

IMPORTANT MEETING

Mr. E. F. B. Johnstone, K.C., of Toronto, will be the speaker at the meeting of the Canadian Club on Friday night which will be the last meeting of the season. Mr. Johnstone is a well known orator and his address is being looked forward to with a great deal of pleasure by the members of the club. At this meeting the report of the Nominating committee covering the election of officers for the coming year will be received. The members will also discuss the celebration of Dominion Day. A full attendance of members of the club is expected.

GAINPOINT, ALABAMA, MAY 1.—Five thousand poor whites, and several hundred negroes are homeless as the result of the floods which swept this place. Many are afloat on rafts in imminent danger of death. The government has sent relief. One hundred and sixty persons must be fed by the government for some weeks.

SWEEPER WINS THE 2,000 GUINEAS

LONDON, MAY 1.—The first of the English turf classics of the present season, the two thousand guineas, was won by Sweeper II to-day. Sweeper was second and Hallicrouse third. Danny Maher, the American jockey, rode the winner against which 6 to 1 was offered in the betting. The favourite, White Star, ran a bad race and finished fourth. Sweeper II was made the favourite for the Derby immediately.

Mr. James Oborne C. P. R. Official Died Suddenly

Examiner Special:

VANCOUVER, B.C., MAY 1. — Mr. James Oborne, General Superintendent of the Canadian Pacific Railway, died early this morning of erysipelas. He came from Toronto only two months ago.

Mr. Oborne was formerly superintendent of this section of the C.P.R., and was well known in Peterborough. Mr. Oborne was in his fiftieth year, and leaves a wife and seven children.

DAUGHTERS OF THE EMPIRE ENTERTAIN OFFICERS AND MEN OF THE 57TH REGT.

Enjoyable Function Held in the Recreation Room of the Armouries Yesterday

The "At Home" given yesterday by the Daughters of the Empire to the officers and men of the 57th Regiment, Peterborough Rangers, in the recreation room of the armouries, was a splendid success. The room was profusely decorated for the occasion, with red, white and blue bunting, and the national colours. Tea was served to the general public from four to six in the afternoon, and in the evening about three hundred officers and men of the regiment, together with a number of their lady friends, participated in the event.

Mrs. (Col.) Clegg, Mrs. L. M. Hayes, Mrs. V. Eastwood and Mrs. Mills acted as hostesses and received the guests upon their arrival. Luncheon was served in the evening from eight to ten, after which a short musical programme was given by a number of the members of the regiment.

One of the main objects of the Daughters of the Empire is to interest themselves in the welfare of the individual members of the regiment, as well as the whole regiment, and to bring the men closer together in a social atmosphere. With this purpose in view the Society conceived the idea of entertaining the Regiment to an "At Home." The success attending their first venture in this respect, will no doubt warrant them in holding a similar function on some future occasion.

By permission of the officers of the Regiment, the 57th Regimental Band rendered a varied musical programme of old-fashioned selections during the evening. The band was under the leadership of Bandmaster Gliddon.

A New Store For Peterboro'

It is understood on good authority that Mr. M. Cameron, of Goderich, will take over the premises recently vacated by Mr. Ed. Huff, special tailors. Mr. Cameron has purchased several of the store fixtures and proposes to open a gent's furnishing store.

The new lessee is an old Peterborough boy, having resided here several years ago, during which time he was a traveller for a well known dry goods house.

STATISTICAL REPORT OF SUNDAY SCHOOLS

The folowing figures will no doubt be noted with interest, embracing as they do the statistical report of associated Sunday schools of Peterborough. They are taken from the report of Mr. F. E. Karr, Secretary of the Peterborough Sunday School Association. The report was presented at the first meeting of the annual convention on Monday evening:

Number of teachers and Officers, 434.

Number of Pupils, 3933.

Total emplment, 4367.

Number of Cradle Roll Members reported from 11 schools, 669.

Number of Home Dept. Members reported from two schools, 218.

Amount contributed to Missions, $1329.20.

Number of Sunday Schools, 17.

LETTER RE CLAIMS FOR DROWNED LANDS

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir,—The Review and Times announced this week that the Government has consented, through its Member for West Peterborough and Minister of Railways and Canals that the dissatisfied applicants of the Township of Harvey would have an opportunity of having their claims re-valued.

The claim of the Township of Harvey, $900, has been accepted by the Government. If the claimants of Harvey are to have their claims revalued, why should not all those "dissatisfied ones" along the line of the canal from Hastings to Bobcaygeon have their claims re-adjusted?

I have claim in the Township of Smith, which has not been satisfactorily settled. Why should not the alleged dissatisfied of Smith have their claims arranged, as well as the so-called injured people of Harvey? I know that the Township of Harvey has had good treatment from the late Government, and I don't see any reason why claims in Harvey should be re-valued, when many of those who have been dissatisfied in the other Townships are not being considered. "British justice."

Yours truly,

A Claimant.

MISSIONARY MEETING

Rev. E. S. Fox Gave Interesting Address at Park St. Church

The Rev. E. S. Fox, [illegible] of the Baptist Convention of [illegible] and Quebec, gave an interesting address in the Park Street Baptist Church on Tuesday evening, under the auspices of the Young Ladies' Missionary Society. Mr. Fox spoke of the splendid work done by the Baptists in South America among the Indians. Many of the pictures exhibited of the country were rare and beautiful.

The services next Sunday morning will be in charge of the Mission Band. There will be a children's choir, and Mrs. Rev. H. Fee will give an address on China and the missionary work done there. The subject for next Sunday evening will be "God's Unsinkable Titanic." Are you on board?

THREE WAGGONS BEGAN COLLECTION OF CITY GARBAGE

Presented a Good Appearance This Morning as They Began Their Work

FAVOURABLE OPINIONS

The equipment for the collection of garbage as provided by the contractor, Mr. Chas. Scriver, was inspected by Sanitary Inspector Spence this morning and afterwards began the rounds of the district that has been laid for Wednesday's collections.

There were three waggons painted green with red trimmings and white lettering on the sides announcing that they are units of the city's garbage collecting system. The waggons were pronounced very satisfactory by citizens who saw them on the market. In the rear of each waggon was a large barrel with a covering, for peelings and such refuse, but they did not appeal to the aesthetic taste of Dr. McPherson. The top of each barrel was about ten inches above the top of the waggon, and were cut down in order not to be visible. The work during the first week or two will be somewhat experimental until the demands of the city are fully known, and the finishing touches will then be added. On the whole, however, the debut of the service was successful. Mayor Bradburn expressed a favourable opinion of the equipment as did Ald. Graham.

Three men are in charge of the waggons and the rest of the outfit for the handling of garbage is complete.

With a little care the residents of the prescribed district will have a good opportunity of keeping their premises free from refuse, the germ and the other refuse which the Medical Health Officer is warring against.

MURDER IS SUSPECTED

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, ONT., MAY 1.—What the authorities at Courtright believe is certainly another murder, was revealed yesterday, when the body of an unknown man, stylishly dressed, and apparently between 40 and 50 years old, was discovered floating in the river. Across the forehead was a terrible gash apparently inflicted by some heavy instrument. Another deep wound extended along the side of the head to the back. The pockets were all empty, but there is not the slightest trace, so far, by which identification could be established. Coroner Dr. Ferguson is investigating the matter.

LIFT LOCK WILL BE OPENED ON JUNE 10

Has Been Overhauled and Put in Condition

The Lift Lock will be opened for traffic this year on Monday, June 10. The Superintendent of the canal states that this should be in good time for navigation. The machinery has been given its usual overhauling and the rest of the canal is being made ready for the first traffic.

LOCAL DELEGATES TO BOLLES CONVENTION

It was announced at the Peterborough Ad. Club dinner last night, that the probable local delegates to the Dallas convention of Ad. Men, would be Messrs. C. F. Manly, H. B. Cowan and Rev. Cameron.

Mr. Cowan stated that about one hundred leading men of the province accompanied taking in the trip. The expenses of the trip would be made many times over in the benefits that would eventually follow by coming in contact with the leading advertising experts of the country. The purpose of the Peterborough Ad. Club is to promote good clean advertising and honest business methods.

The executive have decided to meet semi-monthly throughout the year. This will create interest in the movement being maintained and will have a revivifying effect on the Club as a whole.

"Peterborough Deserves Possibilities Unparalleled."

WEDNESDAY, MAY 1, 1912

BE BRITISH.

Canadian immigration seems to be taking on a character, to cet the injunction of Captain Smith—"Be British." Canadian immigrants in the year ending March 31 last numbered 354,203, compared with 311,804 in the year ending March 31, 1911. Of the newcomers in the fiscal year just closed, 208,827 entered at ocean ports, and 128,710 came from the United States. About 70 per cent. of the immigrants entering at ocean ports last year were from the British Isles. In view of the restrictions imposed a few years ago, following the influx of many who entered the country penniless and became public charges, the recent increase in immigration is the ore satisfactory as it answers a higher standard. The immigrtion of the past fiscal year equalled five per cent. of the population of Canada. There is land enough for all who come;—more space in the open than in the congested cities.

THE VALUE OF DRAINAGE.

One of the many advantages and benefits in draining farm lands is shown in part by the fact that during the exceptionally dry season of 1911 land that was underdrained produced on the average about $16.50 more more per acre than land that was not drained according to data collected by the Department of Physics at the Ontario Agricultural College. Reports were received from a large number of farmers, of whom twenty-five were able to give definite figures on yields on drained and underdrained land, respectively. Three of the number said they saw no difference, but all the others reported increases. Eleven counties were represented in the reports, from Durham, in the East to Essex, in the West. The value of increases, including straw, was figured at October, 1911, prices, and March, 1912, prices. The former showed an average of $15.97 per acre and the latter $17.04, and both together, an average of $16.50. The three who reported no increase were counted in obtaining the averages. The benefits are even more marked in wet seasons, the results being even more satisfactory, but even at $16.50 per acre, drains more than pay for themselves in two years.

The O. A. C. is again renewing its offer of assistance to farmers in laying out their drainage systems. The Department of Physics has a special staff of drainage advisors for this work. There is no charge for the services of these men, the only outlay to the farmer being the travelling expenses, which are low. As the railway fare is only one cent a mile for this work, and as several surveys are always made on one trip, the expenses are divided among the several parties concerned. Anyone wishing to have a drainage survey made should drop a card to the Department of Physics, O.A.C., Guelph, whereupon regular application form will be sent, and later on one of the Department's drainage advisors will make the survey.

DROWNED LANDS DAMAGES.

Mr. Burnham, M.P., announces in his personal journal (in black type) that the Minister of Railways and Canals will graciously allow the township of Harvey to present its case in respect to the claims of those who were not satisfied with the settlement made, in regard to drowned lands; and he intimates that it is "up to" Harvey to look out for itself, even though it has a representative whose duty is supposed to be to help his constituents. Why the representative should thus express lack of confidence in himself is easily understandable, when one recalls the "botch"—to use his own words—made of works he has undertaken. But it would be thought that a man who can achieve dams that won't hold water and under-water wharves should be an authority, on drowned lands.

But Harvey was generously treated by the late government in the matter of roads, bridges and drowned land claims. Now, through Mr. Burnham and the Conservative press of Peterborough, the discontented element in Harvey is brought into prominence. If Harvey's claims are reconsidered, there is just as good reason for all the dissatisfied claimants in all the townships along the line of the canal, to put in their demands. There are, no doubt, many who are dissatisfied with Mr. Binney's awards; but there is bound to be dissatisfaction under the most generous and equitable settlement of claims of the kind. Now that the question is re-opened in respect of Harvey, there seems to be no reason why the dissatisfied along the whole line of the canal should not put in new claims. And doubtless Mr. Burnham, in the noble spirit of waiving responsibility, will, as he does in the case stated, say that "it will now be for" these dissatisfied ones all along the canal "to see that they are not allowed to be at any loss on account of a bad bargain." These dissatisfied ones will naturally look to Mr. Burnham as the nominal representative of the people in his bailiwick to champion their claims.

WHAT ABOUT OUR RANGE.

No doubt the Ottawa Free Press is fully justified in its commendation of Hon. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, on the head of his selection of new rifle ranges for the city of Ottawa. The Free Press says:

"Col., the Hon. Sam Hughes, is to be congratulated upon his choice of a site for the new rifle ranges which are necessitated by the encroachment of settlement upon Rockliffe. The location may seem a little distant to-day, but the minister is looking to the future. He sees that it will not be many years before Ottawa will extend right out to, and even past, Britannia, and he has foresight enough to know that, when that time comes, the new site will be as easy os yof access as Rockliffe is now.

The Connaught ranges, as they will be called, will rival any ranges in the world, both in beauty of surroundings and in room for development. The project is one worthy of a growing Canada and the Minister deserves commendation for his prompt action, and especially for the business-like way in which the property was secured.

Now that Ottawa is "fixed up" with a satisfactory range, it is timely to enquire what progress has been made with Peterborough's new range. Is it like the floating wharf at Little Lake, in a stat of flux or contrary to expectation, is something being done? A few months ago a retired farmer — naturally a keen expert on military requirements—was appointed by the gentle lost of West Peterborough, to select a site for a new range. Has he made his report, and, if so, where is the range? Is it better and more conveniently situated in the interests of the 57th, than the range that was selected by the late representative and government. Will the Peterborough press, as the Ottawa press has done in respect of their new range, be justified in praising Col., the Hon. Sam's selection of a range for Peterborough.

THE NEW NAVAL POLICY.

(Toronto Star)

Mr. Hasen, as Minister of Marine, will confer with the British authorities as to the kind of navy to be maintained by Canada. Mr. McBride, as Premier of British Columbia, is also interested in the matter. It is reported that during his visit to England he will press the British Government to use its influence in favour of a "fleet unit" on the Pacific coast. He also wants yards established there, and vessels built in British Columbia. It is said that this was the plan proposed by the British Admiralty two years ago. But it must be borne in mind that the Admralty plan was that the wohle Canadian navy should be on the Pacific coast, nothing on the Atlantic. The official notes of the Conference contain this passage:

"While, on naval strategical considerations, it was thought that a fleet unit on the Pacific, as outlined by the Admiralty, might in future form an acceptable system of naval defence, it was recognized that Canada's double seaboard rendered the provision of such a fleet unsuitable for the present."

This is the real problem of naval defence for Canada. All the other important divisions of the Empire are either islands or peninsulas. Canada alone has the double seaboard, one part of which cannot be connected with the other by sea, except by sailing almost around the world. The Borden Government might establish a fleet unit on the Pacific coast alone, or it ight place one on each coast. The former course might cause some dissatsfaction in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The latter would involve a considerable expenditure. The navy established by the late Government was to cost about $15,000,000 to begin with, and $3,000,000 a year. It was based upon the idea of dividing the fleet between the Atlantic and the Pacific. This expenditure would have to be doubled at least, if there is to be a fleet unit on each coast.

But we must remember that the Canada of to-day is not the Canada of two years ago. The revenues of the country hve increased, so that the surplus last year was $20,000,000. Besides, as Mr. Willison pointed out the other day, the pioneer work has already been done by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his colleagues. Mr. Willison said of that pioneer work:

"At least, it was the beginning, and the first step is the hardest step to take in any revolutionary change in public policy. It is easy for us in Ontario to advocate contribution to Imperial defence because we have the decided support of public opinion, but I want you gentlemen to remember and to hold in respect those French-Canadian Liberals who fought a hard fight in the initial period of this struggle for contribution to Iperial defence.'

The Borden Government ought therefore to have little difficulty in going beyond the Laurier programme, which was only a beginning, and was rendered difficult by the opposition of the Conservative party in the Province of Quebec. The Laurier Government left two legacies to its successors: a well-filled treasury, and the beginning of a naval policy. It is to be hoped that the hair will make good use of his inheritance.

BETWEEN TWO FIRES.

(Ottawa Free Press)

The Peerless Premier of the Pacific province has taken the bit within his teeth, and has started out for Westminster—not his own New Westminster, on the shores of the Fraser, but the old Westminster on the Thames—to declare that Canada will not be satisfied with any naval policy which will not provide a fleet unit upon the Pacific ocean and thus "give that aid to the Empire which is necessary in the interests of the Empire" and of British Columbia.

He does not care what the influences of the Nationalists in Quebec may be. He has no regard to "political exigencies" in view of a provincial election in Quebec. He knows what he wants, and he is going to have it, if early presentation of his views to the Admiralty can have effect, before Hon. J. D. Hazen gets across the Atlantic and submits the policy of the Borden government, if it has one.

What does Hon. Richard McBride care about conditions in the east as to naval policy? Nothing. His not to worry about the desire of Nova Scotia, the Federal Premier's province, to participate in the naval programme, and to have the Naval College located in Halifax. His not to stay awake nights considering how the interests of St. John, represented by the Minister of the Naval Service, can be so protected as to keep the division fair between that port and its rival, Halifax. His not to decide about the point as to whether Canada shall build its own navy or contribute the price of several Dreadnoughts, as advocated by the "Imperialists" of Ontario and Montreal. A fleet unit he must, and will have.

It is not the first time that Mr. McBride has crossed the ocean to checkmate the plans of a Federal government. The last time it was to embarass a Liberal government, but now he is making trouble for his own party friends. On the previous occasion he got little satisfaction, because Sir Wilfrid Laurier was persona grata with the Government in Downing street. Now, however, he goes over (if, indeed, he is not now in England) to force his opinion upon the Admiralty in advance of those to be presented by a Dominion government of his own party complexion.

What will be the result? Perhaps, when Premier Borden hears of the move, he may leave his spring golf games and his speaking to banquets at long range, and come home to see what is the matter. Meanwhile the Hon. Richard is on the ground, or is nearly there, and he will be able to say that his policy is a clear and definite one, and one in consonance with the request of the Rt. Hon. Mr. McKenna at the defence conference of 1909, whilst the Borden government has no policy, or cannot have any policy, until after May 15, when the attack upon the Liberal fortress in Quebec will have been decided.

Thus the Admiralty will be besieged directly by Mr. McBride with his demand that the Pacific fleet unit shall forthwith be laid down on the shipyards, and by the desire of the Ottawa ministers that nothing shall be done for a little while longer, until "we shall have consulted the Admiralty."

It is an interesting situation, and one as to which the Liberal party need not worry. The worrying will now be done by "the other fellows."

STIMULATING INFLUENCE OF HEROISM IN FACE OF DISASTER

During the past two weeks human nature has been sounded to its depths. Never within so short a space has there been so salutiferous a review of all our philosophy and all our wisdom. And what thought provokin hour again succeeds servant, when conclusions have been reached, when the widow, and the fatherless have accepted what measure of comfort earth can give them, what will remain? Humanity will remain, not the humanity that existed before the foundering of the Titanic, but a better and sober humanity, a humanity less selfish and less cowardly. Through a great sacrifice this old world will be found to have marched forward—a great step.

Our finite minds cannot explain this mystery of sacrifice, because it is a part of and a manifestation of the infinite purpose, a purpose which runs through all history, through all experience and all life. But humanity is always the gainer. A great sorrow has entered into two thousand homes, but a great sympathy has entered into all the homes of all the civilized countries of the world. The positive virtues of the race, among them unselfishness, love, bravery and self-control, have been intensified and extended. All the meanness of mankind has become meaner and more hateful. Greed in its many forms has slunk away to its noisome kennels.

From the heroism displayed on the Titanic's decks humanity has taken fresh hope and fresh courage. We know now that with all our modern vices and all our enfeebling luxury the sheet-anchor of the race is as firm and as steadfast as ever. The musicians who struck up "Nearer, my God, to Thee" as the Titanic sank slowly beneath the waves are crowned with everlasting glory. And the priests, who, rather than crowd into the lifeboats, faced imminent and certain death that they might offer the consolation of religion to their awe-stricken brethren, maintained the highest traditions of their lofty calling. But, true as these things are, may we not believe that elsewhere, on the Titanic's decks there was much actual and potential heroism.

This reflection need not detract in the least degree from the glorious achievements which fortunately were destined to be chronicled. All humanity may well rejoice that the story of the Titanic's musicians reached the ears of the world. It is a simple story, but a story of such compelling force and dynamic energy that for centuries to come it will be making earth a better place. Can it be doubted for one moment that our truest poets and our most gifted writers will see to it that this story is made immortal. In busy city and on lonely prairie, in the camps of our frontier life and in all the wayside places of the world this story will be told and retold in the unwinding and unfolding of men's natures.

The great glory of the deed is that it was carried out by common men, by representatives of the common people. Humble in its grandeur. To keep on playing as the vessel went down, to make the face of death less grim by the strains of a noble hymn, all this was certainly not in the contract. Captain, officers and crew are trained to duty, even to the point of death, by discipline and tradition. It is expressly in the contract. And even the noble bearing of the two priests and their truly heroic conduct is, after all, what the world expects from men who have taken the sublimest vows. Not so with the members of the Titanic-band. There was no particular glamour about their calling. We have a vision of some elderly musician, whose silver hair and rounded shoulders proclaimed him past his prime. Long ago his dream of being a virtuoso was abandoned and for years he has been glad to play wherever the world offered a livelihood. His home is in a back-street of a big English city. But this is one of the men who played "Nearer, My God, to Thee" as the Titanic foundered. Again, we have a vision of a young German, with glasses, sparely built, and his hair brushed straight up from his temples. He is full of German enthusiasm for music, but his pockets for years have been correspondingly empty. His life is still before him, and at times, perhaps, he dreams that he may some day play before a multitude. He is one of the thousands of young Germans that have left their homes to seek fortune abroad. He is sitting next to the Englishman of the back-street, and we see his soul upon his face as his brow bends slowly to the music of "Nearer, My God, to Thee."

Life, fuller and more abundant life these men found in death. In those few moments of exaltation they lived for ever. They need no monument. The priceless marbles of Pere Lachaise are crumbling dust compared to the everlasting memorials that these men have carved for themselves in the hearts of the race and upon the face of time. They have won for themselves in the hearts of the race and upon the face of time. They have won for themselves what all the millions of all the rich are powerless to buy. They have placed upon themselves a stamp of nobility, a hallmark of aristocracy compared to which all the claims of birth and station invoke only a pitying smile.

Who is there amongst us that would not give his all to have the inward assurance that in such moments as preceded the foundering of the Titanic he could be counted upon to play decently his part.—Manitoba Free Press.

FLORIDA---

LAND OF OPPORTUNITY—Home of the successful cultivation of the orange and grapefruit. Strawberries from the fields marketed at Christmas time.

The Florida truck grower can have his vegetable crops, lettuce, celery, cauliflower, potatoes, tomatoes, cabbage, early corn, etc., on the market earlier than any section of the United States, and at a time when other sections have no crops to offer. This gives him a great advantage in the markets of large centres of population.

The crop-growing season is 365 days. No other portion of the United States equals.

The difference between mean monthly temperatures of Florida in January and July is less than 25 degrees, while Maine records 49 and Pennsylvania 44.

The state is in the humid area with approximate maximum of rainfall—you know it takes water to raise crops.

Many acres of good, arable land obtainable at reasonable cost.

Peterborough's Industrial Development

Another crusher has the audacity to say that the Manufacturers' Committee is not alive to the best interests of the city's industrial development. If it were each member would speak out honestly and say that at least seven-eighths of my brains work shall, will and must be used for the successful management of my own private business. The balance may be used in an occasional effort to secure new industries.

This is the policy at present, the same has been the policy in the past and the fruits are visible with a population of less than 20,000, instead of over 50,000 as it should be.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Balance Of "White Caps" Will Be Here To-night

Main Squad of the Peterborough Ball Team is Expected on the C.P.R. Train and Training Will Commence To-morrow Morning—Outfielder Bonzic, of Hamilton, Arrived at Noon To-day.

The main body of the Peterborough ball Club will arrive in Peterborough to-night on the 7.48 C.P.R. train and to-morrow the squad will get down to hard work. Boarding places have been secured for all the players, and everything is in readiness for their arrival. Another addition to those already here is Thirdbaseman Jack Bonzic of Hamilton, who arrived at noon to-day. He is a sturdy youngster of good habits, who is very highly recommended. He played the difficult corner for the Erskines, champions of the Hamilton City League, last year, and is said to be a comer. He had som e experience in semi-professional ball in the West the year before last and will be given a thorough trial here. Templin's squad consisting of the Manager, himself, Pitchers Bartlett and Cresswell, First baseman Connolly and Infielder Bentzie had a couple of hours lively work out at the Exhibition grounds this afternoon. It is expected that practice will commence at Nicholls Oval to-morrow morning. The players will use the Y.M.C.A. dressing rooms and baths, and morning and afternoon practices will be the order of the day.

SALLOW SKIN, BILIOUS HEADACHE AND SOUR STOMACH INDICATES YOU NEED CASCARETS

You're bilious, you have a throbbing sensation in your head, a bad taste in your mouth, your eyes burn, your skin is yellowish with dark rings under your eyes, your lips are parched. No wonder you feel ugly, mean and ill-tempered. Your system is full of bile not properly passed off, and what you need is a cleaning up inside. Don't continue being a bilious nuisance to yourself and those who love you, and don't resort to harsh physics that irritate and injure. Remember, that every disorder of the stomach, liver and intestines can be quickly cured by morning with gentle, thorough Cascarets; a 10-cent box will keep you and the entire family feeling good formonths. Don't forget the children—their little insides need a good, gentle cleansing occasionally. Children love to take Cascarets, because the taste good and never gripe or sicken.

NEWS FROM THE LEAGUE CIRCUIT

The fans were right glad to see Conny Murphy. Conny put up a splendid game behind the bat, and has taken on so much weight during the winter that it is Manager Lee's intention to give him a thorough trial and a chance to fill the utility role on the team. When all is said and done, Murphy deserves credit for the manner in which he can jump in and fill pretty near any position on the field.—Hamilton Spectator.

Hamilton Spectator.—Manager Templin of the Peterborough club has evidently secured a good youngster if the following dope on one of his youngsters, taken from Sporting Life, is to count for anything:

Young Kuts showed some speed in his start against the Newark aggregation, allowing but two hits, and shutting out that heavy-hitting team. Charlie Dodin isn't sure as yet whether or not he will keep Kuts on his stan this season. The probabilities are he will be farmed out to some minor league for another summer's seasoning.

It is understood that Templin has been fortunate enough to pick up Kuts and is already regarding him as a winner.

Ottawa Free Press: The training squad will number about 30, including the players, managers and newspaper men who will be on hand to let the local fans know just who is showing and what the chances are for a pennant this year.

This is the first time in the history of minor league ball in Canada that a team has trained away from home, and the Ottawas may well feel that they are not as other teams are. A few years ago the Toronto International league team trained in Chatham, and they thought it was every bit as good a training camp as the towns down south. The mineral baths of Chatham are widely known, and the team will have all the accessories of a big league nine.

London Advertiser: When Charley Nichols sent in his signed contract to the London club management the other day, he reduced the number of London hold-outs to two. At the present time, Catchers Reske and McWhirter, of last year's team, are uniting in a duet, entitled 'The Colour of Your Money Isn't Green Enough For Us.' However, the fact that Reske and McWhirter are holding out is not affecting the local management to an alarming degree. This man Haggerty that has been signed up is said to be a catcher that is better than either of the other two, and with Bowerman willing to take a turn behind the bat when the occasion demands, there should be no trouble with the back-stopping, even without the services of the last year's members.

Brantford Expositor: It just cost the Brantford club a little matter of $250 this week for transportation of its players, who are under contract. This amount does not include car fare for numerous players anxious to play here, who are coming for a try-out on their own hook. The club is evidently out to get players of the right calibre, and the fans can be assured that every effort is being made to get a winner.

CHATHAM, APRIL 29. — Seven players, in charge of Manager Louie Creek, of Ottawa, reported at the Hotel Earnia this morning and others are expected to-night. Rain put in the pending of a "no practice" sign, but later the ice at the 36th Regiment Armouries was granted and the team practised indoors. Manager Creek announces that he will probably play second base. He is pleased with the local accommodation and diamond.

Kane Arrives.

Brantford Expositor: Ambrose Kane, manager of the Brantford Club, 1912, arrived in the city last night. He looks fresh as a daisy and states that he will not have the worry he had early last season over players, because Brantford will have enough players for all positions from which to sign a couple of good teams. "We are not claiming the pennant," said Ansby to The Expositor this morning, "but we will have a good team up there all the time causing trouble. I look for the Red Sox to be a good bunch of sluggers this year and I look for several of the players signed to break up certain plays which the Berlin champions were always pulling off with such ridiculous ease last season. We will have a team who know how to play ball." The players will arrive here Wednesday in charge of Matty Lamond and practice will be commenced.

BASEBALL

The Philadelphia Sporting Life, the great baseball weekly, in Saturday's issue, hands out this flowery compliment to Manager Templin of the Peterborough club: Look out for hustling Manager Curt Templin and his Petes. The old boy is there with the noodle. What the Reading, Pa., pilot don't know about running a minor league club is hardly worth knowing.

BOYS' FOOTBALL LEAGUE.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Sir,—Quite a number of lads in the city are desirous of forming a boys' Football Association, and they have asked me to help them form a junior football league. I believe that there are a lot of people who take an interest and a deep, sympathetic interest, in boys, and what appeals to boys; and, on the other hand, I feel sure that a great number of the lads here would like to belong to a football club and play the game. Recreation will do these lads a lot of good, and I am convinced of two things: one, that there is a great need for junior recreation clubs for te lads, and also that there are a great number of people who would help an attempt to provide the lads with the recreation they need.

Will those in sympathy with this attempt to form a boys' football league attend the meeting to be held on Thursday evening in the Y. M. C. A. at 8 o'clock, and will all the lads here who would like to play football also come.

I ask the help and the sympathy of all who love boys, and all who believe in giving them clean, healthy recreation. I should be pleased to see a large attendance of the pastors and the parents and all interested in this work.

I should be grateful for any suggestions and offers of help, addressed to me. Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for your valuable space.

Pecival G. S. Webb,

CHURCH FOOTBALL LEAGUE.

A meeting of the Church League will be held this evening at 8 o'clock in the Y.M.C.A. Will all the delegates from last year's clubs make an effort to be present, as it is desired to start the season's schedule a soon as possible, and it is hoped that the full executive will attend. Any senior club wishing to join the league are heartily invited to send a representative. Percival G. S. Webb, Sec.-Treas.

"ABOLISH BAR."

Pastor of Cooke's Church Declares That to be Policy of Presbyterians.

TORONTO, APRIL 30.—"I do not speak for the policy of either political party, but for the Presbyterian Church itself, when I say that Ontario should abolish the bar," declared Rev. Dr. A. T. Taylor, in Cooke's Church this night. "The church has for years declared itself for not only the abolition of the bar, but for prohibition."

Licensing was a measure of restraint of the traffic, likewise legislation. The same goes for abolition of the bar, a step demanded by temperance, the women and children of the country, and by the men who are striving to make this country what it should be.

CITY'S POPULATION IS FLOURISHING

That Peterborough is in a flourishing condition where the population is concerned, is evidenced in the compilations of the vital statistics for April of this year, with the corresponding month of last year. They are as follows:

April—Deaths, 23; births, 30; marriages, 11.

April—Deaths, 17; births, 49; marriages, 23.

It will be seen that while the deaths have decreased by eight, the births and marriages have increased nineteen and twelve, respectively.

TEN MINUTES OF TERRIBLE SUSPENSE

Dr. Johnston of Midland and Dr. Brown of Victoria Harbour, experienced a period of terrible suspense at Midland on Sunday last when an electric storm caused the lights to go out while they were in the midst of an operation on a young man for appendicitis.

The incision had been made, and Dr. Brown had hold of the appendix and Dr. Johnston the knife when the lights went out, and for ten minutes the two surgeons stood in black darkness and terrible suspense, unable to move, awaiting the restoration of the lights. The patient's life was in their hands and owing to the other in use a lamp was out of the question as there was nothing to do but wait.

When the lights came on the physicians looked at each other and their faces were like marble. The operation was resumed and concluded with perfect success, but it was doubtless an experience of which neither doctor will wish for a repetition.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

EXCUSE ME

A carload of fun is the expression some one has used in describing Rupert Hughes' farce, "Excuse Me," which Henry W. Savage offered at the Grand last night, and the description is a good one. A large audience found the attraction one of the most amusing of the season and it was as artistically and capably presented by a large and adequate cast of farceurs whose work throughout was smooth and convincing. All the scenes are laid on board the San Francisco express and the stage settings are decidedly elaborate, the illusion being startingly true to life. From the moment that Harry Mallory (Harrison Ford) and aMrjorie Newton (Helen Luttrell) whose plans to be married fall through by mischance at the last minute, are carried off on the express, until they finally find a minister on board to tie the nuptial knot, which everybody else believe has already been tied, the fun is fast and furious.

There are many funny characters among the passengers while the coloured porter is a gem. The principal roles were all in good hands. Geo. W. Day, as the porter, was especially funny. It is not hard to understnad the popularity that "Excuse Me" has attained throughout he continent.

"The Chocolate Soldier," one of the most popular comic operas of a decade comes to the Grand a week from to-night with a superb company, including Miss Alice Yorke.

"GETTING INTO JAIL."

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Sir.—I have just been reading in The Saturday Evening Post that in the States the persons in jail are "determined" by the circumstances of their habitat or complexion rather than by the gravity of their offences against society. In some localities it is deemed profitable to lock up people and lease their labour; in others it is judged easier to dispose of minor misdemeanants by fine than by imprisonment. The mere circumstance that a gentleman has been in jail should not prejudice his social standing until the facts in the case are known and weighed. "Be British!" perhaps another remark, and much lived would have been saved. I say nothing wrong about the crowd you refer to; but they may have been thinking of the chief's report, perhaps the most shameful document in British jurisprudence.—Yours, etc.,

W. A. BAILEY.

RED-HOT RADICALISM

We sometimes think we are pretty keen on politics in this country, but we are slow and lymphatic compared with the way an English Radical feels and talks. A Radical of the latter day school, in the course of a personal letter to a friend in Peterborough, interpolates the following frank expression of his opinions on the latest development of British fiscal policy:

I think I have exhausted the local budget, and now that I have written the word "budget," I am going to ask you what you think of the old country's budget surplus of over 6 1-2 millions. Now, I am going to be perky, domineering, saucy, blatant and irrepressible on this sheet. Do you, with all your varied and extensive geographical knowledge, know of any country on this earth, or any other earth, that plays at the selfish and narrow minded game of protection and can show a surplus anything like that? Doesn't a surplus like that in a free-trade country, hit all protectionists a thundering bump in the midriff and make you fetch your blooming breath short. It ought to serve you like that when you first heard of it, the Tariff Reformers in the House of Commons were served like that. It is a fact, that as the clever, little "Taffy" unfolded his budget, the whole of the prominent tariff reformers became speechless—their hands fell beside them, their chins sank on their chests and all their faces were ashen pale. Poor old Chaplin, as his head sank on shirt front, gasped and dropped his false teeth; a friend picked them up and took him out of the House and applied a smelling bottle to his nose and sent him home in a taxi-cab, and when he got there he was found all of a heap and was sniffling and mumbling that he should never be able to win another Derby after what he had heard that night. Austin, he of the monocle, so forgot himself, that he stuck the said monocle, in his neighbour's eye and asked him if he could see his father anywhere about and would he take him to him, as he felt sick. Bonar Law funked — yes, actually funked. He was appealed to stop and hear the budget, but he said no; he would prefer being sick outside than make an exhibition of himself inside, for he had an idea of what was coming. These details were not published in the "Daily Mail," but if you are curious, get a copy of Hansard, these and other despairing things that befel the tariff reformers, you will find recorded therein. An eye-opening fact fell from the Chancellor. He said that during the last financial year, 254 persons had died and left £270 millions behind them. Did that come out of the blood, bone and sinew of the workers? He pointed out that during the last three years a sum of from 6 to 7 millions had been paid each year for "old age pensions." The navy expenditure had increased alarmingly, to maintain our supremacy—on the seas—yet not a penny had been put in by way of extra taxation. These few facts, looked squarely in the face, shouted squelch, swamp and smother all tariff reformers. Free trade, for these "tight little isles,"—we have now tried it for more than 70 years, and during that time we have grown more shipping, more trade, more wealth than any other country in the world Why change?

RAILWAY NOTES

A gentleman residing in Victoria, [illegible], whose two daughters recently returned from Europe via S. S. Teutonic, and were routed by the Northern Pacific Railway over the Grand Trunk from Portland via Chicago, has written to the agent of the American road in Victoria, as follows:

"On behalf of my daughters, I beg to express my high appreciation of your good services in so thoughtfully arranging for their comfort from Portland, at which point and at Chicago, and indeed throughout the whole transcontinental trip, they were treated with every civility and attention by the railway officials. The good impressions left will go far in recommending this route to their friends who contemplate a journey to the Pacific Coast."

Mr. B. B. Kelliher, Chief Engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, who has been located at Fitzhugh for the past six weeks, where he could personally direct the progress of construction west of Essendant, the present head of steel, has just returned to the former point after an extended western trip. He reports that rapid progress is being made all along the line and predicts that navigation will open on the Fraser River at a early date. This will eliminate the necessity of long team haul freighting of supplies, heavy machinery, and tools from Teto Jeune Cache down the river to the various camps now in operation.

SON OF SIR THOMAS SHAUGHNESSY WEDS

NASHVILLE, TENN., MAY 1—Miss Sarah Polk Bradford and Alfred Thomas Shaughnessy of Montreal, son of President Shaughnessy of the C. P. The impressive wedding ceremony was performed in the presence of a brilliant and representative company of friends and relatives, including many out-of-town guests.

GIRLS AND FIREMEN HAD NARROW ESCAPES

MONTREAL, MAY 1. — Fainting from fright, three young women were brought down a ladder in the full view of the crowd, which watched in breathless suspense their rescue by pew firemen in the course of a fire which gutted the four-storey building at the corner of Craig and Busby streets this morning. Six persons were taken to the hospital. Three girls fainted and were cut and bruised by breaking glass. Three firemen were overcome by smoke and had a narrow escape from suffocation. The damage amounts to about five thousand dollars.

FORMAL OPENING OF THE PETERBORO' PROTESTANT HOME

Immense Crowd Assemble at the Ceremony Which Took Place Last Evening, With Many Prominent Citizens Present—Presentation Made.

The well-known charity represented in the public mind for nearly half a century as the "Peterborough Protestant Home," founded in 1865, on the Widows Hall bequest, entered upon a new phase of its existence last evening, when the formal opening of the building took place.

The structure is situated in a most prominent, elevated and salubrious position on the Hilliard farm, overlooking the city and surrounding country, and from its balconies and windows a fine view of the river and its valley may be obtained. The building is of red brick, with white stone pillars, and comprises three storeys and a basement. It embodies in structure and arrangements all the sanitary appliances and conditions usual to a hospital, which will form not a small asset in the comfort and health of its inmates. The funds are furnished by proceeds of the bequest, a small per capat legislative grant, a grant from the City Council and by the liberality of the public. Relief and residence are chiefly given to discrepit and destitute aged persons of both sexes, the number received varying from year to year, and of late years exceeding the capacity of the old building. Hence the new structure. The cost of the new building will be approximately thirty thousand dollars, and the dimensions 80 x 60 feet.

The Ceremony.

The ceremony opened last evening by a dedicatory service at the Home, under the auspices of and by the Ministerial Association, after which Mayor W. H. Bradburn took the chair.

By this time an immense number of visitors had assembled in and around the home, and the words of the various speakers were scarcely audible above the din of footsteps and voices. Many of the visitors engaged in conversation with some of the aged inmates, who, by the way, seemed already to be very much "at home" in their new surroundings.

Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., read a short history of the Institution, showing hte progress it had made from its beginning, in 1862 to the present day, and at the conclusion of the address Miss Helen Denison, the Secretary, who was most indefatigable, presented Mrs. W. M. Rogers, the President, with a tablet which was placed at the entrance of the reception room, and also with a magnificent floral tribute.

An address was read by Mayor W. H. Bradburn, who said:

"I feel it is an honour to preside at the opening of this splendid edifice, which is to be a home for old people of this city and neighbourhood. The directors of the Home are to be heartily congratulated upon the completion of this building, and especially are the ladies to be congratulated, for it is chiefly owing to their kindliness of heart, public spirit and energy that the Home has been erected. I feel certain that all have been gratified with the character of the building. It occupies a beautiful and commanding site, and is worthy in appearance, construction and finish, of the site it occupies and the purpose for which it has been erected.

The Protestant Home, under the administration of the ladies, has for many years done excellent work in Peterborough. A very large number of persons have found in it a shelter and a Home, and the community, as a whole, as well as those who have lodged under its roof, owe a debt of gratitude to the ladies of the Association for the time, care and attention they have given to it and the success with which it had been conducted. In this new home, which is so much more commodious and better equipped than that which will soon be vacated, they will be able to do much more, and we can look forward to all those who should be sheltered within it, finding here a very comfortable, healthy and cheerful Home.

While we are impressed with the character of this building, I would like, besides congratulating the management and the citizens who have aided in providing the necessary funds, to say that the building is very creditable to the architect, Mr. Smith, and to the contractor, Alderman Graham, and those who had immediate charge of the different parts of its construction."

Brief addresses were also delivered by Mr. E. A. Peck, M.P.P., and Dr. Bruce Smith, Inspector of Asylums and Charities. The clergy of the city were represented by Rev. Canon Davidson of St. John's Anglican Church, Rev. Robert Pogue of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, Rev. Isaac Couch, of George Street Methodist Church, and Rev. E. E. Webb, of Murray St. Baptist Church.

The band of the 57th Regiment was in attendance and rendered various selections.

Ald. J. J. Duffus then addressed the gathering and said:

I can assure you that it gives me the greatest satisfaction to be present on this auspicious occasion to add my word of commendation for the building of this splendid structure and to express the hope and wish that its efforts in the interests of humanity may be blessed and successful in every way.

As a citizen and as alderman, I have always taken a deep interest in our public institutions of every kind and I fain would see them flourish and prosper, but when it is a question of an establishment for doing the work this home is intended for, mainly for relieving the aged and infirm, to bring sunshine to a life whose ends would otherwise be dismal and cloudy, in a word, when it is a question of wrapping in the mantle of charity the unfortunate ones of this world, when they are tottering on to the brink of the grave, I think an added charm is given the very building itself, and an added interest can well be claimed on the part of the general public.

Mr. Chairman, it is often said, and I am afraid we have to admit a certain amount of truth in the saying, that we are living in a commercial age, an age in which business pursuits and commercial enterprises demand so much of our time, that we are apt to overlook the nobler things in life and especially to be unmindful of the needs of our less fortunate fellow beings.

But does it not seem that the erection of this and similar buildings argues well for the spirit of charity resident in the souls of the people of this city, and proves that the milk of human kindness runs in a rich vein in our midst.

With the erection of this new building I am sure the authorities of this home will be splendidly equipped to meet the needs of a growing city, and with this admirably appointed institution, together with those already existing, I know of no other city the size of Peterborough that is better prepared to alleviate suffering, to assuage human misery and to bring comfort and happiness to the needy in this life.

He concluded by congratulating the ladies for the part they had played in bringing the institution to its present condition.

Ill-Health And Success

Is ill-health in the way of your success? Do you lack the energy and vitality, the red blood which is necessary to good health and success in life? What have you done to overcome this condition? For it can be overcome by a little patient treatment.

There are combined in Dr. Chase's Nerve Food the elements which go to form new, rich blood. By using this food cure regularly you increase the quality and quantity of blood in the body. The wasted nerves feed on this rich blood and become revitalized. Mind and body regain snap, vim, energy and all that accompanies health and strength.

Nervous headache and indigestion, nervous prostration and exhaustion give way when this great restorative treatment is used to put new health and vigour into the blood.

LAKEFIELD COMPANY IS BUSY

Report Says Only 60 Per Cent. of Order to Siemon Co. Can Be Filled

MONTREAL, MAY 1. — It is announced that the Siemon Company, which has large plants at Wiarton, Parry Sound and Lakefield, will shortly undertake important extensions to its various mills, with a view of being able to keep pace with the orders that are now coming in from all parts of Canada, as well as from London, Eng.

Recent reports indicate that from present plants the company can only fill slightly over 60 per cent. of its orders now offering, and it is on this account that extensions to some of the mills will be carried out immediately. A recent report to the directors shows that among the orders on hand one had been received from Winnipeg for 400,000 feet, and one from Edmonton for 500,000 feet, while a standing order has been forwarded to the company from London, Eng., for the output of certain grades.

POULTRY ASSOCIATION.

The regular monthly meeting of the Peterborough Poultry Association will be held in their hall, Simcoe street, on Thursday night at 8 o'clock. The varieties of birds for exhibition will be Minoreas and Polands. Anyone wishing to bring other varieties are welcomed to do so. Mr. James Baptie of Springville will judge birds. All members are requested to be present.

Ottawa's Advertising Expert Dilates Upon Peterborough's Unparalleled Possibilities

"You Have a Magnificent City and the People Are Right" Declared Mr. Kuhn at the Ad. Club Dinner Last Night —Why Advertising Without Store Service Won't Pay

The regular monthly dinner of the Peterborough Ad. Club, an organization intended to promote the advertising interests of its members, was held in Hooper's palm parlours last evening. Mr. C. C. Nixon president of the club, presided. After a few introductory remarks, in which were incorporated the aims and purposes of the club, the speaker of th eevening, Mr. Frits Kuhn, of Ottawa, was introduced.

Mr. Kuhn is a man who has cut a wide swath in the advertising game. His address last night stamps him as a man of splendid executive ability and flexibility of purpose. He is known as an expert on publicity and store management, and his talk to the club last night embraced many phases of the advertising field, and solved many problems that will have an important bearing upon the future success and development of the Peterborough Ad Club.

Buncombe Advertising.

Before commencing, said Mr. Kuhn, I have a duty to perform, and that is to convey to you the fraternal greeting of the Ottawa Ad Club. The executive of the club met on Saturday afternoon and entrusted me with this message.

Advertising without store service don't pay. You must advertise from the man in the store, up. I was surprised at the number of people I met on the streets of your city to-day, who evinced no interest whatever in the Ad Club, and yet they squander their good coin on desk blotters and other useless forms of advertising. This you get no value for, as it lacks one of the essential principles, and that is circulation. An advertising solicitor drops into your city for a few days and secures an order for perhaps six hundred blotters. When the goods are delivered, three blotters are left with each advertiser, whose name is displayed thereon, with the result that your advertisement is circulated to the extent of two hundred instead of six hundred as was originally supposed it would be. Wood slabs were once consumed for the purpose of getting rid of them. Now they are looked upon as a valuable by-product in the lumber industry, simply because a way was developed for utilizing them to better advantage. This is what you want to get into your business—more systematical and advanced ideas. The speaker cited an instance of, where an inefficient store clerk turned away eighty dollars worth of business in one night by reason of incompetence. The proprietor of the store witnessed the circumstance, and being an alert, up-to-date business man, he stopped the leakage at once by removing the clerk. The whole thing must dovetail together, old methods of managing a store be replaced by modern ones, even to the changing of clerks if necessary.

Display Your Name.

Above all, dont' be afraid to display the name of the firm, where the stranger to the city will readily see it. On going down the main street of a city, I passed a large departmental store, and I had to look more than twice before I discovered the name of the firm, and when I did, it was only to find it set in the tile at the store entrance.

Truthful advertising should in all cases, be strictly adhered to. Some advertise goods as worth so much, and selling on such a day for so much. They deviate from the true course of truthful advertising when they insert that word "worth." The unsuspecting reader takes that to mean that the goods actually cost the price they are stated to be worth. Bargain and big reduction sales are dying out. What people want nowadays is quality at a fair price. People want the truth, and they are willing to pay the price.

Boost Peterborough.

Mr. Kuhn also denounced the "weak men" and "strong women" type of advertising. Some of the best periodicals of the day are instituting a campaign against this class of advertising, he declared. The main object of the Ad Club should be to elevate the profession and elevate the men as a whole. In Peterborough the Ad Club possesses advantages which we do not possess in Ottawa. Here you can do a splendid work in boosting your city, whereas in Ottawa our hands are tied in that respect. We pay annually fifteen thousand dollars for the maintenance of a publicity department, and any boosting we might venture to do, would only serve to disparage the work of this department in the sight of the people, who are responsible for its maintenance.

Have You a Weak System?

To-day I drove around the outskirts of your town and I may say that you have a magnificent city. Cheap land, cheap water power and people who are right, are some of your more distinct and important advantages. The opportunities to expand industrially and commercially are widespread before you.

As to the merchants. You may have good goods, a good store, a good trade, but the pivot upon which the success of your business will revolve, is a good system. If you have a weak system, it will be through that channel that your profits will go. They will follow the lines of least resistance.

The Soldiers Of The King

The regular weekly parade last night was by far the best that has been held this season. There was a full muster of ranks, and the men presented a very smart appearance as they swung down George street, headed by the regimental band. The bugle band, signal corps and ambulance corps were all well represented. Upon returning to the armouries a short drill was conducted, after which the companies were dismissed, and they adjourned to the recreation room, where the festivities were in progress.

A large contingent of recruits were on deck last night. Under the instruction of the squad commanders these new additions to the ranks are making rapid progress in the way of learning the rudiments of military service.

Divisional Instructor, Sergeant McKay of Toronto, has arrived in the city. He will commence at once to form a N. C. O.'s class; also a number of recruit classes. Candidates for these classes will be made on the recommendation of the company commanders.

The city corps will go into camp on June 6th, and will remain until the 10th. The following regiments will assemble: 14th, Kingston; 15th, Belleville; 41st, Brockville; 43rd, Ottawa; 57th, Peterborough.

The new Canadian Infantry Association, whose principal object of formation is to promote and improve the discipline, esprit de corps, and general efficiency of the infantry in Canada, have appointed Colonel Sir Henry Pellatt the commandant of the 6th Infantry Brigade, as its President.

Should any Fenian Raid veterans still have any obstacles in their way in claiming the government grant, they should see Major W. A. Collins, J.P. of the Army and Navy Veterans' Association, who will give what assistance he can to see that all veterans get their just dues.

With commendable insistence and zeal for the best interests of the service, the military department is this year doing its best to secure the attendance of units of the city corps of the militia at the annual field training camps for some portion, at least, of the field training; but it is to be hoped that too much will not be expected at first from men whose employers generally have not yet been educated to see that their share in national defence must be in sympathetic leaning toward the provision of facilities for their men's instruction. Under the system of voluntary enlistment, where a comparative few render military service for the many, it is unfair and illogical to expect a man who enrolls himself for the performance of these duties of citizenship, which the more selfish shirk and escape, to prejudice that permanent employment, whereby he gains his livelihood in order to go to camp.

Military pay to the great majority of individuals in the city corps means next to nothing — it in no way compensates him for loss of pay in his civil employment, and in many cases is even scarcely a return for expenditures which he makes out of esprit de corps for good of the unit to which he belongs. Hence no grievous disappointment should be felt if the musters of city corps at camp next summer should not come up to permanent staff and headquarters' expectations.

Lindsay Firemen Want Uniforms

The members of the Lindsay fire brigade are going around with an appeal for funds to purchase uniforms and are meeting with a generous response form the citizens. In other towns the council purchase the uniforms for the fire fighters, but the Lindsay brigade has not been so fortunate. The brigade, which is a volunteer one, anticipate no difficulty in realising their ambition and should they do so, they will be enabled to become affiliated with the Firemen's Associations.

IS YOUR HAIR WORTH 50c?

Just think how much you would ask for if you were to sell it; still there are many who never realize the value of their hair until too late. They let the little dandruff germs dig into the hair roots day and night until all the life and vitality is sapped out of the hair and it becomes dry and harsh and comes out in comb fulls.

A large bottle of Sageine costs but 50c. and W. J. Kent, your druggist guarantees it to stop falling hair and itching of the scalp or money back. Get rid of the dandruff and make your hair healthy. SAGEINE will do it for you! Get a bottle to-day, make your hair just as clean and handsome as it should be. W. J. Kent, Druggist.

ANNUAL MEETING OF ST. GEORGE'S SOCIETY

The annual meeting of the St. George's Society took place last evening in the banquet hall of Coleman's restaurant. The seating capacity of the hall was taxed almost to its utmost, upwards of [illegible] being present at the function.

Upon the clearing of the tables the toast of The King was proposed by the president, Mr. C. E. Coleman, and Mr. J. W. Worth was then elected as chairman of the evening.

During the business of the evening a new constitution was drawn up and the election of officers resulted as follows:

President—Mr. Chas. E. Coleman.
Vice-Pres.—Mr. J. W. Worth.
Sec.—Mr. B. Reid.
Asst.-Sec.—Mr. F. Dainton.
Musical Conductor—Mr. R. J. Devey.
Treas.—Mr. L. S. Edney.

Mrs. Wells and Mr. Benedike were commissioned to form a committee. It was decided that practice for "The Messiah," which will be produced some time in the fall, should commence at once.

The guests of the evening were Dr. Peck, Mr. [illegible] Barton, Miss Maggie Moss and Mr. and Mrs. Greenslade.

Another Opinion On Fair Grounds

To the Editor of the Examiner,—
Re Exhibition Grounds:

Dear Sir,—I heartily endorse the views expressed by your interviewer on the above subject, and have no hesitancy in pronouncing him a public benefactor, as no greater blunder could be made than that of retaining such a barrier in the way of the city's progress and development.

HOW "TITANIC" MAY HAVE BEEN DISEMBOWELLED

To the Editor of The Examiner,

Sir,—I have been waiting to see some geological, naval authority, or newspaper man, point out the most probable cause of the disaster to the Titanic, and while suggestions like the peak of an uncharted pinnacle of rock rising from a depth of two miles are being seriously discussed, nobody seems to have pointed out the plowshare, or can-opener which laid open a furrow in the bottom of the 40,000 ton ship driven upon it at the speed of 25 miles an hour.

The glacier, in many cases, travels shown, a detached piece of a glacier which has floated down from the north to the margin of the Gulf Stream, which is a river of warm water 200 miles flowing east from New York to the British Isles. Twice in the last five years it has been reported that bottles containing letters thrown from vessels entering New York harbour have been thrown up on the Welsh coast about a mile from my former residence.

The glacier, in any cases, travels down a valley bounded by hard plutonic rocks, granite, basalt, gneiss, and others. These rocks break up into prisms, cubes, hexagons, fishes, spear, and diamond shaped pieces, by the action of the frost and the pressure of the iceberg. Some of them are as big as a house.

On the glacier as they travel down the valley, they form two side ridges called moraines which gradually sink into the bed of ice and work their way through to the bottom, where the sharp edges are ground off as seen in some blocks in the gravel pit and river bed, but there is usually one or more rough sides to them.

When the iceberg comes down to the banks it usually melts, and throws down its load of gravel, sand and rock. But some come further south, as this one did. By this time it is probable that the barg has been melted so much that the face of the berg which is still under the sea, must resemble a gigantic harrow, turned teeth upwards. The gigantic points of the erratic boulders are hard enough to cut glass or iron, and once the skin of the ship was penetrated it would rip easily on the hard quartz knives of the berg frozen fast and kept firm by their great weight and bulk. The momentum of the ship would do the rest.

I would venture to suggest the above as a more probable explanation of the disaster than some that hve been given.

SOME THINGS AND OTHERS

In a paragraph in the Examiner of Saturday appeared a paragraph referring to the improper conduct of a cabman towards a lady passenger. It was not a cabman who was concerned in the matter though the Examiner's information to that effect was obtained from a source directly interested in the affair. It is a pleasure to make the correction; a pleasure to know that no cabman so far forgot his place. The occupation of the offender may develop later, but it was not that of a cab driver.

There was not much chance for oratory at the formal opening of the Protestant Home, last night. Perhaps the spirit of mercy and charity represented by the occasion, was abroad.

The "lunge" having invaded the creek for purposes of spawning, suggest extra vigilance on the part of the fishing inspectors. The "catch" (of a poacher) in time may save nine ("lunge").

Many persons in Peterborough will be saddened by the news of the death of Mr. J. H. Thompson of the "Rockland," Bobcaygeon, who died suddenly from paralysis, yesterday morning, and of the death in Toronto of Mr. James Oborne, C.P.R. superintendent, who was well known and well esteemed here.

Strollers along Charlotte street these fine evenings, say "of the last to or three streets on the west of the Burnham property—"Nice houses and lawns, but awfully bare-looking without trees." Trees planted and growing would convert "residences" into "homes".

WEDDING BELLS

CROWE—WEIR

A pretty wedding took place at St. Paul's church this afternoon at 2 o'clock, when Miss Mary Evangeline Weir, the third daughter of Mrs. Robert Weir, Stewart Street, was united in marriage to Mr. David Crowe, of Saskatoon, Sask. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Robert Power, of St. Paul's church, assisted by Rev. Mr. Rogers, of Toronto, a cousin of the bride. The bride was given away by her brother, Mr. Fred Weir, Walton street, while Miss Weir, her sister, was bridesmaid. The groom was attended by Mr. J. S. Madill of Napanee. Mr. A. P. McLean and Dr. G. Stewart Cameron of Peterborough, were the ushers.

During the signing of the register "O Perfect Love" was charmingly sung by Miss Lillian Moore.

After the ceremony a reception was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred D. Weir, Walton street.

Mr. and Mrs. Crowe left on the 4.28 C.P.R. train for Toronto. They wil sail on Saturday by the steamer Cassandra to visit points in the old land, returning to Saskatoon in September.

OBITUARY

JAS. THOMPSON

Bobcaygeon, April 30.—A very sudden death occurred here at 1.30 o'clock this afternoon, when Mr. Jas. Thompson, proprietor of the Rockland House, passed into the Great Beyond.

Mr. Thompson had never complained and was about as usual this morning, apparently in the very best of health. About 11.30 he took sick and the doctors were summoned. Neuralgia of the heart set in and death was sudden.

The deceased was one of the best known citizens of Bobcaygeon, and kept an up-to-date hotel. About three years ago he purchased the Rockland House from Mrs. Harvey Thompson, and after the big fire a year ago, he erected a large and up-to-date structure, which to-day is looked upon as one of the best in this part of Ontario.

For a time the late Mr. Thompson resided on Wellington Street, Lindsay.

JOSEPH P. RICKERBY

The death occurred in Flint, Mich., on Saturday last of Mr. Joseph P. Rickerby, late of Peterborough.

The deceased gentleman was born and raised in this city but left for Flint some six years ago. He was 25 years of age.

The remains arrived in Peterborough yesterday, accompanied by his

POLICE COURT.

The police court docket was light this morning. A farmer resident about eight miles from here, was fined for drunk and disorderly.

FIRST MARK OF SPRING.

Reports from the country indicate that the 1st swine of the season for ladies this month will be here. The weather has been too backward of late to permit rapid growth, and while the first crops of clover is not usually up to the standard in point of quality and quantity this year's first manufacture is not expected to be up to the average.

Chi-Namel

The New Ready-to-Use Graining Process

We have passed the age of paint for interior decoration, and have learned to appreciate the beauties of natural wood.

Chi-Namel Gives The New Hardwood Effect In Either Gloss or Dull Mission Finish

To the many owners of homes in which the floors, casings, and other woodwork are either painted or poorly varnished, and in which the floors are of soft wood designed to be covered with Carpets, the Ready-to-Use Graining Process, which anyone can use, makes possible the up-to-date hardwood effect at a low cost of only 2½c per square foot of surface. The use of this Graining Process is equally practical for furniture, tables, book cases, chairs, etc.

We are demonstrating this Process this week and solicit a call from you to see for yourself how it is done.

160,000 VICTIMS.

U. S. War Department Has to Feed Mississippi Flood Sufferers.

Washington, May 2.—Food and shelter for 160,000 people probably will have to be provided by the War Department for another month as a result of the renewed flooding of Mississippi River territory.

As rapidly as possible the destitute are being turned over to local relief committees, but reports from the army engineers indicate that the daily average to be served with "plantation rations" by the commissary department continues to be about 160,000, and the cost is $10,000 a day.

Secretary Stimson estimates that additional appropriations of $500,000 for the commissary department and $150,000 for the quartermasters' department will be required to cover relief work expenses. To date the quartermasters have spent $277,179 for forage, tents and boats, while the commissaries have spent $226,000.

Torras, La., May 2.—Relief is being rushed to hundreds of marooned families in the flooded territory north of this place. Food depots have been fixed at points convenient for purposes of distribution.

Five thousand white persons along the Black River are in a desperate fix. The Government supplies received there are inadequate. Many families expecting the flood, built rafts, and when the water came they moved their household goods aboard. Horses, cows, pigs, chickens, dogs and cats are sharing these rafts with the farmers and their families. The rafts are anchored to trees, and that is the way they are living now.

Jerome to Oppose Thaw.

New York, May 2.—William Travers Jerome has been retained by Attorney-General Carmody to represent the people in opposition to the latest effort to obtain the release of Harry Thaw from Matteawan Asylum. As district attorney Mr. Jerome prosecuted Thaw in both his trials, and successfully fought the attempts to set the prisoner free.

A new move was made yesterday by Clarence J. Shearn, the leading counsel for Thaw, in a notice that a motion would be made that the testimony to be heard at White Plains should be before a jury, and not before Justice Keogh alone. Mr. Jerome will oppose this.

Conference With Seamen.

Liverpool, May 2.—A committee of the ship owners and representatives of the Seamen's and Firemen's Union and the Transport Workers' Federation has agreed to hold a joint conference this month for a discussion of the conditions which led to the recent trouble with the seamen and firemen. In the meantime all the men will return to the ships.

NOT MUCH EXCITEMENT

House Held Solemn in the House of Commons Becoming Tedious

SHORTISH SPEECHES

London, May 2.—No great political project was ever debated in the House of Commons with less display of interest on the part of the members and the general public than the home rule bill. The speeches yesterday were delivered to a half empty House. A few Irish priests were the only spectators in the galleries, who appeared particularly concerned with what was passing on the floor. Even yesterday's oratorical performances, in which Winston Churchill, who is rated as the most brilliant of the younger politicians in either party, was the star, created hardly no enthusiasm. Statesmen like Gladstone, Parnell, Chamberlain and Hartington have fought bitterly every inch of the ground and racial and party passions, and stirred to the depths, but it could not possibly be compared in lack of enthusiasm with yesterday's session.

One reason for this is the present new system, whereby the House of Lords may prolong legislation over a period of two years, which postpones the critical stage of the measure. Another is the nature of the Conservative opposition to the bill, which, except on the part of the representatives of Ulster, is generally lukewarm. Several members complained yesterday of the length of the speeches. The Speaker practically confessed himself bored and remarked:

"I am sure that the House would rather hear three speeches of twenty minutes each than one of 60 minutes." This was received with shouts of approval.

William O'Brien, leader of Liberal Nationalists, said that in his opinion the bill was one on which all sections of Irishmen could unite in supporting in its fundamental structure and principles, but it would be arrant humbug to pretend that it settled everything, except reconciliation between the two countries. However, the fact that the bill was elastic and experimental and could be improved in accordance with the lessons of practical experience, was a recommendation in its favor. Divisions in the ranks of the Nationalists, he added, could be regarded as a good augury for the future, because those associated with him would form the germ of a healthy opposition in the new Irish Parliament.

Mr. O'Brien criticized the financial provisions of the bill, which he hoped would be amended in the committee stage.

Lord Claude Hamilton, Unionist, made a bellicose speech against the bill, declaring that if it passed he and his brother would take their stand with the people of Ulster. "I should only have to go to the quayside in Liverpool and call for volunteers," he said, "to get thousands of men ready to go and succor their brethren in Ulster."

Winnipeg Loan Felled.

London, May 2.—Further evidence of the congested condition of the Canadian municipal market was shown in the fact that of the Winnipeg loan the underwriters have 75 per cent. left on their hands.

AN ARREST IN SIGHT

Suspicion Has Centred on One Man in Connection With the Minden Murder Case

INQUEST TO-NIGHT

Toronto, May 2.—That the three great railway companies of the Dominion—the Canadian Pacific, the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific—will have to assume the responsibility for and justify the discrimination shown between the freight rates in Eastern and Western Canada, was decided on by an order of the Dominion Railway Board at its session yesterday afternoon. Moreover, it was announced by Vice-Chairman Scott that the investigation was to be thorough in its scope, and that in the near future the railways would be called upon to prove the reasonableness of the rates charged in the east and in the west.

"The board recognizes that this is one of the most serious investigations that it has been called upon to take up since its establishment," said the vice-chairman, "and therefore the railways will be given reasonable time to prepare their cases. The records of this board show that the freight rates charged by the G.T.R. and C.N.R. in Western Canada are similar to those of the C.P.R. in Eastern Canada; and that the rates charged by the Grand Trunk Pacific and Canadian Northern west of Fort William are similar to the rates charged by the C.P.R. west of Fort William."

The vice-chairman then gave the judgment of the board that the three railways should take on themselves the obligation to justify the discrimination in rates that have been shown to exist. Moreover, the board made it plain that the investigation, now that it had started, would be continued till finally disposed of, and that it would not be narrow or limited. On the request of the board, a date was arranged when all the railways would be in a position to announce when they would be ready to have the investigation proceeded with. The representatives of all the companies agreed on May 21, at Ottawa, when the board sits there again.

The importance of the case was at once in evidence by the array of eminent counsel that were on hand when the investigation commenced. Representing the Dominion Government were H. W. Whitla of Winnipeg, J. Bicknell, Toronto, and Mr. Morrison of Vegreville. The Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan were represented by M. K. Cowan, assisted by Alex. McDonald, the C.P.R. by Mr. Chrysler of Ottawa and E. B. Beatty, Montreal; the Grand Trunk and Grand Trunk Pacific by H. V. Hudson of Winnipeg and W. H. Biggar; the Canadian Northern by Judge Phippen and George Shaw, general traffic manager.

The rather abrupt adjournment of the hearing was brought about by the line of argument adopted yesterday by the counsel for the Dominion Government.

Before Mr. Chrysler's interruption, H. W. Whitla, counsel for the Dominion Government, was quoting an elaborate list of statistics showing that the western freight rates were in excess of the eastern rates by amounts varying from 40 per cent. to 150 per cent., according to the commodities being shipped.

Mr. Chrysler declared that he understood that the investigation was as to whether the rates were reasonable or unreasonable; not as to whether they were higher in the west than in the east.

After considerable discussion, the board decided that the railways must justify their western freight rates. Just before the case closed, M. K. Cowan, representing Alberta and Saskatchewan, protested because copies of railway statistics furnished to the Government lawyers by the railways had not been put on file or supplied in such a way that he could have access to them. The board and the representatives both agreed to let Mr. Cowan have all the statistics he desired.

"Cost of Living" in Canada.

Ottawa, May 2.—"Yes, wages are high in Canada, but some one said 'so is living.' Here are present retail Canadian city prices the housewife will appreciate: Mutton, shoulder, 4 1-2d. a pound, mutton chops 7d., beef 8d., sardines 2d. a tin."

The foregoing is an extract from an advertisement of Canada, as an attractive country for intending emigrants, which appeared in the Standard of Empire of Friday, April 19. At the foot of the ad. is the name of J. Obed Smith, assistant Canadian superintendent of emigration in London.

"Pretorian" Went Far South.

Quebec, May 2.—The Allan liner Pretorian arrived yesterday morning after a slow passage from Glasgow, having had to take a course two hundred miles south of the ordinary one to avoid icebergs. The largest iceberg was met last Friday, 150 feet high.

The Pretorian carried 749 passengers, the first consignment of English and Scotch immigrants to reach Quebec this season. The steamer left last night for Montreal.

BECK'S TRIO WIN.

Minister Captures Feature Event at Toronto Horse Show.

Toronto, May 2.—Hon. Adam Beck was the outstanding figure at the Canadian National Horse Show yesterday. The achievement of his team of three hunters put the balance of the evening's program in the shade.

Class 46 was for the best team of three hunters, and Hon. Mr. Sifton's trio were second and Bert Cox's third. They were three extra fine teams and there was little to choose between first, second and third. Mr. Jarvis' entry also ran.

The judges appeared profoundly perplexed over the problem of separating the Beck and Sifton teams, but finally gave the signal for an outburst of applause by calling the Beck team for first, and Sifton's for second. The Enniscliare entry got third.

Hon. Adam Beck rode the world champion middleweight bay hunter, Sir Edmund, the winner of first honors in England, the United States and Canada.

The night wound up with a spectacular military class of 31 mounted N.C.O.'s and men representing different regiments.

TELEGRAPHIC BRIEFS.

Further bodies of victims of the Titanic disaster were identified at Halifax.

The ferry fares between the two Soos have been reduced from ten cents each way to five.

The Spanish Senate voted an address of condolence to the families of the victims of the Titanic yesterday.

Herbie, the four-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. George Agnew of Acton lost his life while playing on the bank of Fairy Lake yesterday.

Looking in the best of physical condition, after his sojourn of a month in the south, the Right Hon. R. L. Borden returned to Ottawa yesterday.

Small strikes are reported at London, Ottawa and Kingston. The Hamilton bricklayers went out, but otherwise May Day was uneventful in labor circles.

Plumbers went on strike at Kingston yesterday because the bosses refused to give an increase. They are receiving $2.25 for nine hours, and ask for $3 for eight hours.

The Boy Scouts of Ottawa have divided up the city systematically and are going to do some scouring for spots wherein flies may breed with a view to extirpating the pest.

The C.P.R. fleet yesterday morning sailed from Owen Sound for Port Mellcoll, the new steamship headquarters. The squadron was given a good send off, over one thousand citizens being at the dock to bid them farewell.

Following an attack of pneumonia the death occurred at Vancouver on Tuesday of James Oborne, formerly superintendent of the Toronto division of the C.P.R. and at the time of his death superintendent of the Pacific division.

First Will Withers.

New York, May 2.—Mrs. Ava Willing Astor, former wife of Col. John J. Astor, reached New York yesterday. She was dressed in deep mourning. Her daughter, Miss Muriel Astor, accompanied her.

When Mrs. Astor was asked for some expression as to the death of Col. Astor, she replied that she was too sad for an expression of sentiment, and asked to be excused. She also declined to say whether she would attend Col. Astor's funeral.

Fell Overboard In Dark.

Southampton, Ont., May 2.—John Logie, captain and owner of a fishing tug, was lost overboard and drowned about 20 miles south from here Tuesday night.

No person on board saw the accident, and he was not missed for over two hours.

IMPORTANT CASE

Minden, Ont., May 2.—Seldom is so curious a situation found as that exposed by the murder of Lew Porter, the trapper and farmer, who was shot to death by an ambushed enemy on the Cameron road, six miles south of the village of Minden, Thursday night last.

While the cold-blooded nature of the crime has shocked the neighborhood into excited discussion, a feeling of relief seems to have fallen upon the whole countryside. The dead man seems to have been regarded as a menace by all the population of this isolated section. As one man puts it, "There hasn't been a thing done in these parts for years that, if no one was caught, Lew Porter wasn't blamed for it." Everyone was afraid of him, or of what he might do.

Suspicion has now centred on one man in the district, and discussion is general as to whether or not he should be arrested. This debate is joined even by some of the officers working on the case, and one of these believes that the matter should be rushed to a conclusion in this way, while the other opinion is that an extensive and searching probe should be made by means of Coroner Pogue's inquest which will be continued tonight, but which will likely be immediately adjourned till Wednesday night next. Detective Reburn of the provincial police arrived here yesterday, and expects that by that time he will have some concrete evidence to take the place of rumors of standing grudges and whispered suspicion.

Ellis, the brother-in-law, in an interview yesterday, spoke of the death of his wife five years ago, and the [illegible] finally and himself following that event.

"I know they blamed me for her death," he said, "and old man Porter ain't spoke to me since. Lew and I weren't what you'd call friendly, but we always passed the time of day when we passed. I wasn't to blame for the death of the woman. I went for a doctor, but they didn't think I went soon enough, that was all.

"There has been a lot of talk about Lew and me not being friends, but you know how folks will talk. I never made any threats against him at any time."

Investigation Ends.

Goderich, Ont., May 2.—The investigation into the charges made by Michael Farr, hotelkeeper, against William Patterson, chairman of the Huron license commissioners, concluded at 10.30 yesterday morning, and Commissioner Eudo Saunders of Toronto will make his report to the Government after reviewing the evidence.

Andrew Porter gave an emphatic denial to Farr's statement that he had approached him and suggested putting up money to guarantee the renewal of his license. Farr, he declared, had come to him and asked him to use his influence, and he had replied that he was out of that sort of thing now, as it took all his time to run the hotels. He had no knowledge of any attempt being made to hold up hotelkeepers for money for license renewals.

John C. Martin, owner of the Colborne Hotel property, who was implicated by Farr as one of the men whom he alleged Patterson had told he would get the money, denied any knowledge of any such proposals being made.

Montreal Firemen Overcome.

Montreal, May 2.—Seven firemen were overcome by escaping gas and noxious fumes of burning benzine oil, and it was necessary to take three women down ladders during the progress of a blaze in the building at Busby Lane and Craig street, occupied by the Canadian Bromeo Powder Works.

Five firemen were taken to hospitals, while District Chief Mann and Captain Carson of No. 2 station, who were also carried from the basement, stuck to their work after recovering in the free air of the street.

The women escaped from the second story of the building were employes of J. A. White & Co., manufacturers of soothing syrup.

ONTARIO WOMAN'S FORTUNE

Freed From That Weak, Languid, Always Tired Feeling, by Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound.

Thamesford, Ont.—"I cannot speak too highly of your medicine. When my appetite is poor and I have that weak, languid, always tired feeling, I get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it builds me up, gives me strength, and restores me to perfect health again. It is truly a blessing to women, and I cannot speak highly enough of it. I take pleasure in recommending it to others."—Mrs. ANNIE CAMERON, Thamesford, Ont.

Women who are suffering from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not lose sight of these facts or doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

There are probably hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions of women in the United States who have been benefited by this famous old remedy, which was produced from roots and herbs over 30 years ago by a woman to relieve women's suffering. If you are sick and need such a medicine, why don't you try it?

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

"I haven't about very well," the girl confessed, bringing her hand out from beneath the coverlet, the locket still tightly clasped in her fingers. "See, I found this on the floor last night after you had gone downstairs."

"Ye did!" setting the coffee on a convenient chair, and reaching out for the trinket. "Let's have a look at it once. Angels av Hiven, if it isn't the same the ol' General was showin' me in the parly."

The other sat up suddenly, her white shoulders and rounded throat gleaming.

"The old General, you said? What General? When was he here?"

"Shure now, be aisy, honey, an' Oi'll tell ye all there is to it. It's not his name Oi know; maybe Oi niver heard till av it, but 't was the 'Gineral' they called him, all right. He was here maybe three days outfittin'—a noice spoken ol' gintlemin, wid a grey beard, an' ons't he showed me the locket—be the powers, if it do be his, there's an openin' to it, an' a picter inside."

The girl touched the spring, revealing the face within, but her eyes were blinded with tears. The landlady looked at her in alarm.

"What is it, honey? What is it? Did you know him?"

The slender form swayed forward, shaken with sobs.

"He was my father, and—and this is my mother's picture which he always carried."

"Then what is your name?"

"Hope Waite."

Kate Murphy looked at the face half hidden in the bedclothes. That was not the name which Keith had given her, but she had lived on the border too long to be inquisitive. The other lifted her head, flinging back her loosened hair with one hand.

"Mr. Keith dropped it," she exclaimed. "Where do you suppose he got it?" Then she gave a quick, startled cry, her eyes opening wide in horror. "The Cimmaron Crossing—the murder at the Cimmaron Crossing! He—he told me about that; but he never showed me this—this. Do you—do you think—"

Her voice failed, but Kate Murphy gathered her into her arms.

"Cry here, honey," she said, as if to a child. "Shure an' Oi don't know who it was got kilt out yonder, but Oi'm tellin' ye it niver was Jack Keith what did it—murther ain't his stoyle."

CHAPTER XVI.

INTRODUCING DR. FAIRBAIN.

Headed as they were, and having no other special objective point in view, it was only natural for the two fugitives to drift into Sheridan. This was at that time the human cesspool of the plains country, a seething, boiling maelstrom of all that was rough, evil, and brazen along the entire frontier. Customarily quiet enough during the hours of daylight, the town became a mad saturnalia with the approach of darkness, its ceaseless orgies being noisily continued until dawn. But at this period all track work on the Kansas Pacific being temporarily suspended by Indian outbreaks, the graders made both night and day alike hideous, and the single dirty street which composed Sheridan, lined with shacks, crowded with saloons, the dull dead prairie stretching away on every side to the horizon, was congested with humanity during every hour of the twenty-four.

It was a grim picture of depravity and desolation, the environment dull, gloomy, forlorn; all that was worthy the eye or thought being the pulsing human element. All about extended the barren plains, except where on one side a ravine cut through an overhanging ridge. From the seething street one could look up to the summit, and see there the graves of the many who had died deaths of violence, and been borne thither in their [illegible] since the very boundary obliteration was Sheridan—the child of a few brief months of existence, and destined to perish almost as quickly—the centre of a grim picture, a mere cluster of rude, unpainted houses, poorly erected shacks, grimy tents flapping in the never ceasing wind swirling across the treeless waste, the ugly red station, the rough cowpens filled with lowing cattle, ungainly stores, their false fronts decorated by amateur wielders of the paint brush, and the garish dens of vice tucked in everywhere. The pendulum of life never ceased swinging. Society was mixed; no man cared who his neighbour was, or dared to question. Of women worthy the name there were few, yet there were flitting female forms in plenty, the saloon lights revealing powdered cheeks and painted eyebrows. It was a strange, restless populace, the majority here to-day, disappearing to-morrow — cowboys, half-breeds, trackmen, graders, desperadoes, gamblers, saloon-keepers, merchants, generally Jewish, petty officials, and a riff-raff no one could account for, mere floating debris. The town was an eddy catching odd bits of driftwood such as only the frontier ever knew. Queer characters were everywhere, wrecks of dissipation, derelicts of the East, seeking nothing save oblivion.

Everything was primitive—passion and pleasure ruled. To spend easily made money noisily, brazenly, was the ideal. From dawn to dawn the search after joy continued. The bagnios and dance halls were ablaze; the barrooms crowded with hilarious or quarrelsome humanity, the gambling tables alive with excitement. Men swaggered along the streets looking for trouble, and generally finding it; cowboys rode into open saloon doors and drank in the saddle; troops of congenial spirits, frenzied with liquor, spurred recklessly through the street firing into the air, or the crowd, as their whim led; bands played popular airs on balconies, and innumerable "barkers" aded their honeyed invitations to the perpetual din. From end to end it was a saturnalia of vice, a babel of sound, a glimpse of the inferno. Money flowed like water; every man was his own law, and the gun the arbiter of destiny. The town marshal, with a few cool-headed deputies, moved here and there amid the chaos, patient, tireless, undaunted, seeking merely to exercise some slight restraint. This was Sheridan.

Into the one long street just at dusk rode Keith and Neb, the third horse trailing behind. Already lights were beginning to gleam in the crowded saloons, and they were obliged to proceed slowly. Leaving the negro at the corral to find some purchaser for the animals, and such accommodations for himself as he could achieve, Keith shouldered his way on foot through the heterogeneous mass toward the only hotel, a long two-storied wooden structure, unpainted, fronting the glitter of the Pioneer Dance Hall opposite. A noisy band was splitting the air with discordant notes, a loud-voiced "barker" yelling through the uproar, but Keith, accustomed to similar scenes and sounds elsewhere, strode through the open door of the hotel, and guided by the noisy, continuous clatter of dishes, easily found his way to the dining-room. It was crowded with men, a few women scattered here and there, most of the former in shirt-sleeves, all eating silently. A few smaller tables at the back of the room were distinguished from the others by white coverings in place of oil-cloth, evidently reserved for the more distinguished guests. Disdaining ceremony, the newcomer wormed his way through, finally discovering a vacant seat where his back would be to the wall, thus enabling him to survey the entire apartment.

It was not of great interest, save for its constant change and the primitive manner in which the majority attacked their food supply, which was piled helter-skelter upon the long tables, yet he ran his eyes searchingly over the numerous faces, seeking impartially for either friend or enemy. No countenance present, as revealed in the dim light of the few swinging lamps, appeared familiar, and satisfied that he remained unknown, Keith began devoting his attention to the dishes before him, mentally expressing his opinion as to their attractiveness. Chancing finally to again lift his eyes, he met the gaze of a man sitting directly opposite, a man who somehow did not seem exactly in harmony with his surroundings. He was short and stockily built, with round rosy face, and a perfect shock of wiry hair brushed back from a broad forehead; his nose wide but stubby, and chin massive. Apparently he was between forty and fifty years of age, exceedingly well dressed, his grey eyes shrewd and full of a grim humour. Keith observed all this in a glance, becoming aware at the same time that his neighbour was apparently studying him also. The latter broke silence with a quick, jerky utterance, which seemed to peculiarly fit his personal appearance.

"D—— it all—know you, sir—sure I do—but the life of me can't tell where."

Keith stared across at him more searchingly, and replied, rather indifferently:

"Probably a mistake then, as I have no recollection of your face."

"Never make a mistake, sir—never forget a face," the other snapped with some show of indignation, and hands now clasped on the table, one stubby forefinger pointed, as he leaned forward. "Don't tell me—I've seen you somewhere—no, not a word—don't even tell me your name—I'm going to think of it."

Keith smiled, not unwilling to humour the man's eccentricity, and returned to his meal, with only an occasional inquiring glance across the table. The other sat and stared at him, his heavy eyebrows wrinkled, as he struggled to awaken memory. The younger man had begun on his pie when the face opposite suddenly cleared.

"D—— me, I have it—h——, yes; hospital tent—Shenandoah — bullet embedded under third rib—ordinary case—get the name in a minute—Captain—Captain Keith—that's it—shake hands."

Puzzled at the unexpected recognition, yet realizing the friendliness of the man, Keith grasped the pudgy fingers extended with some cordiality.

"Don't remember me, I s'pose—don't think you ever saw me—delirious when I came—hate to tell you what you was talking about—gave you hypodermic first thing—behaved well enough when I dug out the lead—Minie bullet, badly blunted hitting the rib—thought you might die with blood poison—couldn't stay to see—too d—— much to do—evidently didn't though—remember me now?"

"No, only from what you say. You must have been at General Waite's headquarters."

"That's it—charge of Stonewall's field hospital—just happened to ride into Waite's camp that night—d—— lucky thing for you I did—young snip there wanted to saw the bone—I stopped that—liked your face—imagined you might be worth saving—ain't so sure of it now, or you wouldn't be out in this God-forsaken country, eating such grub—my name's Fairbain—Joseph Wright Fairbain, M.D.—contract surgeon for the railroad—working on the line?"

Keith shook his head, feeling awakening interest in his peculiar companion.

"No; just drifted in here from down on the Arkansas," he explained briefly. "Did you know General Waite was dead?"

The doctor's ruddy face whitened.

"Dead?—Willis Waite dead?" he repeated. "What do you mean, sir Are you sure? When?"

"I ought to be sure; I buried him just this side the Cimmaron Crossing out on the Santa Fe trail."

"But do you know it was General Waite?" the man's insistent tone full of doubt.

"I have no question about it," returned Keith, conclusively. "The man was Waite's size and general appearance, with grey beard, similar to the one I remember he wore during the war. He had been scalped, and his face beaten beyond recognition, but papers in his pockets were sufficient to prove his identity. Besides, he and his companion—a young fellow named Sibley—were known to have pulled out two days before from Carson City."

"When was this?"

"Ten days ago."

Fairbain's lips smiled, the ruddy colouring sweeping back into his cheeks.

"D—— me, Keith, you came near giving me a shock," he said, jerkily. "Shouldn't be so careless—not sure my heart's just right—tendency to apoplexy, too—got to be guarded against. Now, let me tell you something—maybe you buried some poor devil out at Cimmaron Crossing—but it wasn't Willis Waite. How do I know? Because I saw him and talked with him yesterday—d——me, if I didn't, right here in this town."

CHAPTER XVII.

IN THE NEXT ROOM.

Keith, his eyes filled with undisguised doubt, studied the face of the man opposite, almost convinced that he was, in some way, connected with the puzzling mystery. But the honesty of the rugged face only added to his perplexity.

"Are you certain you are not mistaken?"

"Of course I am, Keith. I've known Waite for fifteen years a bit intimately—have met him frequently since the war—and I certainly talked with him. He told me enough to partially confirm your story. He said he had started for Santa Fe light, because he couldn't get enough men to run a caravan—afraid of Indians, you know. So, he determined to take money—buy Mexican goods—and risk it himself. Old fighting cock wouldn't turn back for all the Indians on the plains once he got an idea in his head—he was that kind—Lord, you ought to seen the fight he put up at Spottsylvania! He got to Carson City with two wagons, a driver, and a cook—had eight thousand dollars with him, too, the d—— fool. Cook got into row, gambling, cut a man, and was jugged. Old Waite wouldn't leave even a nigger in that sort of fix—natural fighter—likes any kind of row. So, he hung on there at Carson but had sense enough—Lord knows where he got it—to put all but a few hundred dollars in Ben Levy's safe. Then, he went out one night to play poker with his driver and a friend—had a drink or two—doped, probably, and never woke up for forty-eight hours—lost clothes, money, papers, and whole outfit—was just naturally cleaned out—couldn't get a trace worth following after. You ought to have heard him cuss when he told me—it seemed to be the papers that bothered him most—them, and the mules."

"You say there was no trace?"

"Nothing to travel on after forty-eight hours—a posse started out next morning, soon as they found him—when they got back they reported having run the fellows as far as Cimmaron Crossing—there they got across into the sand hills, and escaped."

"Who led the posse?"

"A man called Black, I think," he said.

"Black Bart?"

"Yes, that's the name; so I reckon you didn't bury Willis Waite this time, Captain. You wouldn't have thought he was a dead one if you had heard him swear while he was telling the story—it did him proud; never heard him do better since the second day at Gettysburg—had his ear shot off then, and I had to fix him up—Lord, but he called me a few things."

Keith sat silent, fully convinced now that the doctor was telling the truth, yet more puzzled than ever over the peculiar situation in which he found himself involved.

"What brought the General up here?" he questioned, finally.

"I haven't much idea," was the reply. "I don't think I asked him directly. I wasn't much interested. There was a hint dropped, however, now you speak about it. He's been after those papers, and doesn't feel satisfied regarding the report of the pose. It's my opinion he's trailing after Black Bart."

The dining-room was thinning out, and they were about the only ones left at the tables. Keith stretched himself, looking around.

"Well, Doctor, I am very glad to have met you again, and to learn Waite is actually alive. This is a rather queer affair, but will have to work itself out. Anyway, I am too dead tired to-night to hunt after clues in midst of this babel. I've been in the saddle most of the time for a week, and have to find a bed."

MORE VIEWS ON WOMAN SUFFRAGE

(By Adeline D. Hart.)
(No. IX.)

Woman Suffrage is but one of the many branches of the great "Woman's Movement," or "feminist movement," which is taking place all over the world, and which, moreover, has come to stay. Women are realising, as never before, that they also are citizens of the world, and are beginning to take a more active and a wider interest in social, industrial, civic, and political reforms of all kinds. Women, in the aggregate, instead of as individuals, are agitating for such reforms as: the abolition of child labour, and of the traffic in vice; equal pay for equal work; pure food laws, better sanitary conditions; better marriage laws, medical inspection of school children; better labour and factory regulations; and further legislation on all matters which directly or indirectly affect the welfare of women and children. Women are entering with more interest than ever before into a study of civic conditions, and are encouraging and furthering, in numberless ways, a better knowledge of the care of infants and children—a knowledge which is so essential to the preservation of the race (the principal force behind the woman's movement). Lectures to women on all these matters are becoming more and more numerous and universal, and are largely attended.

In fact, to put it briefly: women are waking up. This increasing study of social and industrial problems and of other matters of wide and collective interests, is bringing larger and larger numbers of women, and of men, also, to the firm conviction that disfranchisement is a barrier, the removal of which would give women more scope for action, and more power to carry on the numerous reformatory projects in which they are now taking such a practical interest, and any of which owe their inception entirely to the efforts of public-spirited women.

Equal suffrage is no longer a theory but a well-established fact, and speculations as to its possible effects are no longer in order, for its effects are already evident.

The citing of individual cases of crimes committed by women in a suffrage state, is no more proof of the bad effects of woman suffrage on that state as a whole, than is the citing of several individual cases of crimes committed by men in Ontario a proof that the enfranchisement of men has a bad effect on the whole Province.

Suffragists do not claim that equal franchise will usher in the millenium, nor cure all evil, nor revolutionize legislation, but that it will bring about a fairer and more evenly-balanced administration of justice. Men are superior in some things to women, inferior in others; women also are superior to men in some things, inferior in others, and the qualities in which women are superior to men are just those qualities which are lacking in politics. Just as in a well-organized house, both father and mother co-operate in its management, so in politics, women, as well as men should have equal opportunity to bring their point of view to bear on the various matters which concern them.

In New York, Australia, Finland, Norway, and the six suffrage states evil conditions and social problems still exist, and must be dealt with, but instead of men alone having the power to deal with them, that power is now shared equally by women, and such co-operation has proved more effective in producing the desired results.

To argue that women should not be entrusted because some women might sell their votes, and because bad women should vote, is an argument. Statistics prove that women are far more law abiding than men, and therefore the honest votes of citizenesses (always would be outnumber the unscrupulous votes, and already do so. It is not only the good and conscientious man who have the right of voting, but any illiterate foreigner, and even a criminal, provided he is not actually in jail, has that right. Can any sane person assert that the votes of criminals and illiterates are more honest and more desirable than the votes of intelligent, law-abiding, and conscientious women? If the disfranchisement of women means a preponderance of undesirable votes, there must be an overwhelming majority of unscrupulous, lawless and wicked women in the country, in which case the more they are kept in a condition of servile subjection and repression, and the more the management of everything, even of the home and the children, is left in the hands of the large majority of superior and law-abiding men, the better.

The connection between the ballot and fashions is well put by Miss Arnold, (daughter of Matthew Arnold), in a recent address to the Chicago Women's Club; she says: "So long as women are told that the large affairs of life do not concern them, that within the walls of their home they should find quite enough to occupy all their energies and capacities, so long will the tyranny of fashion last. For the contention, that keeping a small house in order, and caring for the material small family of to-day, should be enough to fill the heart and mind of the average woman is not only untenable, but pernicious. The life of the average well-to-do woman is deplorably empty, and it is no small spectacle if she fills it with bridge, with fantastic clothes, and with all the small nothings that seem to kill time. Nothing, I am convinced, but an awakening on the part of women in general to a sense of their dignity as responsible human beings will break the tyranny of fashion".

It seems incredible that those who have the means of gratifying their own tastes in dress, and of indulging in their desires for pleasure, even to a very moderate extent, should censure working girls for small extravagances of various kinds. Have these girls no right to a few of even the minor pleasures, which more fortunate girls enjoy? And if an occasional indulgence in some piece of finery which they can ill afford brings a little pleasure and brightness into their lives, surely men and women who have never known what it is to live such lives as many thousands of the poor are forced to live; who have never endured the incredible hardships and privations which they endure, should have more human sympathy and kindly feelings than to blame them!

Do those who so lightly censure the faults and failings of working-girls ever imagine themselves in an exactly similar position, and ask themselves how they would act under the circumstances? Have they ever taken the trouble to read authentic accounts of facts and conditions, not written by casual observers; or by those who spend a few days in making "investigations" in order to produce sensational "copy" for the press, but written by those who have lived and laboured for years among factory girls, sweat-shop workers and others, and who know whereof they speak, and whose word cannot be questioned? Have they ever seriously asked themselves how they would like to be forced, whether in good health or bad, whether physically fit or not, to toil for 8, 9, 10, or more hours a day, unceasingly, often on Sundays also, because the miserable pittance which is not enough to keep body and soul together, must be earned? Factory girls and working women are not machines, but human beings, like any other women, and what is needed, is not to crush out and condemn every ordinary human and natural wish, which more fortunate girls and women may indulge in, and gratify, more or less, but to make it possible for working girls to earn a decent living wage. Much noble work is being done to this end, and the enfranchisement of women has already proved a potent factor in the furtherance of all such work.

It is a significant fact that of the number of noble men and women who devote their lives to the betterment of humanity nearly all of them have come to see, sooner or later, that the extension of the franchise to women is a necessary reform, and that only when it is so extended will other reforms make any real progress. The opinions of such men and women as Jane Addams, Clara Barton, Florence Nightingale, Judge Lindrey, Florence Kelley, and many more who have worked, or are still working, to alleviate human suffering and misery, and whose knowledge of their subject and wide experience of the darkest side of life is an admitted fact, are well worth consideration.

And when we know that many of the reforms desired by such workers, (some not yet obtained, others obtained only after years of agitation) have been accomplished with very little trouble or loss of time, wherever woman suffrage is established, the hypothetical opinions of opponents, as to its disastrous consequences, which are based on theory alone have in the face of so much evidence to the contrary, no weight whatever.

In Utah, women voted when it was still a territory, in 1870. In 1874, Congress deprived both men and women, who contracted plural marriages of the franchise. In 1887, the entire feminine vote was declared illegal, but the right of women to vote was re-established when Utah was admitted to statehood, in 1896. Since their enfranchisement in that state, women have aided in securing measures providing for equal pay for equal work, raising the age of protection for young girls to 18, requiring instruction in physiology and hygiene in all schools, forbidding sale of tobacco, liquor, or opium to minors, providing for a free course of lectures at the capital, on sanitary science, hygiene, and nursing, providing for the protection of dependent or neglected children, establishing shorter hours for women workers, providing for medical examination of school children, prohibiting child labour in certain industries, prohibiting traffic in women, providing for sanitary inspection of places where foodstuffs are prepared, establishing kindergartens, prohibiting children from being on the streets at night, and giving local option on the liquor question. Such are some of the reforms which Utah's enfranchised women voters, and written testimony, from 35 mayors, as to the success of equal suffrage in that state, can be quoted.

In Finland, since women obtained the franchise, they have—not swept away religious marriage—but introduced the same binding civil marriage law which also holds good in Germany, France, Switzerland, Italy, and other European countries. This law is for the protection of women, and is intended to prevent the numerous "fake" marriages which occurred when a religious ceremony only was the binding one. A religious marriage in Finland is optional, but not binding alone; the civil marriage is; and no attempt to do away with the latter has ever been made. One of the first bills passed by women in Finland was the raising of the marriage age to 17. In Ontario men (?) and women (?) of 14 may be legally married. In England, and also in British Columbia, the marriage age is 12!

Though Controller Godfrey of Montreal, in all probability, owes his early training in cleanliness, honesty, and industry, to his mother, it does not follow that she was forced to confine herself to the narrow limits of her home, in order to give her son such training. Since Australia, New Zealand and Norway can also produce numbers of clean, honest and industrious men, and since mothers in those countries are allowed to vote one must conclude that those mothers are actually capable of performing the astonishing feat of instructing their sons in all the homely virtues, while also taking a broad outlook on the affairs of the nation.

Lord Salisbury and other eminent men, speaking of woman suffrage, have said that they knew of no argument against it; and when all is said and done there is no argument. All the parrots "phrases" set forth in so much length are but attempts to throw in the shadow and indistinct what is obvious to those to whom it has come as a matter of justice to demand, for women, suffrage is now a question of practice or expediency, but of simple justice.

Women are one-half the human race, they are complementary to men, they are human beings, and they are citizens. There is one test and one test only for granting even the suffrage—because it is just.

Toronto, April 26th, 1912.

100 PERSONS CURED OF ECZEMA

Within the past few months over 100 persons have written to the Zam-Buk Co. reporting their cure of eczema, rashes and skin diseases by Zam-Buk!

Does this not prove that Zam-Buk is something different?

Don't you need it in your household?

Miss Mary McCuaig, 913 St. Catherine Street W., Montreal, says: "I do not know words powerful enough to express my gratitude to Zam-Buk. Eczema broke out on my scalp and hands. The irritation of the scalp was so bad that I could not sleep or rest, and I feared I should have to have my hair cut off. On my hands the disease appeared in sore patches, the burning and itching of which drove me many times to spells of weeping. I went to the dispensary, but they referred me to a skin specialist, who said that mine was as bad a case of eczema as he had seen. He gave me some ointment, and then a second lot, but neither gave me any relief.

"I was in a very bad condition when Zam-Buk was introduced, but I soon found out that it was different from all the other remedies. I persevered with the Zam-Buk treatment, and each box did me more and more good. The irritation and smarting soon disappeared, then the sores began to heal, fresh healthy skin grew over the parts which had been sore, and I am now quite free from all traces of eczema, both on head and hands. My baby has also been cured."

Zam-Buk is also a sure cure for piles, ringworm, blood poisoning, sores, burns and all skin injuries. Refuse substitutes and insist on getting the genuine Zam-Buk. Druggists and stores, or post-free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price. Before remembered.

NASAL CATARRH

Responsible for Much Deafness, Hoarseness, Bronchitis and Stomach Trouble.

Medicated Air Will Cure

These are common diseases, but not less dangerous and difficult to cure on that account. In our climate the weather changes quickly. We are careless. Disease attacks us before we know it. A large majority of our people have nose, lung, or throat troubles, and find it hard to get cured.

It's remarkable with what tenacity both the medical profession and the laity adhere to the old theory that these diseases can be reached and combated by dosing. And this despite the fact that failure to cure is ninety-nine cases out of a hundred attends this mode of treatment.

STOMACH MEDICINE CAN'T CURE.

At best it is a roundabout way of trying to reach the disease which is in the air passages of the throat, nose, bronchial tubes and lungs. Leave the stomach alone—use a remedy that air will carry into the minutest air cells into the tiniest cavities of the affected organs.

LIQUID REMEDIES DANGEROUS.

Doctors say only "Catarrhozone" can cure—you inhale it along with the air you breath—it goes where the living disease germs are gnawing into your system—it kills these germs—it heals, soothes, it CURES.

CATARRHOZONE GUARANTEED.

Wouldn't it be wise to use Catarrhozone now—to-day—and be cured permanently?

You can send the soothing vapor of the pine woods, the richest balsam and healing essences, right to the cause of your trouble by inhaling Catarrhozone.

Little drops of wonderful curative power are distributed through the whole breathing apparatus in two seconds.

Like a miracle, that's how Catarrhozone works in bronchitis, catarrh, colds, and irritable throat. You simply breath its oily, fragrant vapor and every trace of congestion and disease flees as before fire.

So safe, infants can use it; so sure to cure, doctors prescribe it, as beneficial in preventing winter ills, no person can afford to do without Catarrhozone. Used in thousands of cases without failure. Try it yourself 25c, 50c, $1.00 sizes. Sold by all dealers, or by mail from the Catarrhozone Company, Kingston, Ont.

Oh how disappointed you are to see it.—Gray hairs take away that youthful appearance that you are so anxious to, and should keep,—for beauty and good looks depend so much upon natural colored, thick, glossy and healthy hair.

FAMOUS TRAGEDIES that BALKED SOLUTION

The Mysterious Case of Eva Mitchell, of Chicago, Who Was Found with Her Skull Crushed Twenty-four Years Ago—Beautiful Girl Whose Death Has Never Been Explained

(Copyright, 1912, by the New York Herald Co. All rights reserved.)

WHO killed Eva Mitchell?

What was the motive of the murder?

Where and in what circumstances was the fatal blow struck?

What instrument of death was used to commit the crime and what became of it?

After nearly twenty-four years of mystery these questions still are asked in Chicago. For weeks in 1888 the whole police and detective cunning of the city was focussed on this case. Droves of newspaper reporters applied their talents to it in vain. Every given clew was traced to a blind end. Every conceivable theory was put to the utmost test and none yielded the secret.

With all this collective effort not a single cardinal fact was established. The tragic truth is hidden as deeply to-day as it ever was. If "murder will out" in this instance the disclosure must wait on the answered promptings of a conscience in some breast that has found no peace since this beautiful girl was slain.

Unconscious and bleeding from a mortal wound on the back of the head, Eva Mitchell, nineteen years old, was found at half-past seven o'clock on the evening of November 10, 1888, lying in the driveway of Grand Boulevard, about one hundred and fifty feet south of Forty-third street. Two policemen, who were first to reach the girl's side, carried her into the home of Mrs. H. H. Goodrich near by. Thence the limp, senseless figure was taken to Michael Reese Hospital. Miss Mitchell died there within a short time without having regained consciousness. Her skull had been crushed near the base of the brain as if with a bar of iron or heavy stick of wood.

Eva Mitchell was the daughter of an Iowa farmer. Three years before the murder she had gone to Chicago to live with her grandmother. She became a member of the Oakland Methodist Church, and was one of the most faithful of its Sunday school attendants. According to her girl intimates and the older women she took into her confidence, she was a pure minded young woman of cheerful nature.

After her grandmother's death she went to live in the home of a stepbrother, Oliver Mitchell, whose income was barely large enough to care for his wife and babies. Thrown largely on her own resources, the girl sought and found employment in a medicine factory not far from her new home. She had worked there until half-past five o'clock of the evening she was murdered, whistling and humming light-heartedly as her fingers plied their simple task.

A Lonely Spot.

Twenty-four years ago that part of Grand Boulevard where the girl was picked up was a lonely place by night. On either side were scattered houses and wide prairie spaces. About a hundred feet to the east stood the uncompleted marble mansion started in his lifetime by Wilbur F. Storey, one of the picturesque Western newspaper editors of a quarter of a century or more ago.

This bleak pile of what was intended to be one of the "show places" of Chicago was a forbidding object, especially on a late autumn night. After Editor Storey died the townspeople thereabout heard weird tales about it—tales of haunted rooms, queer noises and dissolving wraiths. Eva Mitchell, timid as a fawn, shivered whenever she passed that way. She fancied that the windows were staring at her like owls' eyes. She didn't like the way the winds moaned about the shroud-like walls, and she never went past the place day or night if she could avoid it.

Between the unoccupied mansion and the spot where the girl was found was the lonely lodge of the caretaker, who was in his place all evening. On the west, 200 feet away, were five cottages. North and south was vacant prairie for 500 feet. It was a fit place for murder to stalk, but not one to which any girl would choose to wander alone. The bare trees of the boulevard and the shadows under them added their tribute to make the environment the more sombre.

Eva Mitchell had left the medicine factory shortly after half-past five o'clock with Maud Lewis, a sister worker and friend. The girls parted at Thirty-eighth street and Eva went directly to her home. After a hasty supper she left the house and went to the boarding house of Mrs. O. Stevens, by whom she had been employed for a time before she entered the factory. She chatted with Mrs. Stevens for a few minutes and was in her merriest mood. Then, glancing suddenly at the clock and observing it was nearing the hour of seven, she went away.

Mrs. Stevens was one of those in whom the girl was wont to confide her little joys and troubles. If Eva had made any plans or engagements for the rest of the evening it seemed likely, judging from her usual way, that she would have told Mrs. Stevens about them. Her glance at the clock was the one hint that she might have had an appointment.

A railroad flagman named Thomas (only his first name is given here to avoid possible embarrassment for him) had gone off duty at his shanty near the medicine factory. He met Eva Mitchell, whom he knew, at Wabash avenue and Fortieth street at about seven o'clock. His accounts of this meeting and what happened cost him his liberty for nearly a month. Thomas' tongue was an unruly member. Through misfortune, rather than fault, it would not tell the same story twice alike, and its frailty about relating details plunged its owner deeply into trouble. He was extricated therefrom at last by the testimony of half a dozen reputable witnesses, who established an alibi for him that satisfied most, if not all, the investigators.

Not in Runaway.

Thomas was a rather good looking Irishman who wore a wooden leg. He was considerably older than Eva Mitchell, but he admitted he was fond of "the little girl from Iowa," as he was wont to refer to her in his boarding house. He had made her acquaintance informally as the result of her frequent passing of his shanty as she went to and from the factory. Eva was much given to banter, and she enjoyed bits of repartee with the witty Irishman. This, together with her girlish liking for flattery, was the sole basis of her friendship for Thomas, according to other girls who knew her best. The flagman's friends said his fancy for the girl could not be called love. How he came to be involved so uncomfortably in the skein of theories will be unfolded farther on.

When the two policemen who found the dying girl observed the nature of the wound on her head, their first thought was that she had been waylaid by a highwayman. Belief in this idea was shaken when it was found that a gold ring on the victim's finger and her purse, containing a few dollars in bills and some small change, had not been taken. The theory was abandoned when friends told of Eva Mitchell's dread of the Storey mansion, and suggested the utter improbability of her going out of her natural course, alone and at night, to the point where she was found.

Then it occurred to the investigators that the girl might have been run down by a heavy traffic wagon as she was in the act of crossing the boulevard. Against this supposition was the three-cornered fact that such wagons were not allowed

'The Girl Came Along and Pressed Her Face Against the Window and Motioned for Tom to Come Out' obscured in the darkness drove along in a buggy. One of them shouted:—

"The runaway has gone south!"

The men then drove rapidly away and never were identified. The little group in the driveway, not having full knowledge at that time of the finding of the girl and the nature of her injury, naturally supposed there had been a runaway accident. The policeman, intent on his mission to procure a doctor with all possible haste, did not immediately consider what significance there might be in the cry of the man in the buggy.

What Thomas knew, if any, was he ever to tell? It is still a subject of interested speculation. It was established beyond question that Thomas had been on the boulevard, or at least that Eva Mitchell had met her victim of one. When the policemen reached her she was lying on her back, her hands folded across her breast as if on a bier. Her clothing was not torn, soiled or disarranged. Her hands and face were free of dirt and grime. The surgeons found no severe injury except that fracture of the skull. A brown derby hat was found on one side of the body, but it was such as might have come from falling headlong to the hard surface of the boulevard.

Nearby residents heard no clattering hoofs, no rumble of wheels, no screams as of one in terror. To the police no report of a runaway was made that night or thereafter. There were good reasons why, if it were an ordinary accident of this sort, the man in the conveyance should come back, if he were unhurt, to discover how the girl had fared. None came. If he were hurt, the fact, in all probability, would have been disclosed.

That the girl, brooding over some secret had appeared jealous of his brother, a young German medical student, because the latter found it easier to win the girl's smiles. Did the half-witted boy lure the girl and kill her? It was proved that he had not been in that part of Chicago for months.

The next theory for consideration was that one of the girl's admirers had lured her for a sinister purpose, that he had insulted her and that she fled from him in terror, only to be knocked insensible and left for dead. In that case there probably would have been drops of blood

What Doctors Say About Effect of Habits Upon Sight

HABIT may tend to stimulate acuteness of vision when the impression produced on the eye is neither too strong nor too often repeated. On the other hand, habit tends to weaken the eyesight and becomes harmful when it is carried to the extent of abuse or excess.

The retina in order to be stimulated and to fulfil its functions has constant need of its modifying agent, light. If this light is too bright or badly diffused, the retina, instead of being effectively stimulated, sustains injury and becomes congested and sluggish. In the long run such abuse and excess of light will lead to disorders and weakening of the eyesight.

Owing to the intimate connection existing between eyesight and the other organic functions, any abuse or excess in one's manner of living may have its effect on the vision. Immoderate use of tobacco, opium and alcohol may act in this way.

When tobacco is smoked in excess it produces a diminution of acuteness of vision owing to the toxic effects of nicotine. It is practically impossible to indicate the precise moment excess commences, because several factors contribute to bring about the poisoning—namely, the quality of the tobacco, the way in which it is smoked, the age of the subject and his degree of susceptibility to the toxic agent.

The visual trouble first makes all objects look as if they were covered with a kind of grayish mist, especially in the evening. Later colored luminous sensations occur, tinting objects red, green or blue. Lastly the acuteness and range of vision gradually begin to diminish, and sometimes end in almost complete blindness. If to these local ocular symptoms one adds the general phenomena, such as giddiness, fainting, cardiac and gastric troubles, broken sleep, nightmares, &c., a complete picture may be formed of the toxic effects of nicotine.

There is only one remedy in this case, and that is complete abstention from the use of tobacco under any form whatever. Once is certain when one has the energy to take this radical measure and to persist with it. As regards prophylaxis, it consists solely in exercising moderation in the tobacco habit. It is prudent not to begin smoking until a certain age, when the organism has attained its full development. Tobacco will then be better supported, and the smoker will be better able to regulate its use and the quantity consumed.

Everyone accustomed to indulge in smoking should know that excess may be prejudicial not only to the general health but also to the eyesight, and that it is advisable to exercise strict control over the amount smoked. As soon as the smoker experiences any visual trouble, however slight, he must pay heed to the warning and immediately and completely cease to satisfy the craving.

Opium smokers and opium eaters may be subject to visual troubles akin to those produced by the excessive use of tobacco. Opium and morphine are very often absorbed for a therapeutic purpose, either by way of the alimentary canal or through the cellular tissues in the form of hypodermic injections; or, again, in the form of fomentations or plasters on some particular part of the body.

Persons who have recourse to this medication in order to obtain relief in painful affections frequently end by becoming accustomed to it and are obliged gradually to increase the doses of the medicament. In this way they finish by absorbing considerable quantities, and when once they have acquired the habit of using opium and morphine it is very difficult for them to break it off.

This kind of excess is observed among those who have been authorised to make hypodermic injections for themselves. At first they resort to the practice of necessity, because they suffer pain; little by little, they use it solely by force of habit, and later it becomes a mania to produce the kind of intoxication afforded by opium.

Visual troubles, at first temporary, but tending to become permanent, often occur in these cases. The symptoms of these troubles are similar to those resulting from the toxic effects of tobacco, but the contraction of the pupil of the eye is more pronounced.

Eyesight troubles are very common owing to the habit of drinking between meals, which has extended enormously in recent years; owing also to the unheard of number of premises licensed for the sale of alcoholic beverages, and which are still increasing every day; owing finally to the numerous intoxicating liquors made from impure and harmful alcohol (extracted from grain, beetroot and potatoes) and sold to the public. The constant use of these beverages brings about a chronic poisoning of the system which manifests itself in continual troubles, included under the general term of "alcoholism," and which may be transmitted hereditarily under various forms.

Alcohol and tobacco are closely associated as a rule, and the consequent visual trouble presents characteristics common to both these toxic agents. It is this mixed form of the symptoms that the doctor most frequently has occasion to observe.

The affection due to alcohol is brought on more rapidly than that due to tobacco. The symptoms are:—(1) a mist before the eyes, (2) a marked diminution of acuteness of vision, (3) colored vision leading to confusion between gold and silver coins, (4) movement and flickering of the visual images, (5) a pupillary contraction when the affection is due solely to alcohol and tobacco has had no influence. The trouble is always binocular, and both eyes are affected to the same extent, the reverse of what is observed when nicotine is the only agent.

If one adds to these symptoms all the general symptoms of chronic alcoholism, such as loss of appetite, trembling, hallucinations, nightmare, &c., an idea may be formed of the visual troubles due to alcohol. In this case the total abstention from every kind of alcoholic beverage is the heroic remedy to be adopted—not merely a gradual and progressive diminution, but complete and sudden suppression of alcohol in every form.

[illegible] newspaper, man searches every piece of ground within five hundred feet for a stone, a club or a bar of iron which the murderer might have gotten rid of. Nothing else could be found that had been used in the summer gloaming save a saw. It was found—buried in the autumn prairie. The caretaker in the heavy sedge had heard no report and had seen no man or woman loitering around.

There seemed to be left only one reasonable supposition—that the girl had been struck with a bludgeon in some other part of the city, that her senseless form had been taken to the lonely spot in the boulevard, and that her companion, believing himself already a murderer, had lifted her from the conveyance and left her in the driveway to give the impression that she had been the victim of an accident.

Why should he have taken the risk involved in conveying the girl back to the only neighborhood where she was known? Possibly his striking the victim had been followed by a sweep of remorse, and he had feeling enough to hope that she would be more readily identified and would be given assurance of burial by relatives.

This is the stage where Thomas, the flagman, comes again into the spotlight of the story. The girl was killed on Saturday night. Thomas went to the morgue Sunday, and he was the first person to identify the body as that of Eva Mitchell. In subsequent questioning he detailed to the police the story of his leaving his shanty Saturday evening and of his seeing Eva Mitchell about seven o'clock at the corner of Wabash avenue and Fortieth street. Interest in his rambling recital became keen when he declared that the girl seemed to be waiting for some one, that a man drove up in a buggy and that Eva stepped into it, saying to Thomas as she did so:—

"Goodby, Tom; I'm going to elope. You won't see me again soon."

Thomas said, he could give no description of the man in the buggy, which, he declared, was driven rapidly north. The conveyance had stopped in a shadow in the street, obscuring the man's face, and besides, he said, he had no good reason to stare rudely into the buggy to see who was there.

"I didn't think it was my business," he said, "to pry into the girl's private affairs, and she didn't choose to tell me."

Thomas volunteered the further information that Miss Mitchell had passed his shanty shortly after six o'clock and that he talked with her there. She was then on the way to Mrs. Stevens' boarding house. A watchman for a gas company told more of this meeting.

"I was in the shanty with a couple of other fellows," he said, "when the girl came along and pressed her face against the window and motioned for Tom to come out. They talked on the platform, and then Tom came back. The only thing he said to us about it was, 'There's something queer about that girl.' Tom left the shanty a few minutes after that."

Thomas did not seem to wish to conceal anything he knew except, possibly, the identity of the man in the buggy. On the contrary, he talked too much for his good, contradicting his own statements frequently. The police at first mistook a natural weakness in the man for an evidence of guilt. They thought Thomas was floundering in a morass of half facts and half lies in a pitiful effort to save himself. They detained him for weeks and questioned him frequently, but never were able to get from him the straight, coherent story that they sought.

One detail of his account Thomas never omitted—that about the buggy and its unknown driver. He kept referring to a "married man," but always failed to give a clear notion what he was driving at in that connection. Effort was made to prove that Thomas, after meeting Eva Mitchell at Fortieth street, had accompanied her to the place where she was found and that he had gone thence to his boarding place. It was believed possible, though improbable, that he had battered the girl to death with his wooden leg.

Police Balked.

Pursuing the investigation along this line, the police soon found themselves balked at every turn. Two or three witnessed against as to the time he left the flag shanty. Others at the boarding house, including his landlady, said he arrived home for supper before half-past seven o'clock. A saloonkeeper told of selling him a drink and specified the time, which fitted well in the schedule furnished by the other witnesses.

Granting the reliability of these several witnesses, it was generally agreed that Thomas could not have been with the girl at Forty-third street and arrived home when he did. The thing seemed the more incredible considering that he had a wooden leg to hamper him.

One policeman offered evidence to combat this alibi. He said he had met Thomas near his boarding house and that the man could not have arrived there much before eight o'clock. If the policeman did not err in the time, it was believed Thomas might have been with the girl after all. Was he in reality the man in the buggy? If so, what became of the conveyance and the horse? Was there a confederate who helped him carry out a programme of crime? Did Eva Mitchell have a secret that some day must come out, and die, this secret affect Thomas?

At the final hearing before the Coroner's jury a woman physician submitted a notebook indicating that some months before the murder there had called on her for medical advice a young woman who gave the name Eva Mitchell and added part of the flagman's name to it. Convinced by overwhelming testimony that Thomas could not have committed the murder, the jury did [illegible] evidence of the woman doctor.

Every person who saw Thomas in his boarding house the night of the murder said he was in a jovial mood, and that he ate a hearty meal with manifest relish. He showed no trace of nervousness or mental distraction as he sat and chatted good naturedly for over an hour with those about him. His surprise seemed genuine the next morning, when he read about the crime in the Sunday newspapers. He said with some show of anxiety that the description of the murdered girl reminded him of "that pretty girl from Iowa," and soon left the house, saying he was going to the morgue to see if his suspicion might be well founded.

Among others taken into custody on suspicion was a young man employed as a clerk by Armour & Co. This young man's brother conducted a drug store on the first floor of a building in which was the home of Oliver Mitchell, where Eva Mitchell lived. For months the clerk had called on the girl twice a week. The ring found on her finger was placed there by him with the injunction that she keep it until he should ask for it. His friends and the girl's agreed it was not an engagement ring, and that the two were not betrothed. Anyhow, it was proved beyond question that the clerk had been at work at the stockyards until half-past seven o'clock, and that he had gone directly from the yards to his brother's drug store.

A gripman on one of the old cable street car lines was arrested and questioned. He had become acquainted with Eva Mitchell when she was a maid in Mrs. Stevens' house, where the gripman boarded. He had acted frequently as her escort, but there was evidence of nothing more than a friendly relation between the two. A satisfactory alibi for him was established by Mrs. Stevens and her noble patrons.

More menacing for a time was the cloud that hung over a good looking newspaper carrier who had pressed his suit for the girl's affections with more vigor than discretion. Eva had been gracious to him until she saw him one afternoon coming out of a saloon. Thereafter her attitude toward him changed.

Who Was in Buggy?

Eva had told her girl chums many stories about the carrier—how he tried to force his attentions on her, how he tried to exact from her a promise that she would give up the packing house clerk and how angry and jealous he appeared to be when she refused. It was suspected the carrier made a last desperate plea to the girl, that she rejected him and that in a fit of jealous frenzy he assaulted her with a bludgeon. The lead seemed promising, but the carrier, like the rest, accounted for all his movements, corroborated his story through witnesses and was turned loose.

Many days after the investigation began a story arose that a one-time suitor had proposed marriage to and had been accepted by Eva Mitchell; that he subsequently had fallen heir to $10,000, left him by relatives in Europe; that he had jilted his fiancée; that he was threatened by her with suit for breach of promise, and that he had been much disturbed over this prospective turn of affairs, especially as he had transferred his affections to another. The conclusion postmed for this tale was that the man had asked the girl to go riding to talk things over, that a quarrel ensued and that he accomplished with a bludgeon what he failed to do by persuasion.

Atop of this story came another newly report of vital interest. A grocer told of a man and woman he had seen driving southward in a buggy in Grand Boulevard at Thirty-ninth street, four blocks north of the point where the girl was found dying. The two were talking loudly, as if in anger, said the grocer, and the girl was particularly aggressive in her remarks, the tenor of which he could not catch. Was this the buggy into which the flagman said he had seen Eva Mitchell enter, and was it on a return trip from a short course northward?

Some doubt was thrown on the report of the grocer. Had he really seen a buggy at the time and place mentioned, or had his imagination been stimulated by some psychological process as a result of his reading every day for a week first page stories of the crime? It seemed strange that he had not reported the alleged incident earlier.

Diligent inquiry was made to identify the man who had fallen heir to a fortune. Nobody was found who had ever heard of or seen such an individual, and the yarn was cast away as one of the myths of the case.

One month after the murder a coroner's jury returned a verdict that Eva Mitchell had been killed by a person whose name and motive were unknown to it. Amateur detectives toiled on the case for months, but none was able to lift or rend the veil.

Opinion was and is general that the fatal blow was struck in either [illegible] conveyance, hat whose, why, and whether by suitor or some one else is still a matter for speculation.

Whose was the buggy and into what place of mystery did it go? Will a death-bed voice some day tell how Eva Mitchell, the cheery Sunday school girl, went to her tragic fate?

Makes the Hair Grow Long, Heavy and Luxurant and We Can Quickly Prove It

If You Wish to Double the Beauty of Your Hair at Once, Just Get a 25 Cent Bottle and Try This

Surely try a Danderine Hair Cleanse if you wish to immediately double the beauty of your hair with little trouble and one cent not worth mentioning—just moisten a cloth with a little Danderine and draw it carefully through your hair, taking one small strand at a time, this will cleanse the hair of dust, dirt or any excessive oil—In a few moments you will be amazed. Your hair will be wavy, fluffy and abundant and possess an incomparable softness, lustre and luxuriance, the beauty and shimmer of true hair health.

Besides beautifying the hair, one application of Danderine dissolves every particle of Dandruff; cleanses, purifies and invigorates the scalp, forever stopping itching and falling hair.

Danderine is to the hair what fresh showers of rain and sunshine are to vegetation. It goes right to the roots, invigorates and strengthens them. It's exhilarating, stimulating and life-producing properties cause the hair to grow abundantly long, strong and beautiful. It at once imparts a sparkling brilliancy and velvety softness to the hair, and a few weeks' use will cause new hair to sprout all over the scalp. Use it every day for a short time, after which two or three times a week will be sufficient to complete whatever growth you desire.

You can surely have pretty, soft, lustrous hair, and lots of it, if you will just get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store or toilet counter and try it as directed.

INJURED IN A RUNAWAY

Runaway Team Collides With Two Rigs at Hastings

Special to The Examiner:

HASTINGS, APRIL 30.—An accident which might easily have proved more serious, occurred on Tuesday last when two rigs were run into by a runaway team. As it was, however, the only person who was seriously injured was a young man named Spooner, who was picked up for dead, but at present is on the fair road to recovery. Eye-witnesses of the runaway say that things looked pretty serious for a time and everyone is feeling thankful that the citizens escaped with their lives.

The Ladies' Aid of the Methodist church met on Thursday p.m. at the home of Mrs. J. Lenderville, a large number being in attendance. After the regular routine of business had been disposed of, light luncheon was served and a social hour spent together, enlivened by some fine selections from the phonograph.

Mr. H. Thistlewaite occupied the pulpit in the Methodist church on Sunday morning, in the absence of the pastor, Rev. T. Anderson.

The weather on Friday evening was not very favourable for the 'measuring social,' which was held under the auspices of the Epworth League. Nevertheless a goodly number braved the elements and came out to enjoy the evening. The proceeds were in favour of the 'Forward Movement' and would no doubt have been largely augmented had the weather been fine.

Is Sickness A Habit?

With many sickness undoubtedly becomes to some extent a habit. They have "bilious spells," "sick headaches," "attacks of indigestion." Why not shake loose from these ailments and know once more the joy of good health?

It takes a little will power. You may have to deny yourself some luxuries which do not agree with you, but it is worth while to be well and to prolong life. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills will help you, because they act definitely and directly on the liver and thereby remove the cause of biliousness, headache and indigestion.

Stir up the liver by taking one Kidney-Liver pill occasionally at bedtime and you will free yourself of many annoying ills, the temper will be less irritable and you will find more joy in living.

The funeral of the late Edward Grandy took place on Saturday afternoon, April 27th, from his residence, George street. The service was conducted by Rev. Robt. Burns, pastor of the Methodist church of which church the deceased was a member. He referred to his life and character as one of gentleness and kindness, and spoke of the high esteem in which he was held as a citizen. There was little doubt but that his death was due to heart failure, owing, perhaps to the extra effort needed to keep his canoe afloat in the rough state of the lake. The condition of the body gave every indication of this. The deceased as a member of the I. O. F., of Omemee. The members of the Court attended the services, and accompanied the remains to Emily cemetery, where interment was made.

Mrs. Kane was in Lindsay on Saturday.

Practices are being held for the "Bachelors' Congress," and every effor is being put forth to make this success of the season.

Mr. J. B. Pearce of Norwood, was in town on Friday last.

Mr. Jas. Thompson, M.P.P., was in Toronto last week for a few days.

Mr. Jas. E. Fowler was in Peterborough on Friday last.

The citizens were greatly shocked on Thursday last when the report was circulated of the very sudden death of Mr. Richard Phillips of town, hardware merchant. He was perfectly well on going to bed, but was found dead by his son Ralph the following morning at 9 o'clock. Physician Dr. Holdcroft was called and said he had been dead about four hours. Deceased was a highly respected citizen, having lived here for many years. The funeral took place from his residence, Matheson street, on Saturday afternoon at 1 o'clock, under the auspices of Havelock lodge, A. F. and A. M., of which deceased was a member, and proceeded to the Maple Grove cemetery for interment. He leaves to mourn his loss one son, Ralph, one brother, Mr. George Philps of town, and two sisters, Mrs. S. S. Joyce of town and Mrs. Sutherland, residing in Toronto. The many floral tributes received testify to the very high esteem in which deceased was held. The heartfelt sympathy of all is extended to the bereaved and sorrowing friends.

Mr. Livingstone has been engaged as clerk in Mr. J. M. Watson's store.

The members of the choir of Our Lady of Mount Carmel church assembled at the residence of Mrs. A. E. McGuire on Thursday evening, April 18th, and presented her with a beautiful cabinet, accompanied by an address. The address was read by Miss Eva Lynch and the presentation made by Mr. Robt. Quinlan. Mrs. McGuire was greatly taken by surprise, but replied in a few well chosen words, thanking them one and all for the beautiful gift and assuring them of her sorrow at leaving. Mrs. McGuire and daughter Maudie expect to leave shortly to join Mr. McGuire at Moose Jaw, where in future they will reside.

How Dayton Ladies Cure Their Corn-Pinched Toes

Miss M. Lukey, of Zena Ave., Dayton Ohio, writes: "Before using 'Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor' I was quite laid up with corns, and could not even stand the pressure of a loosely buttoned shoe. I applied Putnam's 'Extractor,' and in a miraculously short time I was completely cured. I take great pleasure in recommending your valuable remedy to my friends." Putnam's Corn Extractor in 25c. bottles, sold by druggists.

RAILWAY NOTES

Three gold medals and three diplomas, won by the Grand Trunk Railway System at the great Exhibition of 1910, have just been received at the Company's headquarters in Montreal from Mr. F. C. Selter, European Trade Manager, through the courtesy of Colonel William Harrison, Commissioner of the Canadian Exhibition. These are granted to the Grand Trunk and Grand Trunk Pacific Railways for their installation, exhibit, and building.

The medals, which are exceedingly handsome, are about two and a half inches in diameter. The obverse shows a heavy bas-relief of a mounted herald and the inscription, "Royaume Belgique Erposition Universelle de Bruxelles 1910"; and the reverse is ranked by two symbolic figures in bold relief, depicting the crowning of Labor, and the date 1910.

The Seims Carey Company of St. Paul, which has one of the largest contracts west of the Cache, is now assembling equipment at various points previous to early shipment to the base of operations. It is estimated that there will be at least eight large freight and passenger boats in service after June 1st. In addition to this, a large fleet of gasoline launches is now being built and will be launched immediately. Mr. P. Welch of the firm of Foley, Welch and Stewart, who has charge of all the work along the line of the G. T. P., is expected at Fithugh shortly and it is believed that his coming will result in increased activity. Already there are upwards of 4,000 men on the work with more arriving daily from the east, so that by the opening of spring there will be approximately 8,000 men upon the grade. The Railway now has steam shovels at work in Pittsburgh, the present western terminus, grading the yards and lining the tracks.

Motor Defective Gear.

Boston, May 2.—The refusal of the Republican delegates at large to accept Col. Roosevelt's decision yesterday that they should vote for President Taft at the Chicago convention, although elected as Roosevelt delegates, has further complicated the situation arising from the state primaries Tuesday. The situation is acknowledged by party leaders of both sides to be without parallel in the political history of the commonwealth.

In response to the delegates at large, Col. Roosevelt declared it to be his wish to abide by the will of the people, and that, therefore, the delegates, though elected as pledged to him should vote for Mr. Taft, who had received their Presidential preference vote. One by one the delegates, as they were heard from yesterday, however, protested that under no circumstances would they cast their ballots other than they had been pledged.

Shot Her Husband.

Memphis, Tenn., May 2.—That Mrs. Olive D. Corgill shot and killed her husband Monday night because she feared that Corgill would kill her, as well as their children, is asserted in a statement made by J. F. Rose, father of the woman. Mrs. Corgill is under arrest.

Mrs. Corgill told her father that her husband, despondent because his search for employment had been unsuccessful, had been drinking.

"He told me he didn't have a dollar or a friend and struck me," Mrs. Corgill said. "He said he was going to kill me, the children and himself and end it all, and threatened me unless I got him the pistol. I got the gun and shot him."

Court Adjourned When Fire Started.

Perth, May 2.—Fire destroyed a couple of barns here Tuesday night. The fire broke out as the suit of the Canadian Electric & Waterpower Co. against the town was being heard, and the court adjourned at the time. Counsel for the litigants visited the fire to see what pressure the company produced under fire conditions. The town refused to pay the hydrant rental, claiming that the company was not giving the pressure required by contract. Judgment was reserved.

Coachman Killed at Galt.

Galt, May 2.—Henry Corbett, an Englishman, a coachman for J. O. Dietrich, was killed yesterday morning while driving a young horse attached to a light wagon along Blair road, towards Dietrich's residence. The animal bolted and the driver was thrown against a tree and his neck broken. He was to have been joined by his wife and three little children, now in the old land next month.

Loss Exaggerated.

Ottawa, May 2.—It was stated at the Public Works Department yesterday that the damage from the collapse of a part of the Quebec breakwater is greatly exaggerated, and that it will be nowhere near half a million as reported in despatches.

Wireless Will Never Sleep.

Washington, May 2.—A twenty-four-hour-a-day, vigil at a wireless instrument will be required after July 1 of every kind of craft leaving an American port and carrying one hundred persons if the Hitchcock bill, passed Tuesday by the Senate, is agreed to by the House of Representatives.

The bill specifies that each vessel must have two operators, one of whom must be always on duty, and the wireless apparatus must be capable of sending messages one hundred miles and receiving them from a like distance.

Shampoo the hair once a week with pure soap and water.

Use PARISIAN SAGE every day, rubbing thoroughly into scalp.

PARISIAN SAGE is guaranted by Wm. Madill to destroy dandruff germs and abolish dandruff, or money back.

To stop hair from falling and scalp from itching, or money back.

To put life and beauty into dull, faded hair, or money back. Price 50 cents.

Hole in Titanic Model.

New York, May 2.—A large crate stands on White Star pier 61 awaiting shipment to England on the Adriatic. It contains a thirty-foot model of a giant ocean liner, and cost $15,000 to build, but it is not of any use for exhibition purposes now. It is a model of the Titanic.

This replica is an exact duplication of the sunken leviathan down to the minutest detail. It was sent to this country to be exhibited as a specimen of the unsinkable ship. There is one strange coincidence about the model. There is a large rent at the bow, from keel to uppermost deck stanling, to the one that sent the Titanic to the bottom. Also there are davits for twenty lifeboats, but only twelve boats are shown.

Stole Money for Sweetheart.

Chicago, May 2.—Mary Reynolds, ticket agent, employed by the Illinois Central Railroad, who told the police a story of being held up and robbed of $150 by two men in the station Tuesday night, confessed yesterday that she had concocted the story of the robbery and had given the money to her sweetheart.

"I took the money and gave it to Charles Duff," she said. "We were soon to be married and neither of us had much money. The money is hidden in a cigar box, buried at the base of a telegraph pole at Fifth avenue and Michigan avenue."

Finest Office in the World.

New York, May 2.—On the last day of this month, the finest, costliest and most beautiful private office in the world will be opened on the 31st storey of the Bankers' Trust Co. building, at Wall and Nassau streets.

Its floors will be of teakwood, inland with ebony. Its surfaces and ceiling mouldings will be of the same precious wood. On the walls will hang paintings by old masters of Europe. On the floors will repose the handsomest specimens of the oriental ragmakers' art.

There will be no name on the door, but it will be the office of J. Pierpont Morgan.

Connaught's Birthday.

London, May 2.—In honor of the Duke of Connaught's birthday, bells were rang and a royal salute was fired at Windsor. Flags were also flying on the Government offices in London. The Canadian Governor-General is 62 years old, having been born on May 1, 1850.

Montreal Not Affected.

Montreal, May 2.—The Ontario increase in the price of coal leaves Montreal unaffected, and dealers do not anticipate any advance in prices.

Body Found In River.

London, Ont., May 2.—The body of an unknown man, well dressed and about 45 years of age, was found in the Thames River at Courtwright. There is a gash across the forehead, and another along the side of the head, but whether these are due to ice or timber during the floods, or to blows, is not yet certain. An inquest will be held.

Honor for Injured Aviator.

Paris, May 2.—Jules Vedrines, the aviator, is still in a critical condition. He has been decorated with the Legion of Honor for late achievements in aviation.

The Point of the Cape of Good Hope.

Cape point, which terminates the mighty headland known as the Cape of Good Hope, consists of a towering promontory of sandstone, which rises from the sea to an altitude of 350 feet. At the base of this stands a big solitary column which is known as Vasco da Gama's pillar. The lighthouse which here illuminates the meeting place of the Atlantic and Indian oceans is one of the most important and most useful of its kind. It is visible from a distance of thirty-six miles. The cliff scenery is wild and sublime, the rocks are magnificent, and the far reaching sea, with the fierce surf beating on the iron bound coast, is impressive. In the water directly beneath the cliff sharks are abundant.

PETERBORO'S SEWAGE MUST NOT BE EMPTIED INTO THE OTONABEE RIVER

Townships of North and South Monaghan Threaten an Injunction to Restrain the City From Polluting the River—Council Suddenly Finds Itself Confronted by a Big and Expensive Problem—Townships Have Power Under New Act.

DR. M'CULLOUGH EXPLAINS CITY'S POSITION

As the result of an Act passed during the last session of the Legislature, and which recently came into force, the city must no longer empty into the Otonabee River its sewage, in the form in which it has been passing through the outlet at the foot of Lock street.

The townships of North and South Monaghan and Otonabee, through their counsel, Messrs. Peck, Kerr and McElderry, have notified the city that they will issue an injunction against the city to prohibit the discharging of Peterborough's sewage into the river, and thus the storm clouds that have been gathering from the south for several years, have at last broken, in the form of a problem which the city will have to deal with, apparently at once, and which is likely to involve a considerable amount of money.

Upon receipt of the notice, Mayor Bradburn asked that no further action be taken now, and immediately called a meeting of the Committee of the Whole Council, which met on Wednesday night, with His Worship presiding, and all the aldermen present.

Townships Are Co-operating.

Mayor Bradburn said in part: The Townships of North Monaghan and Otonabee have separately brought the question of the city's outfall sewer before the Council. Nothing was ever done with it. Now, they have combined as one body, and threaten an injunction to prevent us from emptying the sewage into the river. I wrote to Mr. Peck at once, and then got in touch with Dr. John W. S. McCullough, secretary and chief health officer of the Provincial Board of Health. He will be here to-night. What we will have to do, I do not know, but we will have to do something. The matter has been before the Provincial Board, and as the law now stands, they will simply compel us to stop emptying the sewage into the river. The new Act has come into force but recently.

Mayor Bradburn stated to Dr. McCullough that he had been asked to come to Peterborough in order to explain the city's position to the Council, and to offer any advice he considered useful. The meeting then took the form of a series of questions from the Mayor and Aldermen, and Dr. McCullough's replies.

City Can be Prevented.

Dr. McCullough—"My opinion is that the Townships can prevent you from putting the sewage into the river. As you know there is now an average of 2,000,000 gallons of sewage passing into the river every 24 hours.

Mayor Bradburn—"Do you think the river is being polluted to any great extent?"

Dr. McCullough—"I think so."

Mayor Bradburn—"Do you think they have a good cause for complaint?"

Dr. McCullough—"I think so. I don't see how the conditions could be much worse."

This statement was made after reports were submitted of examinations made by Dr. McPherson and Dr. Amyiot, Government analyst, of water taken at various places in the river south west of the city, and which were regarded as favourable.

Septic Tank Not Sufficient.

Ald. Gillespie asked if a septic tank would not be suitable if built near the outlet.

Dr. McCullough replied that it disposed of from 30 to 50 per cent. of the material, and was not sufficient to safeguard against the pollution of the river. After the sewage had passed through the septic tank it would still be a nuisance.

The Doctor's Advice.

Dr. McCullough—"My advice would be that you establish a sedimentation tank. The sewage does not remain in it longer than two or three hours. By this system there is no septic action in the sedimentation of the solids in the tank. The solids drop to the bottom, and remain there probably for 2 or 3 months, and are allowed to dry. They are then something like earth and can be used as fertilizer. The effluent, that is the liquid part that passes through the tank, should be put on a sand and gravel filter bed. Then, if there was any doubt that the water was still impure it could be treated with chloride of lime as they are doing in Toronto.

Mayor Bradburn—"What would we do in the winter time?"

Dr. McCullough—"You would probably have to cover it."

In reply to Ald. Johnston, he stated that he did not know what the cost would be.

Other Towns Doing It.

Dr. McCullough stated that Guelph had a sedimentation tank. Toronto is providing one. Preston has contracted for one, and Carleton Place also. At the experimental plant, conducted by the Ontario Board of Health, the Imhoff sedimentation tank had been erected, as a model. He recommended this form of tank as a modern method of dealing with the sewage question. In Columbus, O., there was a large Imhoff equipment, where the filters covered about five or six acres.

Will Need Four Acres or More.

To Mr. Hall, he said that Peterborough would need about four or five acres for its filter. The effluent is purified by passing through the sand and gravel. In Preston they are installing an Imhoff tank for rapid sedimentation and the effluent is allowed to pass over a filter of broken stone, and before passing into the river it flows through loosely butted tiles.

Must Keep Water Pure.

Dr. McCullough—"All the towns and cities in the Province must stop putting sewage into rivers. If this is not done the water supply will soon become like that in most of the rivers in the United States. All good water would be destroyed. That's what it is coming to. Toronto passed its sewage into the bay until the water was not fit to drink. Now, they are spending large sums of money to get pure water.

Ald. Gordon suggested that a Committee be formed to deal with the question.

Dr. McCullough—"Allow me to suggest what you ought to do. You should employ an engineer to go over the ground and prepare a plan to provide for your requirements. You will never be satisfied until you have a perfect system. Submit the plan to the people, or you can submit a by-law without putting the matter before the people."

Ald. Butler—"If we buy the necessary land can the township prevent us from using it for this purpose?"

Will Not be a Nuisance.

Dr. McCullough—"If you put in a system that satisfies the Provincial Board of Health we will guarantee that there will be no kick from the Township. In Toronto, their plant is down in the east end, where people are living, but no one is kicking. There were some objections before it was completed, but these have petered out. Your city has increased sixty per cent during the past ten years, and you should provide for the next ten or twenty years."

Ald. Johnston—"The present trunk sewer is becoming inadequate, and we are coming face to face with a big problem."

Ald. Morgan—"The Board of Health has taken such an active part in this matter that I think they might send a man down here and outline a plan for us.

Secure An Engineer.

Ald. Duncan—"Could you remain over to-morrow and go over the city with us?"

Dr. McCullough stated that he would telephone to the Provincial Board's engineer, in Toronto, to come to Peterborough on Thursday (to-day), and they could examine conditions here with the Council.

Ald. Johnston — "That's a good caper."

This idea pleased the whole Council.

East City Question.

Mayor Bradburn — "We are up against a difficulty in East City, too. There are no sewer mains across the river. We have a septic tank and it looks as if we will have to do something with that.

A Big Proposition.

From Dr. McCullough's statements it appears that to install the Imhoff rapid sedimentation plant, a large concrete tank would have to be built, probably forty or fifty feet high or more and of a particular size. It is conical in shape toward the bottom. The sewage would have to be pumped into this tank from the top. The solids would drop to the bottom and the

THE BRITISH INQUIRY HAS COMMENCED

Will Investigate the "Titanic Disaster—One Hundred Lawyers Were Present at the Opening of Court

ADJOURNMENT MADE.

LONDON, ENG., MAY 2.—Lord Mersey and his British Court of Enquiry into the Titanic disaster, opened proceedings in the Scottish drill hall to-day. From the statement of the Attorney General it was evident that the inquiry would take much the same line as the Senate investigation at Washington. Sir Rufus Isaacs announced that owing to the detention of the chief witnesses at the United States inquiry, adjournment must be taken to-day. With other lawyers he made a feeling reference to the heroism displayed when the Titanic went down. It was worthy, he said, of the best traditions of the British Mercantile Marine. There were a hundred lawyers present, representing various interests, and nearly two hundred members of the press. The attendance of spectators was small.

Lord Mersey is a naval expert, himself, but is assisted by five others, who have been commanders of ocean liners, battleships, marine engineers and so on, all specialists in their own classes. The proceedings take the form of specific questions, like "Why was there no searchlight?" One of the newest and most startling features of the inquiry is this question: "Why were the majority of the children of the steerage passengers drowned?" The Court has power to make recommendations that will become law when adopted by the Government.

SENTENCED TO 5 YEARS

Case of Joseph Cross Was Disposed of This Morning in the County Court by His Honour Judge Huycke

A BRUTAL OFFENCE

"You have pleaded guilty to a most contemptible and cowardly act, which the law very properly recognizes as a very serious crime. The maximum punishment for the offence is life imprisonment. it might be good for you, or it might be bad. I do not know. It is necessary for your punishment, and your protection as well as for the protection of those who might fall victims to your cowardly and detestable actions, that some punishment be inflicted upon you. The sentence of this court is that you be confined in the Provincial Penitentiary of Ontario for five years.

With these remarks, His Honour Judge Huycke sentenced Joseph Cross, who was charged with having committed an unnatural offence, to five years' imprisonment. Seldom has a prisoner, in the annals of the Peterborough County Court history, faced a more serious and contemptible crime than that which was read out to Cross this morning. Crown Attorney Wood was present on behalf of the Crown and Mr. G. N. Gordon acted for the defence. With him was Dr. Bruce Smith, Inspector of Prisons for Ontario.

Changed Plea to "Guilty".

At the opening of the Court the prisoner changed his former plea of not guilty to one of guilty. Nothing remained for the Court then but to pass sentence.

Crown Attorney Wood produced a statement from the Chief of Police, Ottawa, and also one from the Warden of the Central Prison, Toronto, which went to show that Cross was a much-convicted man. Among the many convictions recorded against him was one of larceny. He served a term of four years' imprisonment for this offence.

A Moral Degenerate.

Mr. G. N. Gordon, in addressing the Court before sentence was passed upon the prisoner, described Cross as being a moral degenerate of a very bad type. He believed him to be suffering from a species of insanity and degeneracy of the mind which placed him in a class by himself. "The boys of our country must be protected, and the prisoner needs protection for himself," said the counsel for defence, in conclusion.

When asked whether he had anything to say why the sentence of the Court should not be passed, the prisoner replied: "I plea guilty, but I do not know whether I am guilty or not,"

His Honour then imposed a sentence of five years' imprisonment.

FAMILIES ARE MOVING

A Busy Time For a Large Number Who For Various Reasons Are Changing Landlords

DOZENS MOVE EVERY DAY

This is the season when many citizens take up their beds and walk. Rather, they call a moving van to their back or front doors as the case may be and seek out a new abode. With some it is a habit. The spring moving season makes them restless and their future contentment is to some extent dependent upon their finding a new domicile. With others it is a case of necessity. The landlord for some reason or other gave notice a month ago. It may have been delinquency in the payment of rents, it may have been that the children tearing up the lawn last summer, or it may have been that the landlord has been to blame.

At any rate the Peterborough Fuel and Carriage Company is moving the effects of a dozen households daily, and have been busy for days past and there has been no let up to the demand as yet. It is a case with the tenant of out of the old and into the new. Some like novelty and the experience of moving is surely novel enough. Think of the delights of tearing up carpets and putting up stovepipes. Some husbands take a day off answering to the call of spring, although moving is a labour rather than a leisure. Others wait until the evening in order to lose no time. Last night in some parts of the city the lares and penates of more than one house were dragged forth after the hours of dark to be set up in some other dwelling.

DICTIONARIES ARE ESSENTIAL TO THE HOME

One Given Away by The Examiner for Coupon and Little Money is the Recognized Authority on Words.

A MOST SURPRISING OFFER

The publishers of The Examiner believe that a good dictionary, often consulted, breeds a good habit. Outside of the schools and classrooms, it is the best educator known. Inside of them it is a necessity. Next to a baby in the house it comes nearest being "a joy forever," a blessing that cannot be spared. It teaches a multitude of things, and never goes wrong or tells what is not true.

Give your child a dictionary up-to-date, encourage frequent reference to it, let such reference become a habit, and the educational benefits will surprise you and greatly delight and develop him or her.

We are making all this easy for you in our offer of the Funk and Wagnall Comprehensive Standard Dictionary for six Examiner coupons and the nominal sum of eighty-nine cents. If the book were brought to you by a salesman you would realise its great value, and appreciate the opportunity we afford. If the salesman asked you to pay $4 for it, you would not think the price too high for a volume so large, numbering so many pages, printed so well and bound so finely in its flexible-leather-red-edge style. Thousands of copies like it, produced from the same plates, have been sold at this price. That we can really give it away now, asking only that you pay the eighty-nine cents, to cover the cost of handling and transportation, is due to The Examiner's liberality and enterprise, and to the great bargain made with the Funk & Wagnalls company, publishers.

Remember, that six Examiner coupons and the small sum required with it, brings you the cream of a work which is recognised as the masterpiece of English lexicography all over the world, which commanded the service of 247 great specialists in its production, and which cost over a million and one hundred thousand dollars. But there will be a rush for this one abridged edition which The Examiner has procured of this marvellous authority, and you will need to apply soon or perhaps be disappointed. When you see all its dictionary wealth of words, with the census, maps and other features which you will not find elsewhere in such connection, you will want this great book, for yourself.

THE FIRST DROWNING FATALITY OF SEASON

Mr. James Peters of 491 Parnell Street Drowned in a Tributary of the Otonabee Last Evening, When Boat Capsized—Inquest Unnecessary—Body Has Been Recovered

The river Otonabee claimed its first victim of the season at about 7 o'clock last night, when Mr. James Peters, of 491 Parnell street, fell from a capsized boat into its waters and was drowned.

Mr. Peters, who is the assistant fisheries inspector, was out in a boat inspecting the fishing a short distance this side of Hale's Bridge, accompanied by Mr. Robert Thorndyke. While proceeding along Baxter's Creek, the boat upset and precipitated both its occupants into the water. Luckily, Messrs. Orme and Fred Stewart of Otonabee chanced to be in the vicinity and hearing cries, rushed to the banks of the creek, confiscated a boat nearby and rowed out to midstream. With difficulty both men were hauled into the boats, but Mr. Peters was already dead. The body was taken to the residence of Mr. J. Bonar of Wallace Point and the city ambulance, which had been summoned, arrived, and the remains were conveyed to Comstock's undertaking establishment.

A singular circumstance of the fatality was that this spot in the creek is by no means deep. But the water is very cold, which fact may have played some part in the tragedy.

The family were notified of their loss by Orme Stewart, who telephoned to the city. Several of them, however, who were not at home at the time, were not acquainted of the matter until five o'clock this morning. Coroner Greer examined the body this morning, but it was not thought necessary to hold an inquest.

The late Mr. Peters was well known throughout Peterborough. He was fifty years of age and is survived by a sorrowing wife, five sons and six daughters, namely: Fred and William of Toronto, George of Winnipeg, Harry, Frank, Pearl, Jennie, Hazel, Lily, Dorothy and Mrs. Frost, all of Peterborough. Mr. Chas. Peters of Otonabee is a brother.

The funeral will take place at 2.30 on Saturday at the Little Lake cemetery. The Rev. J. C. Brown, of St. James' church, will officiate.

MR. DUMBLE ON THE PURCHASE OF THE EXHIBITION GROUNDS

To the Editor of The Examiner:

I read with much interest the views of your informant anent the purchase o fthe present fair grounds. I agree heartily with him. I am not opposed to the city buying the 30 acres of land, but I believe it would be a great mistake to buy for a fair ground, and I give you my reasons:

1. It would keep a large block of land, enclosed with a very high fence, for a small fair to be held during two days of each year.

2. It would compel people to trudge around a block 1600 ft. long by 900 ft. wide, thus separating the town into two distinct parts.

3. If $30,000 be paid for a fair ground, there will be continuous expenditures year after year, perhaps $30,000 or $40,000, so that the interest alone on the expenditure would be probably $3,000 a year.

4. The fair has never but once netted more than one half of that sum and merchants say the fair is not of more benefit to the business men than a good Saturday.

5. After a lot of money is sunk in buildings it will make it difficult to change the place of holding the fair, as the buildings would be useless for any other purpose.

6. Suitable fair grounds can be bought for less than half the money, and will be good enough for two days a year.

If the city buys the fair grounds, let them be bought as sites for manufactures, put a street through the centre and two freight tracks — lease building lots at a nominal rent to manufacturers or put up buildings and lease buildings at a nominal rent. What this town wants more than anything else is manufactures to bring in people. We don't want fancy schemes that will cost a mint of money to increase our taxes, for God knows the people inside they are already too high.

Respectfully yours,
D. W. DUMBLE.

WILLIAM SMOKE FINED $24.10

Alderville Indian Convicted Under New Amendment to Liquor Act.

The first conviction under the new amendment to the Liquor Law was recorded here when Wm. Smoke, an Alderville Indian, was fined $24.10, for being intoxicated in a public place. Smoke, who had been trapping muskrats at Mud Lake, journeyed to Peterborough on Wednesday morning with a bundle of fur. He came back on the noon train with a "jag" and a bottle of liquor, which he stated he purchased from two strangers on the train. In company with a local antilocal optionist, the bottle was soon empty and the "jag" increased to a pronounced "drunk." Licanse Inspector Williams crossed his trail and escorted him into camp, cell No. 1, where he ashered up for appearance before Magistrate Mathison and Joyce. He pleaded guilty to the charge of intoxication and was fined the minimum amount under the new amendment to the Act, $20.00 and costs, which he managed to scrape up from various acquaintances about town. Their Worships and the Inspector were of the opinion that Smoke purchased the "joy water" in Peterborough, and although threatened with a further fine of $20.00 and costs for offering to buy liquor from an unlicensed person, the red man persisted in his story that he obtained it on the train. The conviction should be a warning to others not to get "under the influence" in a local option town.—Havelock Standard.

A CLOSE CALL FOR INSURANCE BILL

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, MAY 2.—According to the Daily Telegraph this morning, the British government just escaped defeat in the Commons last night by accepting the opposition amendments to insurance bill to the effect that the medical profession cooperate in administration of this act. It seems that the ministerial supporters had not responded at all heartily to the call of the whips, and the opposition was out in full force. It was a narrow squeak for Asquith, and Lloyd George's insurance bill was severely stabbed to save the situation for the government.

ANOTHER EXAMPLE.

The Examiner has been reproached as being opposed to municipal ownership of public utilities. This reproach is not deserved. The Examiner is in favour of municipal "ownership," but is a Doubting Thomas as to the advisability and practicability of municipal "operation" of public utilities. Hon. Geo. A. Cox owns a farm or two, which, in view of his financial shrewdness, may be regarded as a good thing, but if he undertook to run the farm himself, personally, he couldn't discover the profits with a pair of Sam Weller's "patent double million magnifyin' gas microscopes of hextra power." But if the farm were operated for him by a man familiar with business—the farming business—profits would be realised, such as the Senator generally affiliates.

A few days ago Orillia was mentioned as an example of successful municipal "ownership," and an example of the failure of municipal "operation." Now, St. Thomas, which has something of an elephant on its hands, in the shape of its street railway, is another exaple. Its street railway has, so far, it seems, been "owned" successfully, but "operated" at a loss. Orillia ratepayers were asked to subscribe to a testimonial to the failure of municipal operation of its municipal electric plant, in the form of increased rates for lighting and power; and the ratepayers of St. Thomas will be asked to vote $30,000 for the improvement of the system. It is stated that, unless some such effort is made to put the road on a paying basis, there will remain only the alternative of discontinuing the service or selling the franchise at a great sacrifice to a private coroporation, which will doubtless run it to pay. The experience of St. Thomas in this matter demonstrates the truth of what the Examiner has often urged, namely, that there is no magic in the term "public ownership," and that success under this form of ownership, as under private ownership, depends on having right conditions and capable management. A public utility operated by a municipal council as ordinarily composed, begins its career with a good deal of lead under the saddle.

NEST-FOULING PATRIOTS.

There are two aspects of the Conservative attitude, or the attitude of some journals and persons that speak in the name of the party, towards reciprocity. Apart from the merits or demerits of reciprocity as an economic policy, the critics show great inconsistency. The patriots, who, judging from the stand they have taken, would not hang a dog upon the word or opinion of a "Yankee" president, accept as Gospel truth, the slightest hint or statement of President Taft that means, in the remotest way, to justify their hollow and hypocritical "loyalty" cry that formed the body of their objections to reciprocity. Mr. Taft's rhetorical twaddle about the parting of the ways, and his "adjunct" letter are accepted by the pseudo-patriots as as impregnable and final as a judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Imperial Privy Council. They are but an echo of the balderdash talked last September by disloyal and irreverent politicians, who do not hesitate, like dirty birds, to foul their own nest—to disparage Canada, and insult Canadians.| For it is an insult to a real Canadian—not a professional patriot—to insinuate, in the slightest way, let alone have it boldly declared that he would sell his country, surrender his autonomy, barter his British connection for the sake of less restricted trade with another country. Yet, we find politicians base enough to urge such ideas, which are as absurd as they are inconsistent with fact. We do a trade of 800 millions a yer with the United States, about twice as much as our trade with Great Britain; would our loyalty, our national integrity be imperilled if we increased our trade to 900 millions or so—all that reciprocity involves. Besides, the trade with the United States is every three months greater than it was ... years ago. Yet there is no impairment of autonomy, of integrity or ... loyalty and patriotism among the Canadian ... who trade with and ... the prosperity of ... Have we lost ... absorption of Canada, ... United States is so keen ... Canada as to pay the price, the Canadian "loyalists" have given them the tip. Uncle Sam has only to take down his tariff wall against this country and Canada would, according to the bogus patriots, walk in at once.

CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

"A. H. Stratton, postmaster of Peterborough, was asked by the Assistant Deputy Postmaster-General whether it was true that he had been guilty of offensive partisanship during the September elections. Mr. Stratton promptly replied that he had not done so. He said:

"As you are no doubt aware, my brother was a candidate, but during the whole campaign I never visited a committee-room, did not attend any public or private meetings of a political nature, nor did I canvass or solicit a vote of any elector.

"In a word, I had nothing whatever to do with the election one way or the other. I was not on the streets of Peterborough during election day.

"For anyone to say that I was guilty of offensive partisanship is not correct".

Mr. Stratton was nevertheless dismissed for offensive partisanship. Being asked for his reasons, Mr. Pelletier replied that Mr. Burnham, member for Peterborough, had reported that Mr. Stratton was an offensive partisan; the matter was therefore closed.

This may be Mr. Pelletier's interpretation of the Halifax platform, advocating Civil Service Reform. But why was Mr. Stratton asked for his statement when it was intended to dismiss him without any regard to that statement, or to the facts of the evidence? It would have been better to say frankly that the job was wanted for one of Mr. Burnham's friends.

That would be the only bit of truth and candour in connection with the matter on the part of the Government.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

There are four vacancies in the roster of the House of Commons—three formerly held by Conservatives and one by a Liberal. Bye-elections will probably result in maintaining the status quo ante.

The Brockville Times, in concluding an innings of personal abuse of Sir Richard Cartwright, says Sir Richard will "object to a Tory majority in the next world." Very improbable. Sir Richard will be in the Upper Chamber there as he is here.

In view of the expressed determination of Mr. Rowell to continue to make things lively for the Whitney Government, Sir James, says the Ottawa Citizen (Conservative), would be well advised if he took early occasion to strengthen the weak places in his Government and also to give the people all the progressive and desirable legislation possible.

A COUNSEL SUGGESTED.

The fact that the Province of Ontario will not be represented at the hearing of the stated case on the right of the Dominion Parliament to pass a meaningless law concerning marriage suggests that there are some Conservatives who realise how sublimely useless that stated case is going to be.—Montreal Herald.

Peterborough might supply a legal luminary who would make a good Ontario representative to argue the "stated case," especially as the Provincial Government seems indifferent as to what kind of representative if any, it should have. Last September, and before Mr. Burnham saved the Supreme Court the necessity of botharing with this matter, he declared, ex-cathedra, in the most positive manner, that the Dominion Parliament had full power to deal with the marriage question, and he found a good many credulous electors foolish enough to believe him. But that was when the Liberals were in power, and were confronted with the responsibility of dealing with the matter. But when a similar responsibility was placed upon the Borden Government Mr. Burnham lost faith in his legal opinion, and lost zeal in the good cause. He did not urge the Dominion Government, which had full power, last September, to at once tackle the marriage question. No; but he voted against a bill to kill the Ne Temere decree, and declaring the authority of Parliament to enact a marriage law, applicable to all parts of the Dominion. By all means let the Ontario Government retain Mr. Burnham to represent it at the hearing of the "stated case" on the marriage question. He knows as little about it as the Whitney Government seems to care about it—since the elections—and would be the man for the job.

THE EXCEEDING FOOLISHNESS OF TAFT'S "ADJUNCT" LETTER

There is no reason to be disturbed over President Taft's "adjunct" letter to "Dear Theodore," which, it seems, with shrewd knowledge of Theodore's character and aims, was written to commit him to prevent his turning reciprocity against his friend in a struggle for the Presidency of the United States. It seems to have been published to confound Roosevelt in Massachusetts, where the fish men are strongly opposed to reciprocity, and the industrial classes are in favour of it. With all the allowance for the fact that politics is a rough game, the incident is not creditable to either of the parties.

In the matter of reciprocity, the Liberals of Canada have some cause to complain of Mr. Taft's unfortunate political manoeuvres. They were greatly embarrassed during the late election by the "parting of the ways" speech. As a matter of fact, at every well-informed Canadian or Englishman knows, Canada was not in any sense at the parting of the ways. There was in England the expiring advocacy of Chamberlainism, which proposed in vague terms some sort of Imperial Zollverein or customs union with preferences on Colonial wheat. So far as that would expose Canada to freer entry of British goods, it was, as it is now and will be, obstinately opposed by the Canadian manufacturers, who were most influential in the defeat of reciprocity. A preference on colonial wheat met in England the opposition of the manufacturer and the labourer to whom cheap food is essential, and it met, in Canada, the indifference if not the scorn, of the farmer. In the old Provinces, wheat growing had practically ceased, because it could no longer be profitably grown, and no one believed that Britain could afford to concede a preference large enough to enable wheat to be profitably grown. The exports to Britain of other farm produce of the older Provinces were steadily falling off, notwithstanding the great expenditures made to facilitate export. The attitude of the wheat growers of the West was unmistakable. There was among them no thought of a preference on wheat as a solution of their growing difficulties.

The "adjunct" phrase is even more unfortunate. Canada and the United States are adjacent or adjoin one to the other for four thousand miles. They are adjunct in a trade of nearly five hundred millions a year, which it was the aim of reciprocity to increase for the greater wealth and happiness of both. If both countries were made richer and happier it would be the interest of both to maintain the legislation which made them rich and happy, and as they would tend to depend or be dependent on each other, and to be not only adjacent or adjunct, but bound by mutual interest and linked in a mutual dependence. That is what reciprocity openly claimed.

That reciprocity would transfer all Canada's "important business and bank credits and everything else" to New York and Chicago is mere claptrap. It is not conceivable that Taft meant no more by this than to display to "Dear Theodore" a stump argument which would take with the electors, steeped in the unneighbourly and rapacious sentiments or high tariff. As the most important business of Canada is farming and the next lumbering and the next mining and the next fishing, he could not have meant to persuade the omnis... more that reciprocity would transfer the farms, forests, mines and waters of Canada to New York and Chicago.

As to the bank credits, too, he was telling Theodore confidentially of the clap-trap which they might use for political advantage. Both knew that a large part of Canada's bank credits is always in New York, and that, if the rate of interest in the United States became permanently higher than Canadians could pay, these bank credits would go over in a body. They knew that Canada keeps her bank credits by paying more for the use of them than the manufacturers and traders of the United States pay. They must have heard Sir Edmund Walker's boast that for years he has handled more than half of the cotton exchange of the Southern States (with Canadian money.)—Weekly Sun.

SECTION OF THE ACT APPLYING TO CONTAMINATION OF RIVERS

Debentures For Sewers Cannot be Sold Unless Plan of Sewerage Has Been Approved by Provincial Board of Health.

MAY BE COSTLY

The first notification of the action of the townships in regard to the city's sewage disposal was received in the following letter:

Mr. S. R. Armstrong, City Clerk,
Peterborough:

Dear Sir,—We have been instructed by the Townships of Otonabee, North Monaghan and South Monaghan to apply for an injunction to restrain the city from further pollution of the River Otonabee by the pouring of the city sewage into that river. We beg to remind you that the establishment of the present sewerage system by the city was objected to by these townships at the time of the construction, and that it was then understood that the arrangement would be merely a temporary one.

Frequently from time to time has the present unsatisfactory condition of affairs been brought to the attention of the city by our clients and by residents of these townships, without any steps whatever however being taken by the city to remedy the evil complained of.

The matter has also received the attention of the Provincial Board of Health, and letters from that Board were addressed to you on the subject on August 23 last, and on September 15th last. To these communications, we understand, no reply has been made.

The present condition of affairs offers a very serious menace to the health of the community, and under these circumstances our instructions are to take immediate steps to enjoin the city from further using the river for the above purpose.

Yours truly,
Peck, Kerr & McElderry.

THE LAW ON THE SUBJECT

The sections of the Public Health under which the townships propose to take action are the following.

SECTION 91—(1)—No garbage, excreta, vegetable or animal matter or filth shall be discharged into or deposited in any of the lakes, rivers, streams or other waters in Ontario or on the shores or the banks thereof.

(2) Residents of a health resort or summer resort shall so dispose of garbage, excreta, etc., as not to create a nuisance or permit of its gaining entrance to or polluting any such lake, river, stream or other water.

SECTION 94—(1)—Whenever the construction of a common sewer or of a system of sewerage or an extension of the same is contemplated by the council of any municipality, the council shall first submit the plans and specifications of the work, together with such other information as may be deemed necessary by the Provincial Board, for its approval.

(2) The Board shall inquire into and report upon such sewer or system of sewerage, as to whether the same is calculated to meet the requirements of the inhabitants of the municipality; and as to whether such sewer or system of sewerage is likely to prove prejudicial to the health of the inhabitants of the municipality, or of any other municipality, liable to be affected thereby.

(4) The construction of any common sewer or system of sewerage shall not be proceeded with until reported upon and approved by the Board, and no change in the construction thereof or in the disposal of sewage therefrom shall be made without the previous approval of the Board.

SECTION 95—(1)—No by-law shall be passed for raising money for any of the purposes mentioned in Sections 93 and 94 until the proposed water supply or sewerage system as the case may be, has been approved by the Provincial Board of Health, and such approval has been certified under the hand of the chairmen and secretary of the Board.

(2) The by-law shall recite the aproval of the Board.

SECTION 96—(1)—Where the Provincial Board of Health reports in writing that it is of the opinion that it is in the interests of the public health that a waterworks system or a sewer or a sewerage system shall be established for any municipality, it shall not be necessary to obtain the assent of the electors to any by-law for incurring a debt for either of such purposes.

(2) The by-law shall not be finally passed until the approval of the Board has been obtained to the work to be done as hereinbefore provided, and shall recite approval.

MR. PECK'S STATEMENT

To the Examiner this morning Mr. Peck stated that he was not in a position to say whether or not the townships would proceed with their injunction at once. The matter has been brought to the council's notice during the past few years and the city has had sufficient notice. It is felt that ample time has been given the city to make the necessary provision. The township might take into consideration the despatch with which the council may proceed with the question.

ONE OF THE RESULTS

The Board of Works decided to do nothing with the Aberdeen Ave. sewer until the plan has been approved by the Provincial Board of Health. Ald. Buller wanted to put a gang of men to work this morning on that street

WILL BE COSTLY

Several aldermen this morning discussing the "night before," said they believed that the solving of the sewerage problem would cost the city between $100,000 and $200,000.

THERE WAS AN AGREEMENT

In 1894 the city made an agreement by arbitration to extend the sewer south on Lock street through a part of North Monaghan, but it was only for a few years. Since then the townships have grumbled at intervals, but they surely made a noise last night.

5 BOXES CURED PSORIASIS

Mrs. Hattie Massey, Cannons, Ont., writes: "Three doctors described my trouble as psoriasis, and one said I could never be cured. The disease spread all over me, even on my face and head, and the itching and burning was hard to bear. I used eight boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment, and am entirely cured—not a sign to be seen. I can hardly praise this ointment enough."

PETERBORO' SEWAGE

liquid now passes to the sand and gravel filter through which it passes before entering the river. The size of the whole affair can be best estimated when it is remembered that two million gallons of sewage a day would have to be handled. Hence the necessity of four beds covering an area of four or five acres. The solids, as stated above, remain in the bottom of the tank for several months, until they are "digested."

As Dr. McCullough unfolded the system that Peterborough would have to provide or should, in his opinion, provide, the Council gave evidence of a realisation of the ... with which they were suddenly confronted. Ald. Gillespie remarked that he did not think it was ... that the city's sewage should be allowed to pass into the river as it had been.

"WHITE CAP" SQUAD IS ALMOST COMPLETE MAIN BODY ARRIVED IN TOWN LAST NIGHT

Squad Made a Most Favourable Impression Upon Their Arrival—Some Big Fellows in the Crowd

DERR COMES TO-MORROW

Twelve members of the Peterborough ball club arrived on the C.P.R. local last night and the local roster will be complete with the arrival of Pitcher John Derr to-morrow. There was a big crowd of fans on hand at the station to get a glimpse of Templin's terrors and the fans fell in love with the squad at first sight, the size of some of the players delighting the critics, who say that the big men are the players who make good with the largest bang. The dozen consisted of Pitchers Wm. Schaeffer and Harry Scull of Reading, Elmer D. Baver of Schuylkill, Haven, Pa., and Percy Davis of Philadelphia; Catchers Irwin Trout of Reading, and Frank Brode of Tamaqua, Pa.; Infielders Frank Dolan, Wilmington, Del., Chas. Tully, Reading, Pa., Jos. Ulmer, Philadelphia, Pa. and Earl Hartman, Reading, Pa. and Outfielders Willie Schwartz and Jas. Beard of Reading, Pa. Catcher Frank Mooney got in from Pittsburg at midnight.

The White Caps promise to present a formidable front in ball togs. Manager Templin says he feels like a shrimp among the other players, and some of them sure have something on him in size. Pitcher Schaeffer and First-baseman Dolan, are the giants of the squad. Both are over six feet and built in proportion, while Catcher Trout and Infielders Tully and Hartman are big and rangy. Outfielders Schwartz and Beard are the smallest men in the squad, but they are stockily built and look to have the speed. All are in pretty fair shape right now and with two weeks' steady drill under their belts the White Caps should just about be in the proverbial pink when the lid goes off on President Fitzgerald's circuit on May 14th. Temp. will drive them along under a full head of steam from now on.

The Peterboro Light & Power Company's show-room will be open on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings during May, and June from 8 to 10 p. m. for the convenience of those wishing to secure gas appliances or to arrange for gas connections.

GOOD WORK-OUT AT THE EXHIBITION GROUNDS YESTERDAY

Manager Templin and five of his squad, Pitchers Bartlett and Cresswell, Infielders Connolly and Bepxie, and Outfielder Johnston, had an hour and one half's lively workout at Exhibition Park yesterday afternoon. Owing to the condition of the ground, it was not possible to get much fielding practice, so after a preliminary warm-up, Templin started the bunch hitting, an hour being profitably spent in slamming the ball around with Cresswell and Bartlett pitching. This over the boys started packing their bat bags, but "Old Folks" chased them out on the track and led them for three quarters of a mile at a stiff pace that shook them up some, but they all managed to hold on.

White Cap Notes

Pitcher Bartlett, the young Rochester twirler, worked out in good form at the Exhibition grounds yesterday afternoon. He is in fine condition and had a lot of "stuff" on the ball.

Jack Bansie, the sturdy youngster from Hamilton, who is a candidate for the third base position, shapes up like a comer. He did some nice fielding on ground balls yesterday and was snapping up everything until Manager Templin advised him to take it easy, the ground being so rough that it was inadvisable to take any chances. He has good form both at the bat and in the field, and is willing to learn.

The White Caps have already made a most favourable impression among the fans, who like the clean appearance and fine physique of the boys who have reported.

Pitcher John Derr, who comes to Templin from the Haverhill Club, will be here to-morrow. "Old Folks" received a wire from him saying that he was leaving home this morning.

Templin last night received a wire from Eddie McCafferty, manager of the Syracuse team and last year at the head of the Montreal Club, offering to loan him Pitcher Ashton, who last year wore the uniform of the Belleville Grand Trunk team. Ashton was taken south by the Royals last year and this spring has been training with the Syracuse team, who have no place for him at present, but do not want to let him go. "Old Folks" will not bother with him as he does not want any players with strings on them.

The Peterborough skipper likes the way Pitcher Stan. Cresswell shapes up and has taken the local southpaw in hand. He will work out with the team during their training stunts and with Templin's coaching and hints from the experienced catchers, should develop rapidly.

Outfielder Johnston, of Toronto, arrived at noon yesterday and reported to Templin in time to take in the afternoon workout at Exhibition Park. He is handicapped at present by an injured thumb, but showed speed in the field and form at the plate.

Manager Templin is happy that his squad is nearly all here and that he can get the bunch to work. The leader is as lively as a cricket on the field and gets the most out of his men.

Frank Dolan, the big first baseman, was four years with the Holyoke team, and never hit below .274. He should be a consistent .300 hitter in the Canuck circuit. Dolan can take a turn on the slab if necessary. Four years ago he won 19 and lost 16 games with the Holyoke team, having a better percentage than his club, which finished sixth.

Catcher Brode and Pitcher Derr are battery mates, having worked together for the Tamaqua, Pa., independent team.

Riverside Park will soon be dry. The river has been falling rapidly and yesterday the water receded from the diamond and from right field, leaving only centre garden and a portion of left field submerged. This is particularly pleasing to Manager Templin as he wants to get to work on the improvements to the diamond. It will make it possible also to commence work on the new grand stand, which will be rushed through to be ready for opening day, May 22.

The White Caps will use Exhibition Park for training purposes until Monday morning. The Oval will not be available until then. In the meantime the squad will perform in the South End grounds, which are none too good.

BASEBALL

In the opening game of the Junior School Baseball League, yesterday, at the King Edward School grounds, the King Edward team defeated the East City School aggregation by 12 runs to 5, in an interesting battle. Frost pitched for the King Edward team, with Taylor behind the bat, while the East City battery was Anderson and Hagerman.

The score by innings:

King Edwards	1	1	4	0	3	2	x			—12
East City	1	0	2	1	0	0				—5

The Central School Juniors defeated the West Ward team by 20 to 5 in a junior game on the Central grounds.

FIGURES REGARDING "THE CHOCOLATE SOLDIER"

Figures always play a more or less interesting part in the history of stage successes, and the statistician usually finds something worthy of his investigations in that direction. For instance, "The Chocolate Soldier," which returned to the Princess Theatre, Toronto, after its successful presentation there last year, is said to have made more money last year on the road for Manager Fred O. Whitney than any opera in the history of the stage. But this fact is not half so interesting as the one that careful computations show that "The Chocolate Soldier" will have had its one thousandth performance in America during this engagement in this city. Only the third year and the one thousandth performance you say; that does not look reasonable, but it is the fact, nevertheless, for the opera ran 300 nights in New York its first year, and last year three companies gave it in this country. One of these, however, did not start until the first of that year and the one that played South and West gave a number of Sunday performances. The company that will play here, started a week ahead of the other two that are touring the country, so that to it will fall the honour of passing the tenth century mark.

The above figures do not include the performances of the opera abroad under Mr. Whitney's direction. It ran 48 months in London at the Lyric Theatre, which shows that New York and Chicago were not the only leading cities that appreciated the beauties of the Straus music. Two companies also sang the opera in the provinces with tremendous success, so that there seems to be some basis for the first statement that the opera broke all records as an income-maker last year.

It is interesting, too, to record the statement of the publishers of the music that more copies of "My Hero" "The Letter Song," "Falling in Love" and some of the other numbers were sold in the last two years than of any other opera on record.

Mormon's Invade Ottawa and Montreal

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, MAY 2.—Mayor Hopewell has been approached by Mormon Missionaries who are asking for permission to conduct open air services in the streets. The Mormons are already conducting a house to house canvass.

Chief Ress said that it was the duty of the police to keep the streets clear, therefore they would not be allowed to hold services in the public highways. The Missionaries are also negotiating for the use of the parks, but for this permission they will have to apply to the City Hall official. At present, however, nothing has been arranged and Elder Snow said they had not yet arranged a programme. The public sentiment seems to be against the Missionaries conducting services in Ottawa.

Elder David Franks of Salem, Utah, yesterday morning appeared before Mayor Lavallee in Montreal and announcing that the Mormons proposed to start a missionary campaign in Montreal, he asked for a permit to distribute Mormon literature. The mayor left the question open pending an examination of the literature it is proposed to inaugurate. Elder Hanks said they proposed to inaugurate a campaign through Eastern Canada.

TUG BLOWN TO PIECES

Examiner Special:

CONSTANTINOPLE, MAY 2. — A small Turkish tug, engaged in inspecting the channel buoys and mines, in the harbour, here, was blown to pices by a submarine board this morning, killing four officers and eighty men of the Turkish engineers.

Only the choicest selected hill-grown tea leaves are used in "SALADA" Tea, giving it a delicate fragrance and delicious flavour.

SOME THINGS AND OTHERS

The Ontario Legislature makes it both hard and easy for the City Council. Makes it hard by passing a law demanding more stringent measures against river pollution by sewage. The easy part is by an amendment of the law that permits the city fathers to provide for the big expense involved without asking the consent of the ratepayers.

Brantford is to spend $18,000 in building dykes to keep spring freshet water out. Peterborough can keep water out without a cent of expense, which may explain her indifference to the adoption of local option.

Goderich boasts of a license inspector who won't take a bribe. That's nothing; Peterborough has an inspector who won't take a tip.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught are to make a tour of Ontario some time this month. It is a pity that Peterborough is not included in their itinerary—we should be proud to show them our city hall buildings.

Things differ; imprisonment in the Kingston penitentiary is regarded as a punishment; imprisonment in Peterborough jail is regarded as a privilege. Convicts would commit murder or escape the "pen"; prisoners here, when their visit at the jail is concluded, go to Magistrate Dumble begging to be sent back.

A pamphlet has been received declaring the virtues of snake venom as an antidote to tuberculosis. If the snake can be so utilized, the alcoholic development of "snakes" will gain in popularity.

Nobody would have blamed the Judge if he had laid the lash on Cross—the much convicted criminal monster—from head to heel, had given him a "raw" deal in the matter of flogging.

PETERBOROUG'S INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir,—Another creature has the audacity to say that the Manufacturers' Committee is not alive to the best interests of the city's industrial development. If it were each member would speak out honestly and say that at least seven-eighths of my brain power shall, will, and must be used for the successful management of my own private business. The balance may be used in an occasional effort to secure new industries.

This is the policy at present, the same has been the policy in the past, and the fruits are visible with a population of less than 20,000 instead of over 60,000, as it should be.

Yours truly,

Condition Of Maybee Is Favourable

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, MAY 2.—The condition of Chairman Mabee of the Railway Commission, who was operated on yesterday for appendicitis, is reported as being very favourable.

RAILWAY NOTES

It is an old and half-flippant objection to the evening dress of modern masculinity that no distinction can be made between a gentleman and a waiter, but so much truth is contained in the observation, nevertheless, that the employees of hotels and exclusive private residences are generally supplied with some special uniform or livery. Mr. F. W. Bergman, Manager-in-Chief of Grand Trunk System hotels, has, therefore, decided that guests at the Chateau Laurier shall be able to dine there without the risk of such confusion, and, to that end, a uniform of handsome appearance, which is different from anything seen hitherto in a Canadian hotel, has been designed for the waiters. There is a long frock coat of very dark grey, with trousers to atch, and a grey fancy waistcoat, with metal buttons bearing the insigna of the hotel. The head waiter will wear the usual conventional attire.

The Grand Trun Pacific tug, "Escort No. 2," which has been laid up since December, has left Victoria for Prince Rupert, towing the barge "Georgian," with 750 creosoted ties, and 2,000 feet of creosoted timber on board, for the dock at that port. On her return the "Georgian" will load three locomotives, flat cars, and a caboose, for the G. T. P. at Prince Rupert.

The by-law granting certain privileges to the Grand Trunk Railway in the matter of closing and opening certain streets, and also fixing the Company's assessment at $18,000 for a ter of years, has been passed with only two dissenting votes by the ratepayers of Port Colborne, Ont.

A new motor taxi company is now in the process of formation at Ottawa, with a reported capital of $50,000. This company, which will be known as the "Major's Hill Taxicab Company," is to have an initial equipment of 5 taxicabs and an equal number of motor trucks. It has been awarded the contract for all the Chateau Laurier taxi and truck work and it is expected that it will be ready to begin operations by the time that the new Grand Trunk hotel is finished.

Mr. E. J. Chamberlain, General Manager of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, reports that a site has been purchased and that construction will begin immediately on a station at Calgary.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

NEW CEMENT MIXER WILL BE BOUGHT BY BOARD OF WORKS

Also New Bicycle For Mr. R. Evans —Ald. Duffus Claims That Streets Are in Bad Condition — Says There Is Much Room For Improvement.

STREETS TO BE REPAIRED

A meeting of the Board of Works was held on Wednesday night at ten o'clock with Ald. Buller in the chair and Mayor Bradburn, Aldermen Johnston, Duffus and Gillespie present.

Ald. Buller stated that he and Street Commissioner Evans had visited Hamilton and Brantford to buy a cement mixer. They had examined several types, one in Hamilton was run by steam and one made in Brantford was run by gasoline. That which used steam for its power is made by the Good Roads Machinery Co. Mr. Evans had expressed himself in favour of using steam. There was not much difference in the cost and it would be easier to run. Ald. Buller stated that it would be taken only on a thirty days' trial and f.o.b. Peterborough. The mixer run by steam generated four horse power.

Moved by Ald. Johnston, seconded by Ald. Gillespie, that Ald. Buller and Mr. Evans be authorised to purchase a cement mixer, the selection to be left with them.—Carried.

A Bicycle For Mr. Evans.

Tenders for supplying a bicycle for Mr. Evans' use were received from H. T. Millard, Chas. Banks, F. R. J. McPherson and Murray Miller. Mr. Miller's offer was a new Massey-Harris bicycle with all improvements for $55 and an allowance of $20 for Mr. Evans 'old wheel. This brought his price down to $35, five dollars below the next lowest tender, that of Mr. McPherson.

Moved by Ald. Anderson, seconded by Ald. Gillespie that Mr. Miller's tender be accepted.—Carried.

Street Grading.

Ald. Buller stated that there was some street grading to be done on Aberdeen avenue, and a culvert had to be rebuilt off the Chemong road leading into Aberdeen Ave., and there were some bad spots on the north end of Reid street to be fixed up.

Mayor Bradburn—You should put in a pipe instead of a wooden culvert.

Ald. Johnston stated that near the end of Bethune street, the ditch should be deepened a foot or more to carry off the water that has been running into Mr. Hickey's property and making a small lake on the street.

Ald. Buller—We have already provided for that. The work will be done when we are up in that part of the city.

Mayor Bradburn—If you would put the picks in the road roller and run it over George street north to Smith street, the holes along that street could be filled up.

Ald. Buller—We should have some Road Repairs the Trouble.

Ald. Duffus—There are many bad spots along the street railway tracks. These are known and they should be attended to.

Ald. Buller—The part of the street between the railway tracks should be repaired every year according to the agreement with the Street Railway Company.

Moved by Ald. Duffus, seconded by Ald. Anderson that the manager of the P. R. R. Co. be instructed to lower the street between the car tracks where it is too high and to fill any holes that have been made and for the care of which the company is responsible.—Carried.

Ald. Anderson—On Hunter street, the Peterborough Light and Power Company put in a gas main last fall and the street has been left just as the trench was filled in them. In some places the earth is high and in others the trench has sunk.

Moved by Ald. Anderson, seconded by Ald. Johnston, that the company be asked to put the street in the condition in which they had found it.

Ald. Duffus—What about the dollar that is retained every time a connection is made for sewers.

It was stated that this goes toward meeting engineering expenses.

Ald. Johnston did not like the manner of going from one end of the city to another in doing street work. He said the city should be divided into districts and each one gone over and put in good condition.

Ald. Buller—The Board has only so much money with which to do this work and we have to do as much as we can with it. If you will give the Board of Works about eight times as much money we could get the work done. The appropriation was cut down this year.

Ald. Duffus' Complaint.

Ald. Duffus complained that not only were the streets in bad condition, but that many of the sidewalks had not been properly laid. He named several, which he stated were too low, and during the spring months they were completely under water. He considered that the city's engineering department was to blame for these conditions. He considered that it was about time that something was being done to prevent a repetition of work which he claimed was anything but a credit to the city. The ratepayers were paying taxes for city improvement that would be a convenience and a comfort. Ald. Duffus considered that something should be done to find out what was the reason for the conditions he mentioned.

Ald. Johnston stated that the Engineering Department was not to blame for some of the cases referred to. The levels had been properly taken, but on account of the objections of citizens to a high walk or for some other reason the work was not carried out according to the plans of the city engineer.

Something About The Gamest Of All Fish---The "Trout"

Expert Tells of Ways of Different Varieties of Brook, Rainbow and Lake Trout---Whence Comes the Pink Flesh?

(J. R. Holloway in Philadelphia North American)

The native brook trout is generally known as "trout". Sometimes, to distinguish it from the laker, it is designated as "squaretail," and from "black-spotted fish of the salmon family as "redspot." It is also called "brook trout," especially when occurring in brooks.

The breeding time of the trout varies somewhat with the locality, and climate, and temperature of the water in which it lives.

The spawning season may be from the last part of September to December. It probably varies also with the particular locality, whether small pond or brook, lake or stream.

As is well known, trout spawn in shallow water on fine gravel beds, in which they make a shallow hollow as a nest. The spawning beds may be a shoal in the lake or in some stream which the fish ascends for that purpose.

The eggs do not hatch until the following spring.

The sexes differ much in appearance at this time, especially in large fish.

The head of the male is longer, the lower jaw sometimes hooked, the mouth and teeth larger, and the collection is more brilliant, the belly some of the fins often being a brilliant red.

The body of the male, too, has a thick coat of mucus, almost, or quite obscuring the scales.

Under certain conditions, as in circumscribed localities like a small brook, trout often reach maturity when only four or five inches long, and still bearing the marks of young fish. Again, mature trout have been seen of not over five or six inches in length in which these marks of youth had nearly or quite disappeared, and the male fish was a facsimilie of its large brother of the lake.

In lakes of considerable size trout nine and ten inches long remain immature.

The food and game qualities of this fish are so well known to most fishermen that it is unnecessary to say much on these points. Trout vary in these respects in different waters, and also, of course, with the age of the fish.

Specimens nine or ten inches long, with pink flesh, taken from a cool stream or lake come very near to being the proverbial "dish fit for a king."

The cause of the pink or reddish flesh of the trout is a much-discussed question, which had not, so far, been scientifically investigated. But many believe that the food of the fish has nothing further to do with it than its fattening effect on the fish.

It is the flavour of the fat that gives trout that is thus coloured, and the plumper and fatter the fish the more highly coloured is its flesh.

It is the flavour of the fat that gives the peculiar delicious flavour to trout so coloured.

A white-meated trout may be plump, but it is of leaner flesh and lacks the flavour of the other. Small trout in cold or spring or mountain brooks are usually white-meated.

Food is scarce in such places. Trout otherwise red-meated lose at the spawning time the red or pink tint to the flesh and also the good flavour.

The some qualities of the fish are not always commensurate with its size, and are sometimes apparently in inverse ratio; the larger the trout the less game.

Large trout are more powerful, pull harder, perhaps, and do a vast amount of rushing about, but the rushes are short and pulling dogged.

Small trout are more dashy and far more active, often leaping from the water and taking the fly on their downward course.

The variety of the food of the trout suggests that the lures may be legion, and so they are.

When trout are ravenous, as they sometimes appear to be, they will take almost any lure.

These occasions are proverbially when the moon is in the right phase and the wind from the proper quarter. Trout are too often capricious regarding lures, sometimes taking only natural bait, and that of certain kinds; sometimes accepting only certain artificial flies; sometimes taking troll or bait only in the spring, fly in early summer, accepting nothing for a following period, and then taking the fly again or bait.

The habits along these lines are many and variable. One rule, or set of rules, will hardly suit any two bodies of water.

The lake trout is known most com-

MAY 24TH WILL BE A PUBLIC HOLIDAY

The observance of May 24th as a public holiday is as undying as the memory of the late Queen Victoria, in whose memory Victoria Day was instituted as a statutory holiday.

In order to abolish the two-generation old custom of the observance of May 24th, first as Queen Victoria's birthday and after her death as Victoria Day, it would be necessary to change the statute, and as that was not done at the last session of parliament, May 24th must remain a public holiday.

A despatch from Ottawa says that the report that May 24th will not be a public holiday this year is given an official denial at the State Department. The rumour probably arose out of the expressed desire of King George that his birthday, June 3rd, should be observed as a public holiday throughout the Empire.

New Millinery, New Dresses, New Silks, New Wash Fabrics

In the Formal Display of Summer Styles on view in our Show Windows

WITH THE COMING OF MAY comes the preparation of the Summer ccstumes. Of course you will select your Summer wearables where you obtain the greatest variety—the choicest selections from which to choose. The "Cressman Store" is fairly glowing with the freshness,—beauty, and daintiness of attractive feminine apparel for Summer wear. Every department is amply prepared with the "New Things."

The Centre of the Stage is held by the Formal Show of Summer Millinery—the authentic creations from the foremost fash'on centres are here assembled in gorgeous array. Exquisite creations that possess chic—that indefinable something which is the true expression of the Fashionable Milliner's artistic skill. Not a new mode—not an original shape or rare colouring, that has been favored by New York or accepted in the leading Millinery centres, but finds representation in our showing.

Silks are particularly desirable for Summer w[illegible] and our showing is most complete—embracing, as it does, the newest novelties prominent among which one finds the New Bordered Silks.

The New Dresses are beautiful beyond compare—the styles are so decidedly novel—so new, dainty and charming, as to make mere pen pictures wholly inadequate to describe their beauty. Here one will find Embroidered Marquisettes, Shot Silks, Satins, Foulards, Crepe Meteors, Challies, etc., in an extensive variety of new and original designs.

Wash Fabrics are, of course, the favourite materials for Summer dresses and you will find us wonderfully well prepared to supply your wants, whether it be for sturdy Dress Ginghams, Wash Suitings, dainty Embroideries or exquisite Voiles, in plain colours, stripes or bordered designs.

OUR WINDOW DISPLAYS

are representative of the high order of the "Cressman Stocks" and reveal the newest style creations for the Summer season. Millinery is displayed in all the windows and in the interiors—Attractive Dresses are on exhibition in the main window and in the interiors—Bordered Silks are shown in the South window and Dainty Wash Fabrics are on view in the North window. Go Window Shopping To-night—it will afford an authoritative knowledge of what Fashion decrees for Summer, 1912.

Mr. Wallace A. Sault At The Conservatory Of Music Hall

Large Attendance at Concert Held Last Evening Under the Auspices of the C. G. E. Football Club—A Great Success

Under the auspices of the Canadian General A. F. C., a recital of a high class standard of merit was given in the Conservatory of Music hall last evening.

The artistes specially engaged for the occasion were Mr. Wallace A. Sault, humorist and character impersonator, Miss Pearl Brock, contralto, and Mr. W. S. Wilson, violinist. There was a large attendance and the various numbers were enthusiastically received.

Mr. Sault is an entertainer of no mean order and his repertoire is both select and varied. He created much merriment in a humorous sketch, entitled, "Sophy's sweethearts"—in which a curate, lawyer and a coster, propose in their respective manners, to what the latter styled their 'fiance' This was followed by a sentimental monologue by Corney Grain, entitled, "Johnny's Me and You." This role he handled in a similar masterly fashion. The humorous sketch, 'Barnaby Phee, K. C.' was most amusing. In this, Phee is supposed to have won a breach of promise suit on the ground that the defendant, a grocer, had sealed the bargain, as it were, by sending a jar of treacle instead of sugar as ordered by the plaintiff. Treacle, said the artiste, was sweet and yielding and was emblematical of constancy in that it was adhesive. Besides, had not the jar a handle; surely that was something to take hold of. In the second half he appeared in an entirely different role, rendering an excerpt from Shakespeare's Henry VIII, namely, the Soliloquy of Wolsey. In this his elocutionary powers and his articulation were at all times crisp. Various other items were also rendered, amongst which were Chevalier's musical monologue, "A Fallen Star" and an excerpt from Dickens' "Nicholas Nickleby."

Miss Pearl Brock needs no introduction. Suffice it to say that she sang with her usual charm and polish. Conspicuous amongst her selections was Florence Aylward's pretty little song, "Deep in my heart a lute lay hid," which was done full justice to by the artiste. Another acceptable item rendered by Miss Brock was Thompson's "Come, Sing to Me."

Mr. W. S. Wilson proved himself a violinist of considerable ability and his contributions were enthusiastically received. In "Caprice" by Ten Have, he displayed his talent to a nicety. The rapid succession of notes in some of the passages were played with a precision which was commendable and the slower movements, which called for expression were executed with equal cleverness.

Miss Pearl Race, accompanied Mr. Sault in his musical sketches, while Miss Julia Choate presided at the piano for Miss Brock and Mr. Wilson respectively.

The concert, which was a success in every sense of the word, terminated at about ten o'clock by the singing of the National Anthem.

W. S. DAVIDSON REMEMBERED BY THE LAW ASSOCIATION

Presented With Gold Watch at Meeting Held Tuesday Afternoon

REGRET HIS DEPARTURE

The members of the Peterborough Law Association bade farewell to Mr. W. S. Davidson on Tuesday afternoon at a meeting in the offices of Bennett and Goodwill. The chair was occupied by the President of the Association, Mr. T. H. D. Hall, who referred to the departure of Mr. Davidson, for the West, and the regret that was felt by his fellow members of the bar upon learning of his intention to leave Peterborough. On behalf of the Law Association he presented Mr. Davidson with a handsome gold watch. Other addresses were given by Mr. R. E. Wood, County Crown Attorney; Mr. E. A. Peck, M.P.P.; Mr. R. R. Hall, Mr Daniel O'Connell, Mr. Johnston and others. They spoke of the pleasant relations that had always existed between Mr. Davidson and the other members of the Association. Mr. Davidson had always been held in high regard and had occupied a prominent position in legal circles in the city. The various speakers expressed their regret that Mr. Davidson had decided to go West and joined in wishing for him every success in his new field of endeavours. Mr. Davidson made a feeling reply, thanking the members of the association for their kindly expressed sentiments and for their handsome remembrance which he would always carry with him.

LABOUR CONDITIONS ARE IMPROVING

Extract From Labour Gazette Indicates a Slight Improvement Over Same Period Last Year

The general condition of the labour market during March showed a slight improvement over that of February. Prospects for the building season of 1912 are good and contractors are beginning to show signs of their midseason activity. The Canadian General Electric Company have invited tenders for a new warehouse and shipping building, the construction of which will afford considerable employment. They have also purchased ten acres of land immediately north of the present location of the Canadian General Electric Company Works.

A "Made in Peterborough" exhibition will be held in the Armouries under the auspices of the Ladies' Auxiliary on the 3rd of June and will last the entire week.

The city is applying for legislation to enable it to expropriate any part of the plant or appliances of the Peterborough Light and Power Company.

The cold weather did not afford much opportunity for work among the farmers in this district although some commenced operations in the sugar bushes. Production in this line is not likely to equal that of past years as the snow was too deep for the farmers to move among the maples for the purpose of tapping trees and collecting the sap. The district cheese makers held their annual convention this month and elected their officers for the year. Many important matters were discussed.

CARNIVAL AT BROCK ST. RINK FRIDAY NIGHT

A grand carnival will be held at the Brock street Roller Rink on Friday evening. Excellent prizes for the best fancy dress and comic costumes for gents, ladies, boys and girls will be given, with a special prize for the best clown costume. Prizes are on exhibition at Warne's jewelery store, corner of George and Brock streets. This will be one of the biggest nights the Brock street Roller Rink has had. Come and skate and be prepared to have a good night's amusement. Friday evening, May 3rd.

AN EXCELLENT PROGRAMME.

Was Rendered by Teachers and Students of Conservatory of Music on Tuesday Evening.

The musical programme given under the auspices of the Daughters of the Empire at their "At Home" in the recreation room of the armouries on Tuesday evening, was rendered by a number of the advanced students and teachers of the Conservatory of Music.

The programme, which consisted of instrumental and vocal selections, well deserved the warm reception it received. The various numbers were rendered with a dash and vim that amply demonstrated the versatility of the performers.

THE rich browns and the lifey greys in spring and summer fabrics are shown in the new Semi-ready models.

It's a pleasure to show them.

Most of the good mills in the great English woollen district have contributed their best patterns.

Semi-ready buyers are in England the year round, and because they represent the highest type of tailoring in Canada all the latest designs, from the woolen artists are first laid before them for approval.

That is why we get such a superior lot of patterns—oftimes a whole season ahead of the retail tailoring trade. Suits at $35, $30 and $25, and others equally well tailored at $15, $18 and $20.

TROUT FISHING

May 1st marks the opening of the trout fishing season. The real died-in-the-wool fishing enthusiast would rather try for trout than almost any other fish that will go after a hook. And as a dainty breakfast dish, the trout is in a class by itself. There will likely be many who will seek out their brooks away back in the wilds and toil and struggle to secure a bag of trout. But it is good sport, and it is worth it.

THE MEN IN CHARGE OF STREET WATERING

Ald. Beller's Arrangement Ratified by Board of Works

Ald. Beller's arrangement for the watering of the city's streets during the coming season was approved by the Board of Works this afternoon. The arrangement will be almost the same as during last year. Ald. Beller will have charge of the following streets:—

Dublin—Mr. H. C. Brown, 25th.
Brock—Mr. Fred. Hopkins, 26th.
Hunter—Mr. Jas. McWilliams, 27th.
Dean—Mr. Allan Cox, 28th.

In Fear Of Consumption

To be entirely cured of a cold which threatened to become consumption naturally makes one think well of the treatment which helped to effect the cure.

In a letter just received from Mrs. Edson Brock, Tremblein, Que., the writer says: "I wish to tell you that I have used Dr. Chase's medicines with great success. I took a very bad cold and could not get rid of the cough. I felt so bad that I really thought I was going into consumption. I got well by using Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills also did me a lot of good. You may publish this if you wish, for many people already know what great good Dr. Chase's medicines have done, me."

J. B. ISMAY BREAKS DOWN

Special Wire to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, N.Y., MAY 2. — It was learned to-day that J. Bruce Ismay, Managing Director of the White Star line, has at last broken down under the severe strain from which he has suffered lately, and has taken to his room at the Hotel, here.

Later.—Ismay sailed on the Liner Adriatic for England, where he will appear before Lord Mersey's enquiry if he is well. It is noticeable that the attitude of the New York papers towards Ismay has changed considerably during the last few days. They are now rather sympathetic concerning him.

WEDDING BELLS

HENDERSON—GRAHAM.

The marriage of Miss Helen Seymour Graham, daughter of Mrs. Alexander C. Graham, of Powell avenue, Rosedale, to Mr. Clifford Douglas Henderson, son of the Rev. G. W. and Mrs. Henderson, of Peterborough, was solemnized at the home of the bride's mother at three o'clock yesterday afternoon. The ceremony was performed by the groom's father, in the drawing room, which was prettily decorated with pink roses, carnations, palms and ferns, Miss Jessie Allen playing the wedding marches. The bride, who was given away by her uncle, Mr. W. J. Taylor of Chicago, wore a simple gown of white satin and Chantilly lace trimmed with seed pearls. Her tulle veil was arranged off her face and held in place by a coronet of orange blossoms. She carried a shower of roses and lily of the valley, and wore the grooms' gift, a gold watch bracelet. Miss Helen Paul attended her cousin as maid of honour and wore a gown of pale blue satin veiled in hand painted chiffon, and mob cap of blue dew drop net. She carried pink roses and forget-me-nots, and wore the groom's gift, a gold bracelet. Mr. Robert W. Steele acted as best man and received a silver mounted cane from the groom. After the ceremony Mrs. Graham, who was wearing king's blue satin and black lace, with bouquet of lily of the valley, held a reception, the groom's mother from Peterborough being present. Later on the bride and groom left for a trip to New York, the bride travelling in a smart tan tailor-made suit with hat to match.

CHAVIGNY—LAING.

In New York, on Wednesday, April 17th, at the home of her parents, Central park west, the marriage took place of Miss Lillian Hazel Laing, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Brown Laing, formerly of Peterborough and Port Perry, to Dr. Charles Noel Chavigny of New Orleans.

Dr. and Mrs. Chavigny left for Europe and on their return will reside in New Orleans.

BIRTHS.

DEATHS.

NORTHEY—In Smith on April 24th, 1912, the infant son of Mr. James H. Northey.

TO SECURE QUARTERS.

Mayor Bradburn and Ald. Duncan are to endeavour to secure temporary detention quarters for prisoners while the police station is being enlarged.

STRAIN IS TOO GREAT

Special to The Examiner.

HALIFAX, N.S., MAY 2.—The strain of attempting to identify those saved in the temporary morgue here is telling on many of the officials, and many have been prostrated. Fifty bodies are now unidentified, and more are expected to be picked up. "But there are not likely to be many."

WERE SAVED FROM "TITANIC"

The members of First Church of Christ, Scientist were inspired last night in the testimony meeting, through greetings from New York City There were four Christian Scientists on the Titanic when she received the fatal blow from the iceberg, all of whom were rescued. It is said they consider their survival most miraculous. Their experience is another proof of the frailty of material means and skill of mortal men. They, one and all realize that God, Spirit in whom they put their trust, is greater than the iceberg, o rthe mighty Atlantic, and a safer refuge than even the great Titanic, the pride of human skill.

While some of them have suffered since from the experience, they rejoice that they have been spared to work a little longer on this plane of consciousness, for the "Giver of every good and perfect gift," "Who saith to the proud wave thus far,' and farther. "He who holdeth the wind in His fist." The scripture lesson for last night was from Matt:. 14 22 to 33. Jesus proving the power of the law of spiritual science over the so-called laws o fmaterial science or matter.—Com.

STRAWBERRIES FROM NORTH CAROLINA

North Carolina strawberries are selling in Peterborough at 15 and 20 cents a box. Every spring they are imported into Canada, coming first from Texas and as the suns' warmth gradually comes northward the season breaks in Florida, Georgia, the Carolinas, Maryland and so on up through the Eastern States, until Canada is reached and there is no necessity for further importations.

CAPTAIN BROWN IS SUSPENDED

Special to The Examiner

OTTAWA, MAY 2.—Wreck Commissioner Thomas has suspended the certificate of Captain Brown of the government steamer "Earl Grey," which ran aground near Picton two weeks ago. Brown was guilty of gross negligence in not taking soundings and posting lookouts. He will likely be dismissed from the service.

Chi-Namel

The New Ready-to-Use Graining Process

We have passed the age of paint for interior decoration, and have learned to appreciate the beauties of natural wood.

Chi-Namel Gives The New Hardwood Effect In Either Gloss or Dull Mission Finish

To the many owners of homes in which the doors, casings, and other woodwork are either painted or poorly varnished, and in which the floors are of soft wood designed to be covered with Carpets, the Ready-to-Use Graining Process, which anyone can use, makes possible the up-to-date hardwood effect at a low cost of only 2½c per square foot of surface. The use of this Graining Process is equally practical for furniture, tables, book cases, chairs, etc.

We are demonstrating this Process this week and solicit a call from you to see for yourself how it is done.

INQUIRY IS ORDERED

Into Workings of Kingston Penitentiary—Warden Platt Given Month's Leave of Absence

PLOT TO KILL DEPUTY

Kingston, May 3.—The Government has stepped in to make an investigation regarding the working system in the penitentiary. Douglas Stewart, of Ottawa, one of the inspectors, has arrived here, and taken over the position of warden for a month to see how work at the big prison is carried out. Warden Platt has been given a month's leave of absence, and his resignation is looked for in that time. Some time ago he intimated his intention of resigning.

Some interesting developments are expected to result from the investigation which Inspector Stewart says will be most thorough.

That McNeil and his four fellow convicts, the western outlaws, had instigated and hoped to kill Deputy Warden O'Leary during their manoeuvres, is the opinion of many of the penitentiary authorities, the judgment being based upon the attitude and mutterings of the prisoners. O'Leary was the officer in charge of the Stoney Mountain gang when they attempted to escape at Toronto while being transferred to Kingston. It is the duty of the deputy warden and chief keeper to inspect the isolation building every morning, and the quintette, knowing this, were awaiting their arrival. Fortunately for the deputy warden, inspection was not made as early as usual on this particular morning, or the gang might to-day be facing a murder charge.

King to Act as Umpire.

London, May 3.—The King will begin a review of the fleet of 125 vessels off Portland on Tuesday. He will pass three days on board a battleship and act as umpire, in a sham battle between the blue and red fleets, the former defending the coast.

A novel feature of the review will be a demonstration of the utility of aeroplanes in naval war. The battleship Hibernia left Sheerness yesterday with four aeroplanes. She has been fitted with a special launching platform, fixed forward and extending from the foremost gun turret to the bows.

The system consists of two guide rails sloping downward. The aeroplane is mounted on a trolley, which slides down these rails under the force of gravitation, and as the propeller simultaneously drives the machine forward, only a short run is required to enable the aeroplane to rise in the air.

Homer Davenport Dead.

New York, May 3.—Homer Davenport, the cartoonist, died yesterday in this city of pneumonia.

Mr. Davenport had been working on the Hearst newspapers in this city until a few days ago. His was the hand that drew some of the cartoons concerning the Titanic disaster, which were discussed on two continents.

He was 44 years of age. He owned an up state farm where he made a specialty of breeding Arabian horses.

Drydock For the Soo.

Ottawa, May 3.—A new company has been formed for the construction of a drydock at Sault Ste. Marie. Plans were filed yesterday and a subsidy is asked on a proposed expenditure of $1,400,0000. The Clergue interests are connected with it.

New Mr. Justice Lennox.

Toronto, May 3.—Mr. Haughton Lennox, K.C., ex-M.P. for South Simcoe, was sworn in by Sir John Alexander Boyd, president of the high court of justice, yesterday morning, as a judge of the Supreme Court of Judicature and a justice of the High Court of Justice of Ontario, and took a seat in the Court of Appeal.

Two Linemen Badly Hurt.

Kingston, May 3.—Falling from a telephone pole while at their work, about 5.30 p.m., two linemen, Chas. Hay, Kingston, and Peter Carrier, Toronto, received terrible injuries. Currier will likely recover, but grave doubts are entertained for Hay.

HOME RULE IS ESSENTIAL TO USEFULNESS OF PARLIAMENT

Sir Edward Grey Says Devolution in the United Kingdom is Needed Despite Feelings of Ulster.

BALFOUR ENTERS DEBATE

London, May 3.—A. J. Balfour and Sir Edward Grey held the stage at to-day's debate on the home rule bill in the House of Commons.

The former Premier showed little of his old-time fire, and his speech was reminiscent of many heard before. He complained that the bill did not contain even a germ of finality, and that its adoption would work a great injury to the representative institution of England, while creating in Ireland an assembly which no Irishman could regard with pride or respect.

The powers of the Irish Parliament would be so hampered, he said, that good men would refuse to serve in it. Every successful federal system, he declared, had been built up on a desire of the separate parts for a closer unity, but the Government was pursuing an opposite course, cutting up the United Kingdom and creating fiscal divisions.

Sir Edward Grey contended that the constitution was becoming increasingly unworkable, and that devolution throughout the United Kingdom was necessary. The usefulness of the Imperial Parliament could not, the Foreign Secretary added, be sacrificed to the feelings of Ulster.

The Foreign Secretary admitted that the settlement provided in the bill was incomplete in some respects. The presence of 42 Irish members in the Imperial Parliament was an anomaly, but he did not mind that, because he believed that it would precipitate further arrangements which, while not endangering imperial unity, would relieve the different parts of the United Kingdom.

If Ulster defied the solution the Government proposed, or made it impossible, some other solution would have to be found which would relieve the overburdened House of Commons of the present monstrous congestion of business and put the control of Irish affairs in Irish hands.

Lord Charles Beresford, in a breezy speech, declared that the Irish question was essentially a land question, and the only way to pacify Ireland was to continue the present land purchase system and "do away with the lord-lieutenant and all that sham and rotten court."

The Right Hon. Ronald C. Munro-Ferguson supported the bill, because it was the first step toward a complete policy of Parliamentary devolution and paved the way for self-government in Scotland. Mr. Munro-Ferguson, who represents Leith burgs, has been an ardent supporter of devolution.

Daniel D. Sheehan, representing the mid-division of Cork, a labor advocate and independent Nationalist, who favors the policy of conciliation as applied to Irish politics, approved the principle of the bill, but said it placed too many restrictions on Irish financial freedom. He maintained that the Irish Parliament should be given full powers with respect to the raising of revenue in Ireland and all expenditures in Ireland.

British Titanic Fund $1,000,000.

London, May 3.—The British Titanic funds amount to approximately $1,000,000. A conference was held at the Mansion House yesterday to arrange for its distribution. It was decided to extend immediately the relief to widows and bereaved families of the members of the crew, pending the organization of a committee to undertake the administration of the fund. The committee will include the Lord Mayor, the Earl of Derby and the governor of the Bank of England.

Seek $50,000 Damages.

New York, May 3.—Papers in the first suit for damages brought by a relative of a Titanic victim were filed in the Federal District Court here yesterday. Suit, in admiralty, is brought by Mrs. Louise Robins, widow of Victor Robins, Col. John Jacob Astor's valet, who lost his life when the Titanic sank, and is that in which the testimony of J. Bruce Ismay and officers of the sunken steamer is desired. It charges negligence on the part of the Oceanic Steam Navigation Co., and asks for $50,000 damages and costs.

Want Tunnel Bonds Guaranteed.

Ottawa, May 3.—A delegation of a hundred from the vicinity of Montreal yesterday afternoon asked the Government to guarantee for 50 years 4 1-2 per cent. bonds of the Montreal Tunnel Co. to the extent of fifteen million dollars. The tunnel is for steamer and electric railways. The Premier promised immediate consideration.

A point urged was that the new line would furnish access to Montreal for the I. C. R. which now goes over the Grand Trunk.

Disaster Not Confirmed.

London, May 3.—There is no confirmation of the Constantinople despatch reporting the loss of the Italian battleship Umberto near Zuara.

The battleship has been engaged in convoying landing expeditions to Tripoli. Built in 1887, she carries over 700 men, and was 400 feet long, 77 feet wide. Her armament includes four 12-inch guns.

BRITISH INVESTIGATION.

Twenty-Six Questions Will Be Put to Titanic Witnesses.

London, May 3.—Lord Mersey, in his capacity as wreck commissioner, and five assessors who will advise him in his questioning on the technicalities of nautical affairs, held yesterday morning the first session of the Board of Trade enquiry into the loss of the White Star steamer Titanic.

The spacious armory of the Scottish Rifles was chosen with a view to seating an expected crush of auditors, but when the enquiry opened not more than one hundred spectators were present, and the majority of these were women.

From the series of twenty-six questions which the Attorney-General announced would be taken up, it became evident that the enquiry would cover practically the same ground as the investigation of the American Senate but would be conducted more in accordance with the procedure of a court of law and deal definitely with stated cases. Eight questions, Sir Rufus Daniel Isaacs said, would relate to happenings before the casualty; six to warnings given the Titanic and the resulting precautions taken; ten to the casualty itself and consequent events, one to the equipment and construction of the vessel, and the last to the rules of the Merchant Shipping Act.

The only reference to the American investigation was Sir Rufus' announcement that owing to the detention of many witnesses for the Senatorial enquiry in the United States the testimony would not be presented in a logical order. The seamen who arrived from New York on the steamer Lapland were called first as witnesses to the construction and equipment of the Titanic. Several lawyers representing interested parties, requested permission to participate in the proceedings. Lord Mersey recognized Thomas Scanlan, member of Parliament for the north division of Sligo, who appeared for the Seamen's and Firemen's Unions, and an attorney for the Merchants' Service Guild, and took under consideration the application for representation of the Seafarers' Union, the Ship Constructors' Association and the Mercantile Officers' Union.

An adjournment was then taken.

Thaw Case In June Again.

White Plains, N.Y., May 3.—Justice Keogh decided to set June 3 as the date for hearing Thaw's application for release. In the meantime it will be definitely determined whether it will be heard by a jury.

The court decided to let four alienists testify for each side. The hearing will probably extend over several weeks.

British Warship Damaged.

London, May 3.—The British battleship Empress of India was in collision with a German sailing vessel early yesterday at Spithead. The battleship received a gaping hole in her side above the main deck, while the merchantsman lost headgear and top hamper.

MINERS NOT SATISFIED

Tentative Agreement For Settlement Rejected by Hard Coal Workers

CONVENTION MAY BE HELD

New York, May 3.—Calling of a miners' convention to approve or disapprove of the sub-committee's agreement for settlement of the wage and other differences between th miners and operators in the anthracite coal fields was practically decided upon by the committee of miners' representatives and members of the boards of the three anthracite districts affected at a session here last night.

Another joint conference with the operators will first be sought by the miners, in all probability, to see if further concessions can be obtained, it was said, after last night's session. The miners' committee adjourned until to-day, when a decision will be reached, it was announced, whether a further conference with the operators shall be sought or an immediate call be issued for a miners' convention.

This action followed rejection by the miners' full committee yesterday, of the joint conference with the operators' committee of ten, of the tentative agreement for a settlement reached recently between the sub-committees of the two interests.

If a convention were called, as it seems certain it will be, Wm. Green, who represented President White of the United Mine Workers, in yesterday's conference, said last night that it would be held in either Scranton or Wilkesbarre, and would be comprised of 600 delegates from the three districts. Such a convention could be convened within four days after notice of it was given. Mr. Green declared. Mr. Green expressed the opinion that if a convention were held at once, before another conference with the operators, it would uphold the action of the miners' full committee and vote disapproval of the sub-committee agreements.

In their statement and accompanying memoranda last night the operators' committee opposed another meeting with the miners' representatives until after the latter had endeavored to secure ratification of the present settlement agreement.

Too Much Conservation.

Ottawa, May 3.—Hon. Wm. Ross, Minister of Mines and Forests in British Columbia, is here interviewing members of the Government. He fears that the regulations compelling all railways in British Columbia to use oil after December, 1914, so as to avert forest fires, will be a blow to the coal industry. He wishes the new provincial system of forestry patrol to be given a trial.

"I reckon you won't discover such a thing here," dryly. "Got seven in a room upstairs, and others corded along the hall. Better share my cell—only thing to do."

"That would be asking too much—I can turn in at the corral with Neb; I've slept in worse places."

"Couldn't think of it, Keith," and the doctor got up. "Besides, you sleep at night, don't you?"

"Usually, yes," the other admitted.

"Then you won't bother me any—no doctor sleeps at night in Sheridan; that's our harvest time. Come on, and I'll show you the way. When morning comes I'll rout you out and take my turn."

Keith had enjoyed considerable experience in frontier hotels, but nothing before had ever quite equalled this, the pride of Sheridan. The product of a mushroom town, which merely existed by grace of the temporary railway terminus, it had been hastily and clumsily constructed, so it could be transported elsewhere at a moment's notice. Every creak of a bed echoed from wall to wall. The thin partitions often failed to reach the ceiling by a foot or two, and the slightest noise aroused the entire floor. And there was noise of every conceivable kind, in plenty, from the blare of a band at the Pioneer Dance Hall opposite, to the energetic cursing of the cook in the rear. A discordant din of voices surged up from the street below—laughter, shouts, the shrieks of women, a rattle of dice, an occasional pistol shot, and the continuous yelling of industrious "barkers." There was no safety anywhere. An exploding revolver in No. 47 was quite likely to disturb the peaceful slumbers of the innocent occupant of No. 15, and every sound of quarrel in the thronged bar-room below caused the lodger to curl up in momentary expectation of a stray bullet coursing toward him through the floor. With this to trouble him, he could lie there and hear everything that occurred within and without. Every creak, stamp, and snore was faithfully reported; every curse, blow, snarl re-echoed to his ears. Inside was hell; outside was Sheridan.

Wearied, and half dead, as Keith was, sleep was simply impossible. He heard heavy feet tramping up and down the hall; once a drunken man endeavoured vainly to open his door; not far away there was a scuffle, and the sound of a body falling downstairs. In some distant apartment a fellow was struggling to draw off his tight boots, skipping about on one foot amid much profanity. That the boot conquered was evident when the man crawled into the creaking bed, announcing defiantly, "If the landlord wants them boots off, let him come an' pull 'em off." Across the hall was a rattle of ships, and the voices of several men, occasionally raised in anger. Now and then they would stamp on the floor as an order for liquid refreshments from below. From somewhere beyond, the long-drawn melancholy howl of a distressed dog greeted the rising moon.

Out from all this pandemonium Keith began to unconsciously detect the sound of voices talking in the room to his left. In the lull of obstructing sound a few words reached him through the slight open space between wall and ceiling.

"Hell, Bill, what's the use goin' out again when we haven't the price?"

"Oh, we might find Bart somewhere, and he'd stake us. I guess I know enough to make him loosen up. Come on; I'm goin'."

"Not me; this town is too near Fort Hays; I'm liable to run into some of the fellows."

A chair scraped across the floor as Bill arose to his feet; evidently from the noise he had been drinking, but Keith heard him lift the latch of the door.

"All right, Willoughby," he said thickly, "I'll try my luck, an' if I see Bart I'll tell yer here. So long."

He shuffled along the hall and went, half sliding, downstairs, and Keith distinguished the click of glass and bottle in the next room. He was sitting up in bed now, wide awake, obsessed with a desire to investigate. The reference overheard must have been to Hawley, and if so, this Willoughby, who was afraid of meeting soldiers from the fort, would be the deserter Miss Hope was seeking. There could be no harm in making sure and he slipped into his clothes, and as silently as possible, unlatched his door. There was a noisy crowd te the farther end of the hall, and the sound of some one laboriously mounting the stairs. Not desiring to be seen, Keith slipped swiftly toward the door of the other room, and tried the latch. It was unfastened, and he stepped quietly within, closing it behind him.

A small lamp was on the washstand, a half-emptied bottle and two glasses beside it, while a pack of cards lay scattered on the floor. Fully dressed, except for a coat, the sole occupant lay on the bed, but started up at Keith's unceremonious entrance, reaching for his revolver, which had slipped to the wrong side of his belt.

"What the h——" he exclaimed, startled and confused.

The intruder took one glance at him through the dingy light—a boy of eighteen, dark hair, dark eyes, his face, already exhibiting signs of dissipation, yet manly enough in chin and mouth—and smiled.

"I could draw while you were thinking about it," he said, easily, "but I am not here on the fight. Are you Fred Willoughby?"

The lad stared at him, his uncertain hand now closed on the butt of his revolver, yet held inactive by the other's quiet assurance.

"What do you want to know for?"

"Curiosity largely; thought I'd like to ask you a question or two."

"You—you're not from the fort?"

"Nothing to do with the army; this is a private affair."

The boy was sullen from drink, his eyes heavy.

"Then who the devil are you? I never saw you before."

"That's very true, and my name wouldn't help any. Nevertheless, you're perfectly welcome to it. I am Jack Keith." No expression of recognition came into the face of the other, and Keith added curtly, "Shall we talk?"

There was a moment's silence, and then Willoughby swung his feet over the edge of the bed on to the floor.

"Fire away," he said shortly, "until I see what the game is about."

CHAPTER XVIII.

INTERVIEWING WILLOUGHBY.

Coolly, yet without in the least comprehending how best to proceed Keith drew toward him the only chair in the room, and sat down. Miss Hope—more widely known as Christie Maclaire—had claimed this drunken lad as her brother, but, according to Hawley, he had vehemently denied any such relationship. Yet there must be some previous association between the two, and what this was the plainsman proposed to discover. The problem was how best to cause the fellow to talk frankly—could he be reached more easily by reference to the girl or the gambler? Keith, studying the sullen, obstinate face confronting him, with instinctive antagonism over his intrusion, swiftly determined on the girl.

"It was not very nice of me to come in on you this way," he began apologetically, "but you see, I happen to know your sister."

"My sister? Oh, I guess not!"

"Yes, but I do," throwing a confidence into his tone he was far from feeling, "Miss Hope and I are friends."

The boy sprang to his feet, his face flushed.

"Oh, you mean Hope? Do you know her? Say, I thought you were giving me that old gag about Christie Maclaire."

"Certainly not; who is she?"

"That's more than I know; fellow came to me at Carson, and said he'd met my sister on a stage west of Topeka. I knew he was lyin', because she's home over in Missouri. Finally, I got it out of him that she claimed to be my sister, but her name was Maclaire, Why, I don't even know her, and what do you suppose she ever picked me out for her brother for?"

He was plainly puzzled, and perfectly convinced it was all a mistake. That his sister might have left home since he did, and drifted West under an assumed name, apparently never occurred to him as possible. To Keith this was the explanation, and nothing could be more natural, considering her work, yet he did not feel like shattering the lad's loyalty. Faith in he sister might yet save him.

"Perhaps the fellow who told you," he hazarded blindly, speaking the first thought which came to his mind, "had some reason to desire to make you tink this Maclaire girl was your sister."

The suggestion caused him to laugh at first; then his face suddenly sobered, as though a new thought had occurred to him.

"D—— me, no, it couldn't be that," he exclaimed, one hand pressing his head. "He couldn't be workin' no trick of that kind on me."

"Whom do you mean?"

"A fellow named Hawley," evasively. "The man who claimed to have met me once."

"'Black Bart' Hawley?"

The boy lifted his head again, his eyes sidewise suspicious.

"Yes, if you must know; he's a gambler, all right, but he's quick to me when I was down and out. You know him?"

"Just a little," carelessly. "But what sort of trick could he be working trying to make you acknowledge Christie Maclaire as your sister?"

Willoughby did not answer, still nursing unsteady about on the bed. Keith waited, and at last the boy blurted out:

"Oh, it wasn't nothing much. I told something when I was drunk once, that I thought maybe might have stuck in him. Odd he should make that mistake, too, for I showed him Hope's picture. Bart's a schemer, and I didn't know but what he might have figured out a trick, though I don't see how he could. It wasn't no more than a pipe dream, I reckon. Where did you meet Hope? Back in Missouri?"

One thing was clearly evident—the boy's faith in his sister. If he was to be rightly influenced, and led back to her, he must have no suspicion aroused that her life was any different from what it had been before he left home. Besides, if Keith had hoped to gain any inkling of what Hawley's purpose could be, he must win the confidence of Willoughby. This could not be done by telling him of Hope's present life. These considerations flashed through his mind, and as swiftly determined his answer.

"Oh, I've known her some time. Not long ago I did her a service for which she is grateful. Did you know she was out in this country searching for you?"

"Out here? In Kansas?"

"Sure; that isn't much of a trip for a spirited girl. She got it in her head from your letters that you were in trouble, and set out to find you and bring you home. She didn't tell me this, but that is the way I heard it. It was for her sake I came in here. Why not go to her, Willoughby, and then both of you return to Missouri?"

The sullenness had gone out of the boy's face; he looked tired, discouraged.

"Where is Hope?" he asked.

"Fort Larned, I suppose. She went to Carson City first."

"Well, that settles it," shaking his head. "You don't suppose I could go browsin' 'round Larned, and not get snapped up, do you? They don't chase deserters very far out here, but that's the post I skipped from, and they'd jug me all right. Besides, I'm d——d if I'll go back until I get a stake. I want to see a fellow first."

"What fellow?"

"Well, it's Hawley, if oyu want to know so bad. He said if I would come here and wait for him he'd put me on to a good thing."

The boy fidgetted along the edge of the bed, evidently half ashamed of himself, yet obstinate and unyielding. Keith sat watching his face, unable to evolve any means of changing his decision. Hawley's influence just at present was greater than Hope's, because the lad naturally felt ashamed to go slinking home penniless and defeated. His pride held him to Hawley, and his faith that the man would redeem his promise. Keith understood all this readily enough, and comprehended also that if "Black Bart" had any use for the boy it would be for some criminal purpose. What was it? Was there a deeply laid plot back of all these preparations involving both Willoughby and his sister? What was it Hawley was scheming about so carefully, holding his boy deserter in one hand, while he reached out the other after Christie Maclaire Surely, the man was not working blindly; he must have a purpose in view. Willoughby had acknowledged he had told the fellow something once when he was drunk—about his family history, no doubt, for he had shown him Hope's picture. What that family secret was Keith had no means of guessing, but Hawley, the moment he saw the face on the cardboard, had evidently recognized Christie Maclaire—had thought of some way in which what he now knew could be turned to advantage. The few scattered facts which Keith had collected all seemed to point to such a conclusion—Hawley had sent the boy to Sheridan, where he would be out of sight, with orders to wait for him there, and the promise of a "stake" to keep him quiet. Then he had gone to Independence and Topeka seeking after Christie Maclaire. Evidently he meant to keep the two apart until he had gained from each whatever it was he sought. But what could that be? What family secret could Willoughby have blurted out in his cups, which had so stimulated the gambler's wits?

Two things combined to cause Keith to determine he would uncover this rascality—his desire to repay Hawley, and his interest in the girl rescued on the Salt Fork. This gossamer web of intrigue into which he had stumbled unwittingly was nothing to him personally; had it not involved both Hawley and Miss Hope, he would have left it unsolved without another thought. But under the circumstances it became his own battle. There was a crime here—hidden as yet, and probably not consummated—involving wrong, perhaps disgrace, to the young girl. He had rescued her once from the clutches of this man, and he had no intention of deserting her now. Whatever her life might be, she was certainly an innocent victim in this case, deserving his protection. The memory came to him of her face upturned toward him in that little room of the Occidental, her eyes tear-dimmed, her lips asking him to come back to her again. He could not believe her a bad woman, and his lips compressed, his eyes darkened, with fixed determination. He would dig into this until he uncovered the truth; he would find out what dirty trick "Black Bart" was up to.

A Hermit for Five Years

WHAT would make the greatest impression on a man who had been shut away from human intercourse and denied the use of newspapers for five years—what would most forcibly attract his attention—on regaining the society of his fellowmen?

"Well," you say, "he is fairly certain to be interested in learning whether there's been a change of Government."

True, and probably he will show mild excitement if you can tell him there's been a big war in Europe. But it won't be until you get down to a recital of things that come closer to him, personally, that you'll bring him to his feet with eager questioning.

Tell him a mighty empire has fallen, and—so long as it isn't his empire—a drop curtain of highly embroidered indifference will mask his face.

But tell him the automobile has been so simplified that he can now buy one for the price of a horse and buggy, and he'll promptly bombard you with questions.

A revolution in China may be a world event, but it wouldn't mean as much to him as the perfecting of a shaving apparatus that would do away with the necessity of purchasing new blades or honing old ones.

If you had been a hermit for the past five years, the news of an earthquake in San Francisco wouldn't really mean so much to you as the information that you can now hear any famous opera singer in your own home at a cost of a few cents per hour.

Which is only another way of saying that the phonograph is of more personal interest than an earthquake.

You see how it is: Newspapers carry a "news of merchandise" that is just as interesting, just as vital, as the "news of events" which the editors gather for us.

And, since this "news of merchandise" finds its only expression in the form of Advertising, must we not admit that the Advertising columns are quite as worthy of our serious attention as the scariest "scare head" or the most ponderous editorial?

Shut your eyes to Advertising—and you shut out the news of commercial progress and development—the news of things that make life worth the living.

Advice regarding your advertising problems is available through any recognized Canadian advertising agency, or the Secretary of the Canadian Press Association, Room 503 Lumsden Bldg., Toronto. Enquiry involves no obligation on your part—so write if interested.

JOHN ORTH'S CASTLE

Magnificent Buildings to be Converted Into Summer Home for Millionaire

The castle belonging to "Johann Orth," the Austrian Archduke, whose mysterious disappearance has given rise to so many theories, is to be sold to an American millionaire who will spend the greater part of the summer there, and, should he import the buildings into suburban summer palaces. The name of the purchaser has so far been kept secret.

An official declaration of the death of Johann Orth was published some months ago. The office of the Imperial Marshal, which is responsible for all legal transactions connected with members of the Imperial Austrian house, has now proceeded to the liquidation of the estate formerly belonging to Johann Orth, and the castles have accordingly been sold.

Both castles are rich in antique works of art, especially with portals and ceiling decoration, while the dining hall of the large castle, with splendid bronze candelabra and gigantic caryatides of Florentine workmanship is a magnificent apartment. The costly furniture will be disposed of separately.

FINANCE IN A CELL

French Banker Managed to do a Good Business While in Prison

The Paris police raided a financial establishment in the Rue Laffite, and confiscated the contents of the safe as well as the books, thereby putting a stop to the lucrative source of revenue of a banker named Zucco, who has been in prison for several months for irregular financial transactions in connection with various banks which he started. M. Zucco, although occupying a cell, contrived to open another financial establishment in the same house as that occupied by his bank, which was closed by the police when he was arrested. From his cell he directed a scheme for getting small investors to subscribe jointly for lottery bonds. Business went well. The new establishment was soon employing ten clerks and M. Zucco in his cell was making about $300 a day. But disappointed clients informed the police, with the result that M. Zucco's ingenious scheme came to an untimely end.

Had Boils On Neck and Arms.

Had Them Lanced But, Got No Relief Until He Used

Burdock Blood Bitters.

Boils in themselves are not a dangerous trouble, but still, at the same time are very painful. They are caused entirely by bad blood, and for you to get rid of them it is absolutely necessary to put the blood into good condition. For this purpose there is no remedy that can compare with Burdock Blood Bitters. This preparation has been on the market for about 35 years, and has a reputation unequalled by any other for the making of pure, rich, red blood. Mr. H. J. Barton, Stratford, Ont., writes:—"I have been troubled for several weeks with boils on my neck and arms. I had them lanced by the doctor, but as soon as one went others came. I tried all kinds of so called remedies, but could get no relief till I was advised to try Burdock Blood Bitters. I am pleased to say I am now quite free from those most painful things, and feel much better in every respect.

"My boy, of nine years, had a rash come over his back and legs, so we gave him a few doses and now he is all right again."

FACTS ABOUT BREAD

Baked Lentils, Unknown to Peasants of Southern Europe

Baked lentils, of which vast quantities are eaten in many parts of the world, such as central America, and Italy and throughout the agricultural districts of Roumania. In the vicinity of the Obervolta river, which empties itself into the Black sea, [illegible] are grown, and with these [illegible] at dinner with [illegible] and with these again [illegible] THE starts also takes the place of bread in Carpathia and many parts of Hungary.

In the north of Italy many of the peasants live on polenta; a porridge made of boiled maize. The polenta, however, is not allowed to congulate, like Scotch porridge or like a solid pudding. It is eaten cold as often as the Italian peasant's daily bread.

The possibility of making bread without flour seems absurd and impracticable to the modern housewife as did Pharaoh's proposition to make bricks without straw to the Israelites of old. Yet, according to M. Paul Combes, a French scientist, bread can be made of almost any vegetable substance.

M. Combes describes some forms of bread that are in a measure familiar to most people, but some are rather novelties in the culinary line. Bread made of pure oats with the addition of one-fifth of its weight in wheat has the appearance of good bread, but he says it is gray in color and the odor and taste are not agreeable.

He also tells of bread made of rice, of maize flour and mashed potatoes combined, of rye, beans, lentils, the roots of bryonia, iris, serpentaria, mandragora and hellebore, and the leaves of aconite. All these, however, with few exceptions, afford only imperfect nourishment and are really of use only in case of extreme necessity.

Muscles Useless Without Nerve Force

Perhaps you are not quite clear on the relation of the nerves to the rest of the body. Through the nerve fibres which extend through countless branches to every nook and corner of the human system is conveyed the motive power which operates the various organs.

There could be no breathing, no beating of the heart, no flow of the digestive fluids, no action of any muscle or organ of the body without nerve force. Consequently, when the nervous system becomes exhausted there is complete collapse of the body, the different stages of which are described as nervous prostration, locomotor ataxia and paralysis.

The time to use such restorative treatment as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is when the headaches, sleeplessness, indigestion and other warning symptoms first appear. A few weeks' persistent treatment is then sufficient to revitalize the wasted nerve cells and restore health and vigour.

LOCKED ANTLERS

Ottawa Souvenir of Battle Royal Now at Victoria Museum

The souvenir of a battle royal which evidently had its occurrence in the forests wilds many years ago was received at the Victoria Memorial museum, Ottawa, for the natural history department in the form of two skulls and antlers of large moose found by a farmer near Port Arthur, Ont.

The most interesting feature of these is that the antlers of the two great moose are so interwoven that to separate them is impossible.

"They must have got fighting and stuck together," said an officer of the geological survey. "See the heads—noses turned straight up. Those two locked, and weren't able to unlock. They died in that way. Their bodies were eaten by wolves. You can see on these horns the marks made by their gnawing."

It is probable that these horns will be purchased for the natural history collection.

OLDEST BIBLE MSS.

Priceless Egyptian Papyrus of the Fourth Century Discovered and Acquired by British Museum

Excavations in Egypt among the graves of Greek settlers and Copts of the early Christian era have brought to light an older translation of portions of the Greek Bible than any hitherto known to exist.

This is a Coptic version of Deuteronomy, Jonah, and the Acts, written in the dialect of Upper Egypt in the fourth century. It is clearly a copy from an older book, and the origin of the version cannot be placed later than the third century.

Greek Christian settlers were numerous at an early date not only in Northern Egypt, but in Upper Egypt also, while the Abyssinian is one of the most ancient and picturesque of the notable Greek Churches. Tradition credits with the foundation of one of these Churches the Queen's Chancellor from Meroë (Ethiopia) whom Stephen baptised, as related in the Acts, when he encountered him driving home from Jerusalem and puzzled by one of the Suffering Servant passages in the second book of Isaiah.

The back of the newly-found papyrus had been strengthened by a piece or two of vellum, on one of which were found the seventeenth and eighteenth verses of Daniel, and at the back of the book are sentences in Coptic, but written in the cursive Greek hand, which are an exhortation to "Love not the world nor the things that are in the world, for the glory of the world belongeth to the Devil and the destruction thereof." This script has proved of great value in determining the date of the volume.

The volume had been acquired by the British Museum Trustees, who have printed the documents in a volume entitled "Coptic Biblical Texts in the Dialect of Upper Egypt."

STARVED THOUGH RICH

Russian Officer in London too Penurious to Buy Even Food

A pitiable narrative of the self-neglect of a man whose papers showed that he was worth at least $20,000 was told, when a coroner's jury at Bethnal Green heard that a retired Russian officer, Dennis Dominic Keller, had died of starvation.

He had been living in one room at Kenilworth road, and was found dying in the street. He at that time had over $65 in his pockets. The landlady of the house where Keller had lived said that the rent was 50 cents a week for a furnished room. Keller owed her $15. She added that she had never seen him have a meal in her house. He never drank, as far as she knew. "I have never known him even to have a cup of tea. I have seen him pick up fish and potatoes which other men have thrown away in the street, and even dry, sour crusts."

KING AT BREAKFAST

Interesting Facts About the Morning Meal at Buckingham Palace

Breakfast at Buckingham Palace is usually quiet. In the late reign when King Edward and Queen Alexandra took breakfast in their private apartments, but King George and Queen Mary come downstairs to their morning meal, and are joined by the Princess Mary and the Prince of Wales, and the Prince George and Henry, when the latter are at Buckingham Palace. The other two princes take their breakfast downstairs in the room of the Royal schoolmaster.

Breakfast is served usually either in the Bow Room or Chinese Room on the first floor. There are also one or two other rooms where it is occasionally served. Their Majesties signify to the Master of the Household overnight the room in which they desire to breakfast, and the Master communicates the order to the House Steward.

Two sideboards and a round table have to be put into the room chosen by their Majesties, and these are removed at once after breakfast.

Breakfast is served at 9 a.m. The service used is a white porcelain one, with a gold band, and each piece bears a Royal crown and a monogram underneath it. The dishes generally used are part of a very massive silver breakfast service, which was a wedding present from the Empress of Germany to Queen Mary.

In the centre of the table is placed a massive silver flower-bowl, filled with white and pink flowers.

Porridge made from the finest meal always forms part of the breakfast menu. It is served in silver bowls. Fruit is another feature of the Royal breakfast. Bananas, grapes, melons, hot-house peaches, and apples are among the fruits regularly served. Frequently the King breakfasts off porridge and fruit.

When the breakfast dishes have been placed on the table the servants leave the room, and do not remain in attendance to wait at table, as they do at other meals.

The ladies and gentlemen of the Household who are "in waiting" breakfast together in the Household dining-room. The Household breakfast is served half an hour earlier than the Royal breakfast. This is done so that the secretaries may go through the morning mail whilst the King and Queen are at breakfast, and have the vast volume of correspondence sorted and arranged for their Majesties' inspection and attention directly breakfast is over.

When a foreign monarch is staying at Buckingham Palace, breakfast is, of course, served in the State dining-room, and the meal is then of a much more ceremonious character.

The whole Royal party assemble at 9 a.m. in the Bow Room, and the King with the visiting Sovereign's consort, and the Queen, with the visiting monarch, lead the way to the State dining-room, and are followed by the members of their respective households.

The German Emperor customarily eats a heartier breakfast than any other foreign Royalty, and he is the only European monarch who drinks tea at breakfast.

The King of Spain drinks chocolate and a cup of chocolate and some wheatmeal biscuits form the Spanish monarch's usual morning meal. The King and Queen of Norway both drink coffee at breakfast, and the King of Norway never eats anything at breakfast but a little fruit. The Tsar's breakfast usually consists of thin, dry toast and thick cream, followed by a small cup of black coffee.

A FINNY HARVEST

Fish Worth Millions of Dollars Taken Yearly From North Sea

To the United Kingdom the North Sea is the most profitable fishing ground. Last year the value of the fish landed on the north-east coast was £17,703,076, over a third of the total value of the fish landed in the whole of England and Wales, and £3,200,000 worth more than was landed in the whole of Scotland and Ireland combined during the same year. The increase over 1910 was £602,000, and compared with 1901, the total value of fish landed in 1911 showed an increase of nearly £10,000,000.

The number of crabs and lobsters landed showed an increase of 200,740 crabs and 15,451 lobsters, but oysters showed a decrease. Whereas in 1901 there were landed 4,000,000 oysters, valued at £42,450; last year only 2,000,000 oysters, valued at £900, were landed.

Lighting a Fire on Watling Street

At Jedburgh Court, James Norris, hawker, and John Norris, laborer, were fined $1.50, or five days' imprisonment, for encamping and lighting a fire on the Roman road known as Watling street, at Shotbeads, between the parishes of Crailing and Oxham. Bailie Oliver said it was a very serious offence lighting fires near plantations.

Stomach Blood and Liver Troubles

Most sickness starts with weak stomach, and consequent poor, impoverished blood. Nervous and pale people look good, rich, red blood. Their stomachs need invigorating for, after all, a man can be no stronger than his stomach.

A remedy that makes the stomach strong and the liver active, makes rich red blood and overcomes and drives out disease-producing bacteria and cures a whole multitude of diseases.

Get rid of your Stomach Weakness and Liver Laziness by taking a course of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery—the great Stomach Regulative, Liver Invigorator and Blood Cleanser.

You can't afford to accept any medicine of unknown composition as a substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery," which is a medicine of known composition, having a complete list of ingredients in plain English on its bottle-wrapper, every one of which attested as correct under oath.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and invigorate Stomach, Liver and Bowels.

UNCLE SAM to TEACH CANDY MAKING

Boiling the Syrup, Preparatory to Making Candy

Pulling the Taffy

Testing the Candy

Production by Department of Agriculture's Candy Making.

(Copyright, 1912, by the New York Herald Co. All rights reserved.)

UNCLE SAM is preparing a cook-book to teach housewives and blushing maidens how to make the most delicious pure candies by the most scientific, modern methods. The book, which will contain recipes for about every variety of candy known to-day, with some new varieties not yet tasted, will be ready late in the summer, and the Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture is meanwhile engaged in testing the recipes and conducting a candy factory of its own.

On the top floor of the Bureau of Chemistry building in Washington now may be found several rooms given over to the government's new industry, with shelves filled with jars of the familiar sticks banded with red and yellow, while delicious caramels and countless other varieties are set aside after passing the prescribed tests.

Supervising the work is Dr. C. S. Hudson, in charge of the government's candy making department as it is now established. Busily engaged can be seen expert candy makers boiling the syrup or pulling the taffy, while samples of the finished or experimental article are being tested in an adjoining room. In the case of each finished article Dr. Hudson knows not only just how it was made but the underlying scientific and chemical principles which have made the candy either soft or hard, sugary or plastic. He knows the effect which a little more or less of any of the ingredients would have produced, and, furthermore, knows why this effect would have been different.

This scientific data, Dr. Hudson believes, will be very welcome throughout the country. It is realized that there are thousands who can make good candy, but the government's experts believe that not one person in any thousand knows why the candy is good instead of inferior or what the scientific principles are that have governed its making.

In about every case candy making is a haphazard adventure, the final result remaining in doubt until the last moment. This element of doubt will be entirely done away with when the government's recipes are given out. It will no longer be a question of knack or good fortune, but merely a matter of closely following scientific directions.

Rendering Sugar Cane.

One of the problems now being given close attention in connection with the candy experiments pertains to the best method of softening and rendering sufficiently plastic the hard, dry cane sugar that goes to make up nearly every variety of candy.

Everybody knows the disappointment at a taffy pull when the taffy sugars while it is being pulled. Likewise it is very disappointing to have the taffy turn out so soft and stick that it can hardly be pried apart. In the first case the direct sugar had too little invert sugar to hold it together, and in the second case there was too much.

In the old days syrup was used to invert the direct sugar, and it served fairly well, although no one apparently knew how much should be used to procure a desired effect. Later on lemon juice was used for the same purpose in varying quantities and later still cream of tartar.

Candy manufacturers often use cream of tartar in their products and have obtained good results so far as producing a soft non-sugary article is concerned, but the Bureau of Chemistry intends to make use of an entirely new process for giving to candy the proper degree of softness or sugary composition.

In connection with the candy makers who provide the taffy-on-a-stick and penny varieties now much feared in many households, officials in the Bureau of Chemistry say that about ninety-nine and ninety-nine one-hundredths of these fears are groundless. The candy makers use terra alba or shellac or beeswax, often in such large quantities that their product is of little value, and contains little sugar, but it is neither dangerous nor injurious, according to officials in Washington.

Therefore, Dr. Hudson explained, mothers need have no more grave fears for their youngsters who pick up penny candy from the stores. Terra alba, he explained, would do a child no more harm than if he ate a small quantity of harmless clay. As for the saccharine or glucose in manufactured candies, these are ticklish points so far as their injurious or non-injurious properties are concerned, and officials do not wish to reopen this controversy. Indeed Dr. Wiley is no longer at the department to champion his cause and the Bureau of Chemistry's Candy Department is indebted to Dr. Wiley for having started its existence.

Dr. Wiley had long cherished the idea of getting at the bottom of candy making from a chemical and scientific viewpoint, and it was the development of this idea that brought the government's candy factory into existence.

Dr. Hudson's Candy Recipe.

Properly to appreciate the value of the forthcoming candy recipes it is necessary to spend a few minutes with Dr. Hudson in his laboratory. A few minutes of practical demonstration convinces the visitor of the thoroughness of the government's methods.

"Now here we have some fudge, "Dr. Hudson explains, "setting before him jars of fudge which would make the hostess of many a fudge party envious, "The first sample contains five per cent invert sugar, which makes a sugary article which appeals to some people's taste more than the softer varieties."

The five per cent fudge indeed crumbles in one's mouth before it can be swallowed.

"Our next sample is the per cent invert sugar," he continues; "it is, as you perceive, a little softer and might suit some persons better than the five per cent fudge. A fifteen per cent fudge is softer still, but not too soft, as you see. Not until we get beyond twenty-five per cent invert sugar do we find the article getting too soft. This shows that from 5 to 25 per cent invert sugar is the proper proportion, according to one's desire and taste."

Dr. Hudson turned to the shelves where delicious sticks of candy reposed in jars.

"Which do you desire, soft, hard, medium, crisp, sticky?"

Depending on the answer a sample is selected according to chemical formulas and it hits the mark every time.

To the left of these jars are some of the most choice varieties of mint drops set aside like old wines to improve with age. These are sugared candies with sufficient invert sugar to make them as hard as little pebbles, but which have been subjected to treatment which has engendered the process of crystallization. Once begun this process continues slowly but surely day by day, until at the end of a sufficient length of time the mint drops are like little particles of powdered sugar held together as if by magic and having a delicious flavor.

The Turkey On the Flag

It was Benjamin Franklin who proposed that the turkey should be chosen instead of the eagle as the national emblem of the United States. The eagle was indicative of the advances of the Roman Empire. It was known in China for ages; it graces the standards of Russia, of Germany and of France and several other world Powers. The turkey, however, is indigenous to America.

When Cortez, in 1519, ascended the high plateau of Mexico he found the turkey most prominent of all the game birds. Its Mexican name, huajolote, indicates the old Aztec knowledge of the bird. The Zuni Indians were familiar with the turkey from their earliest history. They had a tradition about how the red wattle was acquired, and, according to their legends, it was the turkey that first discovered land after the great flood. The bird settled in the mud and when he tried to rise again his feathers stuck in the mud and could only be released by a mighty pull. Some of the mud stuck to the feathers, making a spot on them, and this spot has remained as a sign of the turkey's disobedience of the divine command.

As a table delicacy the turkey has made his way around the world, and the first one eaten in France, mentioned in history at any rate, was served at the wedding of Charles IX. and Elizabeth of Austria, June 27, 1570. This bird was furnished from Boston, Mass., at that time an unknown settlement somewhere in the American wilderness. The bird was introduced into England in 1524, where it soon became domesticated under local names. Descendants of this parent stock were carried back across the Atlantic from Great Britain to New England, where, crossed with the original turkey already there, they began the breed that has spread from one end of the country to the other. Germany and France recognize the turkey as an indispensable factor in any holiday feast and the bird is the principal feature of the Spanish Christmas festival.

Nor has the American turkey been denied his place in literature. Shakespeare was attracted by the humorous aspects of the bird and ridicules a character by exclaiming:—

"Here he comes, swelling like a turkey cock."

Pope wrote of:—

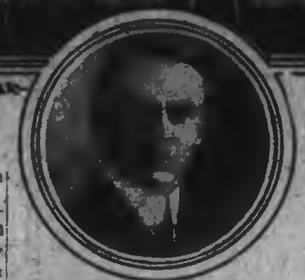
"An hundred joints of turkey in a pie."

And Gray gives us a picture of Christmas in which:—

"From the low peasant to the lord
The turkey smokes on every board."

MEASURING the SMALLEST THING in the WORLD

PROFESSOR MILLIKAN'S APPARATUS FOR ISOLATING AND MEASURING AN ELECTRON, THE SMALLEST THING IN THE WORLD.



PROFESSOR R.A. MILLIKAN.

(Copyright, 1912, by the New York Herald Co. All rights reserved.)

WHEN Professor R. A. Millikan, of the Ryerson Physical Laboratory, at the University of Chicago, announced a short time ago that he had discovered a way to isolate and accurately measure an electron, which is the smallest thing in the world, the scientific world immediately sat up and listened with all its ears. It had reason to, for this is an experimental feat that practically every great physicist of the last two or three centuries has endeavored to accomplish, but without success.

To the general public, however, Professor Millikan's discovery meant little or nothing. The average man, whose notion of something minute is a pin point or a grain of sand, declines to enthuse over anything as small as molecules, atoms and the like. He doesn't want to contract a headache by the mere process of trying to comprehend such an infinitesimal particle as those which we are informed go to make up all the common substances, while as for attempting to conceive of a method for catching and measuring one—well, not in several thousand years.

Yet there is something fascinating in the thought of a particle so small that it would take one thousand of them laid side by side in a row and then magnified a thousand times or more under a microscope to make a speck large enough to be seen. This is true of a molecule, which the text books tell us is the smallest particle of a substance that can exist separately and still maintain its composition and properties.

In other words, it is a combination of two or more atoms of any element held together by chemical attraction or affinity. It is evident, therefore, that an atom is smaller than a molecule. But even an atom is a long way from being the smallest thing in the world. In fact it is a perfect whale when compared with the electron, which is nothing more nor less than a particle of electricity, for it is agreed by scientists that electricity is just as definitely atomic as any other substance—a mass of iron for instance.

According to Professor Millikan there are hundreds of electrons in a single atom of most of the common substances and the volume actually occupied by these electrons themselves is probably as small in comparison with the volume of the atom as is the volume of the sun and planets in comparison with the whole volume of the solar system. Reduced to figures, the diameter of a molecule is .00000002 of a centimetre. But the diameter of an electron is about one hundred-thousandth that of a molecule. This means that one hundred million of them would have to be placed side by side in a row before even the most powerful microscope would reveal the speck thus made to the human eye.

If that is not enough to give one an idea of the minuteness of an electron, let him reflect over this:—If one hundred million people began to count the number of electric atoms necessary to saturate by electrolysis sufficient hydrogen to fill a child's toy balloon, and if they counted at the rate of one hundred a minute and kept steadily at it, never stopping to eat or sleep, it would take those hundred million hustlers something like four million years to complete the job.

In measuring an electron it is first necessary to isolate an ion. An ion is a molecule carrying one free electron, or atom of electricity. Professor Millikan does this by means of an apparatus of his own invention. The apparatus consists essentially of a dust free air chamber, into which a cloud of fine droplets of oil is blown with the aid of dust free air. One or more of the droplets of this cloud are allowed to fall through a pin hole into the space between two plates of a horizontal air condenser, and the pin hole is then closed by means of an electro-magnetically operated cover. Three small glass windows are placed in the sides of the condenser at the angular positions of 0°, 165° and 190°. A narrow parallel beam of light from an arc lamp enters the condenser through the first window and emerges from the last. The other window serves for observing, with the aid of a short focus telescope placed about two feet distant, the illuminated oil droplet as it floats in the air between the plates. The appearance of this droplet is that of a brilliant star on a black background.

By suspending the minute oil droplets in rarefied gases instead of in air at atmospheric pressure Professor Millikan has been able to make the droplets partake of the motions of agitation of the molecules to such an extent that they can be seen by any observer to dance violently about under the bombardment which they receive from the flying air molecules. Then by measuring accurately the amount of motion of agitation of the oil drops and comparing it with the motions which they assume under the influence of an electrical field, because of the charge which they carry, Professor Millikan has been able to make an exact and certain identification of the electrical charge carried by an atmospheric ion, with the electrical charge carried by ordinary ions in solution.

This work not only furnishes conclusive proof of the correctness of the electronic theory of electricity but gives to it much more satisfactory demonstration than has ever before been found of the perpetual dance of the molecules of matter.

The electric atom is certainly small beyond comprehension, and its definite isolation and exact measurement stands forth as one of the eleven years as it is also one of the most important achievements of modern physics.

Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, the Town of Happiness.

AN industrial city without a labor question is Waynesboro, Pennsylvania. Within the life of the present generation it has grown from a little hamlet under the foothills of the Blue Ridge to a bustling town of 10,000 inhabitants, without casting aside the principles of brotherhood, equitable distribution of wealth and co-operation on which it was founded by the Mennonites and Tunkers.

Waynesboro is by no means a socialistic community, and there is no attempt to limit fortunes or to distribute wealth equally. The idea is to allow every man to hold just as much property and just as much wealth as he earns. This is what the men of Waynesboro mean by an equitable distribution of wealth. Capitalists do all in their power to assist laborers, to help them to something better, but the laborer must prove his worthiness. Less than one per cent of the laborers are foreigners, and the majority of them own shares of stock in the industries in which they are employed.

Waynesboro is attracting widespread interest among sociologists and students of economy, who are watching keenly to see whether the co-operation idea and the plan of equitable distribution of wealth will be practical in view of the enormous growth of the community.

The great industries which have built up Waynesboro had their beginnings on the threshing floor of a barn and in a blacksmith's shop. Peter Geiser was the son of a farmer who lived near Waynesboro. Threshing grain with a flail was the bane of young Geiser's existence. There was a threshing machine on the market, but it was of little use. Peter spent hours thinking out devices which would save him a little labor with the flail, and after years of working and experimenting he and his brother, Daniel, had a machine which pretty effectively separated the grain from the straw. While he was travelling through the country exhibiting his machine at fairs, Peter Geiser made the acquaintance of George Frick, a blacksmith, who was struggling to perfect a traction engine.

This was just what was needed to operate the threshing machine, and the two young men joined forces. The first machines were manufactured in a building on the Geiser farm, but it was soon necessary to erect factories at Waynesboro. This was the laying of the foundation of the industrial centre. As the business grew it was found necessary to maintain the two departments separately. The result was the incorporation of the Frick Company and the Geiser Manufacturing Company. These, with the Landis Tool Company, are the three largest industries in Waynesboro to-day.

George Frick was a Mennonite, Frank Landis and his brother, A. B. Landis, are Mennonites, and Peter and Daniel Geiser were Tunkers. Kara Frick, at present general manager of the Frick Company, and A. O. Frick, sons of George, are Presbyterians, but they adhere to the strict simplicity of life practised by their father and those of his faith.

The people of the Tunker and Mennonite churches live much as the Quakers do. They originally went to Pennsylvania at the invitation of William Penn, after they had fled from persecution in Switzerland to Holland. The Mennonites and Tunkers never wear gold or jewelry of any kind. Although they may wear clothes of the very best quality, they are always very simply cut and are not unnecessarily expensive. They refuse to bear arms, never go to law, and will not take an oath.

Enormous wealth is not attractive to them and their faith is founded upon the spirit of brotherly love. They believe in leading a helping hand to all. This was the principle on which the early industries were founded, and although the invested capital and the annual output has multiplied, the same principle operates.

Waynesboro money is all or nearly all invested in Waynesboro. According to a statement of J. H. Stoner, cashier of the People's National Bank, there is not $50,000 of Waynesboro money invested in outside securities.

The town supports two uniformed policemen, one is the chief and the other the force. The police department boasts that last year they made twenty-one arrests, fifteen of these, however, occurred during the summer when nearby resorts were crowded with visitors, and in most cases the charge was nothing more serious than disorderly conduct.

There are three barrooms in town, each in a hotel; but the owners say that customers, except for an occasional travelling man, are few, and it is said that summer visitors require considerably more liquid than do the people of Waynesboro. The purveying of liquor seems to be about the one industry which does not flourish in Waynesboro.

As one hotel owner puts it: "The folks about here only use whiskey as medicine and then they want it mixed with sarsaparilla or coffee, as they won't mind the taste, and they are the most exasperatingly healthy people I ever saw. There's more water drunk in this town in one week than flows over Niagara Falls in a month."

JOHN H. DEARDORFF

There are three prosperous banks in the city, with total deposits of almost $2,000,000 credited to 9,000 persons. This gives ninety per cent of the population of Waynesboro bank accounts.

Several years ago the demand for labor grew suddenly greater than the supply and it was necessary to import a number of ironworkers. They agitated among the local laborers in favor of a union and the younger men were rather inclined to organize. But the older workmen, especially those with some of the stock, soon discouraged the movement.

"It would have been the death of the co-operative corporations," said John Monson, a workman in the Frick shops, to a newspaper reporter. "I told my boy that if the unions got into Waynesboro he might as well expect to go on doing drudgery work forever, with no hope of finally becoming independent through his holdings of stock. I have saved a tidy little sum, invested in stock, and was counting on leaving a small fortune to him. I explained to him that if labor unions got a hold in Waynesboro and forced wages up it would cut down on the dividends and would decrease the value of my stock, which I intended to leave to him. You see, we in Waynesboro are most of us stockholders and we don't want any unions. If we joined them we would only be fighting against ourselves."

There has never been a bank failure in Waynesboro and there are few instances of individual failures.

The Frick Company recently purchased a farm of seventy-five acres and cut it up into building lots and laid out streets. The land is being sold to their employes at a low figure and on the instalment plan. The man who buys a lot must build his own house, but the Building Loan Association is ready to assist him in that. Several homes have already been erected and so much of the land has been purchased that the company is considering the acquisition of more.

Although the Frick brothers are Presbyterians, they have sold a plot of the land to a Baptist church, which will build upon it, in the centre of the community of laborers' homes.

"We gave it to them at the same price we charge the men," said W. H. Mann, secretary of the Frick company, "for we believe it will be of benefit to us as well as to the men. It's a steadying influence, creates in them higher ambitions, and merely as a matter of cold business it will pay us in the end."

The land is sold at just enough increase over the cost to the company to cover necessary expenses as it has enabled and the expense of carrying the purchaser until the whole sum has been paid.

The industries of Waynesboro are capitalized for $7,250,000, and the annual output of products is valued at $7,750,000. The Board of Trade has instituted a Factory Guaranty Fund, for the purpose of bringing new industries to Waynesboro, offering special advantages to manufacturers and assisting in the erection of plants. Although the fund has not been in existence a year, there have been 157 subscriptions, aggregating $205,500.

Besides the $2,000,000 of Waynesboro money deposited in three banks, the people have $1,000,000 invested in the capital stock and surplus of these banks, $1,000,000 in the Mont Alto Railroad and the Baltimore and Cumberland Valley Railroad, and $5,500,000 in industrial concerns, yet there is not a man in town who is known to have property valued at $1,000,000 or more. The value of the real estate is estimated at about $5,000,000, and the people own corporate securities worth more than $8,500,000. The wealthiest man is not credited with more than one per cent of the total wealth of the town. Labor and capital are so closely interwoven as to their interests that they are virtually one.

Notwithstanding its almost socialistic tendencies, Waynesboro does not believe in municipal ownership. When the water and gas companies were offered to the city four years ago at a very fair price the people decided against the purchase. These companies belonged to the estate of a man who had moved to Philadelphia and died. When popular subscriptions were opened to purchase the water and gas plants the amount required was oversubscribed four times.

One of the large manufacturing companies recently authorized an increase of $1,000,000 to its capital stock. Another recently made a cash payment to stockholders of $500,000, and a third corporation has issued bonds to the amount of $1,000,000 for the further development of its property. About $200,000 has been invested in the smaller industries of the town.

It is this enormous increase in the industries of Waynesboro which is going to test the strength of the co-operative system, and economists are studying the situation. It is remarkable that so general a distribution of wealth has existed for so long in a town of 10,000 persons, and it is a question whether the injection of new stock into the community ruled by the manners and customs of the hardy, plain living Mennonites and Tunkers will not mean the advent of labor troubles and the amassing of enormous personal fortunes.

The Wedding of the Waters.

SOMETIMES the ceremony that will mark the finish of the Panama Canal, which will mingle the waters of the Atlantic with those of the Pacific, has been spoken of as "the wedding of the waters." If so, it is to be the longest wedding, although it is not generally known that the waters mingled for the first time in December, 1910. They were brought together through the first pipe line that extended across the continent, a pipe line constructed by a California oil company, and which, when completed, was first tested by sending through it the water of the Pacific, tested up to eight hundred pounds pressure.

The pipe line was built by labor from Jamaica and it was completed in six months. The work started with the beginning of the rainy season and was completed at its end. In one place the men worked through a pouring rain for three weeks, up to their waists in water in a swamp, part of the time on a floating platform, and they laid the line in one place on a floating raft of logs as mile long, and the bottom could not be searched.

The pipe line through which the oil is pumped to the Atlantic side of the Isthmus of Panama follows the line of the Panama Railroad and is about forty-eight miles long. The pipe holds 35,000 barrels of oil. From sea level to the summit, near Culebra, the total lift is about two hundred and seventy-five feet

Redistribution Bill Before Provincial House

Proposed New Constituency to be Formed With Biggar as Seat

The Provincial Parliament now have the new Distribution Bill framed up into working shape, and this will erect 16 new seats and make 54 seats for the whole province.

One of these new seats is allotted to our own town of Biggar, with a district extending thirty miles from east to west and from sixty to ninety miles from north to south, the deflection being caused by the North Saskatchewan River.

As laid out, the new constituency of Biggar consists of all that land shown on the map as follows:

Starting from a point on the line between ranges 11 and 12 on the top of township 43, and proceeding straight north along this line to the North Saskatchewan river in township 40; then along the line of the river till reaching the line between ranges 17 and 18 in township 44, and proceeding south along this line to the N. E. corner of township 30 in range 18, and from there straight east to the starting point.

This gives the Biggar constituency an area of somewhere about 2,400 square miles, and includes the towns of Biggar, South Battleford, Naseby, Traynor, Harris, Zealandia, Herschel, Palo, Oban, Mead, Vance, Meota, and a lot of other smaller places inside the area mentioned above.

SAVAGE CARGOES

Dangers and Difficulties of Transporting Wild Animals

The dangers and difficulties of transporting wild animals from foreign climes to this country are tremendous, yet considerable cargoes of this troublesome freight are handled every year.

One English dealer recently came over from India with various animals to the value of at least $10,000.

The weather was rough, and among the animals that got loose were a tiger, an Indian badger, and a specimen of the scarce Indian monkey.

Several sailors endeavored to catch the tiger; and after being loose for two days, and badly mauling one man, it was eventually recaptured.

The Indian badger was loose for a fortnight, and no one could conceive where it had hidden itself, although it always managed to consume the meat and rice which was put out for it.

As for the sacred monkey, every time anyone ran after it, it went to the top of the mast, and it was not before the end of the voyage that it could be induced to descend.

A more dangerous experience was the occasion of a hyena breaking loose on board a ship from the Persian Gulf to London.

The captain ordered the beast to be shot, but it could not be found. The crew became very nervous and it was decided to leave food about and to keep the creature well fed, to prevent it attacking anyone.

When the boat was docked, and the cargo unloaded, the creature was found in the hold alive and in good condition.

THE PRINCE OF WALES

Marine Monsters Are Becoming Scarcer Every Year

The whale is doomed, and is becoming scarcer and scarcer every year. Unless man desists in hunting these marine monsters, they will soon be nothing but a dim memory.

Of all whales the sperm variety is the most important; to be guilty of a shameless pun, it is the Prince of Whales. It is this type that carries the valuable sperm-oil and the spermaceti wax that makes such fine candles.

The sperm whales live together in schools, sometimes a hundred strong, and are less by mammoth bull-whales sixty feet in length. These huge male creatures have terrible fights, combats of amazing fury that invariably end in the death of one or the other of the combatants.

SOME HEALTHFUL VEGETABLES

Water cress, we are told in a recent magazine article, is an excellent blood purifier.

Lettuce is soothing to the nerves and relieves insomnia.

Tomatoes are good for a torpid liver, but should be avoided by gouty people.

Spinach has great aperient qualities and is far better than medicine for sufferers from constipation. It is also excellent for kidney trouble.

Beets and potatoes are fattening.

Parsnips possess the same virtues as sarsaparilla.

Apples, carrots and Brazil nuts are excellent for sufferers from constipation, and the first two are also good for gouty people.

Celery wards off rheumatism, and is a nerve tonic.

Dates are nourishing and laxative.

The juice of grapes is laxative, but skin and seeds cause constipation.

Bananas are beneficial for chest complaints.

Onions are good for all nerve disorders, have a soothing effect upon colds, coughs, la grippe and pneumonia. They are also a preventive of insomnia.

Cranberries are good for malaria and erysipelas.

Parsley aids digestion and reduces flesh.

Asparagus stimulates and strengthens the kidneys and causes perspiration, thereby ridding the system of impurities

Oxo Cubes are what the cook is always wanting. They enable her to make delicious appetising dishes out of odds and ends. They make soups, gravies, hashes—rich and tasty. They take the place of meat for aspic jellies, and are altogether indispensable in the kitchen.

REGARDING WOMEN

Miss Clara Brett Martin addressed the Social Study Club on the subject of laws which affect women. Miss Martin traced the common law of England from the time of the Conquest to the reign of Queen Victoria.

Upon marriage during that time any money, stocks, wearing apparel and so forth belonging to a woman became the property of her husband, also real estate, for as long as the marriage existed. In the event of a separation on justifiable grounds—which it was very difficult for a woman to prove—the matter might be settled by half of her estate being allowed her, but on her death it would revert to him, as she had no power to will it.

Until 1872 a married woman's check was not honored in a bank. The phrase in the marriage ceremony, endow," was carried out in a contrary manner.

A wife had no right in her husband's earnings—though she had a right to his support—but he had a right to her earnings.

In the custody of the children the right of the father is absolute as against that of the mother.

Many interesting points were brought out by the questions which Miss Martin answered at the conclusion of her address. These referred particularly to laws concerning women and children in Ontario.

A married woman has a right to vote for members of the School Board, and an unmarried one for Aldermen, etc., though neither has power to act on such bodies.

From birth a child is under the absolute custody of the father, who can also dictate its education and religious training in his will, and should his directions not be carried out after his death the child could be taken out of the mother's care.

A woman leaving her husband has no right even to the babe unless she can prove her husband to be living a life of absolute profligacy, in which case the child is left in her care until it is seven years old.

MAKES HAIR GROW

McDermid and Jury, druggists, have an invigorator that will grow hair or money back.

The time to take care of your hair is when you have hair to take care of.

If your hair is getting thin, gradually falling out, it cannot be long before the spot appears.

The greatest remedy to stop the hair from falling is SALVIA, the Great American Hair Grower, first discovered in England. SALVIA furnishes nourishment to the hair roots and acts so quickly that people are amazed.

And remember, it destroys the Dandruff germ, the little pest that saps the life that should go to the hair from the roots.

SALVIA is sold by McDermid and Jury under a positive guarantee to cure Dandruff, stop Falling Hair and Itching Scalp in ten days, or money back. A large bottle costs 50c. The word "SALVIA" (Latin for sage) is on every bottle. Also sold at Payne's drug store.

A LUCKY GOLD WATCH

It Brought Much Wealth to its Former Owner

Twenty years ago Dr. Coleridge of Ingersoll gave a gold watch, an inexpensive one at that, for 1600 feet of land on Soudan avenue, Toronto. The owner got tired carrying them and was quite willing to take $25 for the bunch, but as the doctor's watch was just what he wanted, the doctor got the lots. Not long ago Dr. Coleridge sold the property for $11 a foot, or nearly $18,000. And the man who bought them, a local operator, has had a half dozen chances to sell them again at $15 a foot.

CLARA BARTON'S CLAIMS TO FAME

She Had Been a Hard Worker Especially on the Field of Battle

Miss Clara Barton who died in her eighty-first year was a busy woman all her life, and up to a few months before her death kept up a correspondence with friends and those interested in Red Cross organization in many parts of the world. Interviewers who went to her with the idea of preparing obituary notices in advance, generally found her busy framing or answering. Once when something spoken by her about her misses she said: "I have never had a sickness, but I have always had more work than I could do lying around my feet, and I try hard to get it out of the way so I can go on and do the next." This is the woman who at the age of 77 went to Cuba and did field work among the wounded soldiers, at the personal request of President McKinley. Ten years later she told an interviewer: "I am strong and well, knowing neither illness nor fatigue, disability nor despondency, and thanking God hourly that I have never known what it is to be without work. It has always been the most satisfying part of my religion, and in my declining days I can truly say that if other things have been taken away the best is left—the desire to work and the opportunity to fulfil it."

Miss Barton had many claims to fame. She was the first woman to be appointed to a regular clerical position at Washington and she was a clerk there when the Civil War broke out, and as soon as the wounded began to pour into the capital she became a visitor at the hospitals. Then she outfitted a wagon with hospital stores and started for the front in McClellan's waist. In that war she earned the name of the Florence Nightingale of the United States but even after she had proved her right to this title she had to encounter prejudice.

She was in Europe when the Franco-Prussian War broke out, and again took the field as a nurse, covering herself with glory and receiving the thanks of nations. It was on this visit to Europe that she became connected with the Red Cross Society, which had been formed as a result of the Treaty of Geneva, which promised immunity to those who wished to succor to the wounded on the field of battle. Miss Barton returned to the United States and spent many years endeavoring to persuade her countrymen that they would be entering no "entangling alliance" if they subscribed to this treaty. Eventually, as a result of her propaganda, the United States recognized the Red Cross Society, and the American branch was formed. Miss Barton was, of course, the first president, and from 1881 to 1904 she held the office. Then a question arose as to the economical management of the funds, and Miss Barton was superseded.

Another great work Miss Barton initiated was the widening of the scope of the Red Cross Society's operations from the purely military to cover great national disasters. Great floods, earthquakes, fires and other calamities that have destroyed human life and property have been alleviated through Miss Barton's agency. Here was a great life, prolonged, as she said through hard work. She was the most remarkable woman, probably, that the United States has so far produced, and if there were in Washington a Westminster Abbey, Miss Clara Barton's body would be sepulchred there.

QUAINT JOHN HART

Had Sold Papers in Toronto for Thirty Years

John Hart, Toronto, who died at the age of 84 years was a quaint old character. He came from Ireland when a lad. He had no relatives in this country, but he had one friend, Lt.-Col. Wallace, who tried to ease the old man's life as much as possible. Very often Hart called at Lt.-Col. Wallace's office and told stories of his life in Ireland, and in fact, all about his personal history. "I'm not feeling very well to-day, Colonel," he said not long ago. "I'd like to go to the hospital." Before he left the office, the old man gave the colonel a few knick-knacks as souvenirs.

It was a general breakdown of the old man, and Lt.-Col. Wallace had him sent to the hospital. Although penniless and homeless, John Hart was not buried in a Potter's grave. A ceremony took place in St. Michael's Cathedral over his remains and interment was in the Roman Catholic cemetery. John Hart had sold papers in Toronto for twenty years and had seen hundreds of his younger confreres come and go. He was a friend of the boys and they helped him considerably along life's highway.

WISE ABOUT OWLS

Jerseyman Says They Can See Pretty Well in the Daytime

"I have studied the nature and habits of owls for a long time and think I have it down to a fine point," writes a Jersey correspondent of Fur News. "Of what I have read and heard about them I find there is quite a number of great mistakes and about the greatest one is that they can't see in the daytime.

"I once read a sermon that was preached by Dr. Talmage. His text was 'He that formed the eye, shall he not see?' (Psalms 94:9). In the course of the sermon he said the eye of the owl is blind in the daytime, and I wondered at that remark very much as the doctor was raised on a farm and was always talking and preaching about birds.

"Now some owls may see better than others, but they can see well enough. I have often found it very difficult to get within gunshot of the great horned owl in open sunshine."

DOCTORS AFRAID TO OPERATE

Could Not Remove Stone From The Bladder. Gin Pills Enabled Him To Pass It.

Jonesport, P. Q.

"During August last, I went to Montreal to consult a specialist as I had been suffering terribly with Stone In The Bladder. He decided on an operation and was assisted by another doctor. They said the calculus was larger than a hen's egg too hard to crush, and that they could not take it out.

I returned home suffering greatly, and did not know what to do, but was recommended by a friend to try GIN PILLS. I bought a box and denied relief from the pain at once. I took a second and third box of GIN PILLS after which I went back to the specialist.

THEY COULD DO NOTHING FOR HIM

He told me the calculus was reduced in size, still he could not relieve me of it, although his trial for two and a half hours.

I returned home and continued to take GIN PILLS as they reduced the pain very much, but I did not expect they would relieve me of the stone, but to my great joy, I passed the stone on October 3rd, and can now do well man and very happy.

I am making this claim to you so that you can see for yourself what a great work GIN PILLS did for me. GIN PILLS are the best medicine in the world and because they did so much for me, I will recommend them all the rest of my life".

J. ALBERT LEBBARD.

Isn't it wonderful? Just think of these simple pills, that even children can take, being able to perform what the greatest specialists in Canada could not do. Surely, the days of the miracle have not passed away, as long as we have Gin Pills. These wonderful pills dissolve stone in the bladder or kidneys because they are a natural solvent for uric acid, which causes calculus. If GIN PILLS are not sold in your neighborhood, send us 50c. for a box or $2.50 for 6 boxes. Sample free if you write us mentioning this paper. National Drug and Chemical Co. of Canada Limited, Dept. YEAGER WINS CUP.

His Earl Grey Proves Best In Feature at Horse Show.

Toronto, May 3.—The attendance on the third night of the eighteenth annual Canadian Horse Show was the largest of the week. Every corner of the armories was well filled, and it indeed was a pretty sight. The display of horses was again of sterling quality, the attention of the enormous crowd being eager throughout the performance. Society and the ladies were as usual engrossed in the saddle horses and jumpers, while the regulars looked on approvingly at the harness classes and hackneys.

A. Yeager of Simcoe repeated his performance of last year in the King Edward Hotel Challenge Cup. Earl Grey gave a fine exhibition and won with a fair margin. Capt. Rodden's Louise was a good second. Mrs. Beck's Lady Norfolk, driven by the Power Minister, was third.

In class 23, for combination harness and saddle horses, Capt Rodden's Miss Dainty was a gem. She was ridden by a lady and had everything in the category. She was versatile gaited, walking, trotting or cantering superbly. Miss Dainty won easily.

In class 75, the Guelph entry landed the blue nicely, Crow & Murray's chestnut being a good second.

R. Matthews of 500 Young street ran one-two in the light delivery class, his exhibit being exceptionally fine. A. W. Holman's Silver Heels was third.

The class for trotters no. exceeding 15.2 provided the excitement of the evening. Two spills that might have resulted fatally took place, and both were the result of reckless driving. It was a well-filled class, and the judges had a hard task awarding the ribbons. Dress Parade was declared the winner, with the red going to Lady C., and W. J. Crossen also got the third with Molly Chimes.

The last event of the evening was class 48, for the jumpers, and was one of the best of the night. Hon. Clifford Sifton lifted first and third with Paddy and The Wasp, the second going to H. S. Wilson's Sarah Moore.

Assembly on June 8.

Toronto, May 3.—Rev. Dr. Somerville is issuing the call for the Presbyterian General Assembly. It will meet at Edmonton on Wednesday evening, June 8, under the moderatorship of Rev. R. P. McKay, D.D., Toronto.

The financial reports will show a substantial increase in the givings for the assembly's funds, but it is doubtful if the actual million dollars aimed at will be quite reached.

The budget for the year 1912-13 will be on an estimated aggregate revenue of $1,000,000 an increase of $100,000.

In view of the enthusiasm created by the laymen's movement the estimates for the present year were on a lavish scale. While the contributions were larger than before, they did not warrant the exaggerated anticipations and a cut of $50,000 has been made in this year's foreign mission estimates.

Salvation Army Fined.

Quebec, May 3.—Adjutant McRae, of the Salvation Army of Quebec, was condemned yesterday by Recorder Dery to a fine of $10 and costs for having held a public religious service at John and Dauteuil streets, thus obstructing traffic.

The recorder advised the Army not to hold any more public services in the streets.

Two Brothers Disappear.

St. Thomas, Ont., May 3.—Thomas and Irvan Randall, aged 14 and 11 years respectively, sons of Israel Randall, living a mile north of West Lorne, went out 6.30 Monday morning to do chores and no trace of them has since been found.

A search is being made. No reason can be assigned for the disappearance.

Bank of Montreal Increase Capital.

Montreal, May 3.—Shareholders of the Bank of Montreal have been called to attend a meeting June 10, to authorize application for an increase in capital from $16,000,000 to $25,000,000.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Toronto Live Stock.

TORONTO, May 2.—The railways reported 75 carloads at the City Market, comprising 983 cattle, 2264 hogs, 69 sheep, 230 calves and 14 horses.

Butchers.

There were cattle bought for butchers' purposes of export weights at prices ranging from $7 to $7.90, butchers' cattle, weighing from 1000 to 1200 lbs., at $6.75 to $7; cattle, 900 to 1000 lbs., at $6.40 to $6.75; cattle, 800 to 900 lbs., at $6.25 to $6.40; cattle, 600 to 750 lbs., at $5 to $5.65; cows, $2 to $6, with some extra quality cows at $6.25 to $6.50; bulls, $4.50 to $6.

Stockers and Feeders.

Since the farmers got busy seeding the demand for feeders and stockers has not been as great. Stockers sold from $4.75 to $5.25; feeders, 900 to 1000 lbs., at $5.20 to $5.45.

Milkers and Springers.

Scarcity of really choice cows is still apparent, and buyers with orders for such are finding much difficulty in filling them. Of medium to fairly good cows there is a showing, and sales for such range chiefly from $50 to $80, but cows good enough to command $85 and $90 are scarce, and a price limit on a strictly choice Holstein or big Durham cow cannot be placed below, $95, and something fancy would sell higher. Common and inferior thin cows sell around $40 to $45 each. See sales given below.

Veal Calves.

Receipts of veal calves were large, prices remained steady at $8.50 to $9 for the general run, with a few good ranging up to $9 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

Sheep ewes sold at $5.50 to $6.50, with a few selects reaching $7; rams, $4.50 to $5.25; yearlings, $7 to $8.50 per cwt.; spring lambs, $8.50 to $9 each.

Hogs.

The hog market was not quite as firm, at least it was so reported by those who ought to know. Selects fed and watered sold from $8.75 to $8.85 fed and watered, and $8.50 f.o.b. cars at country points.

East Buffalo Cattle Market.

EAST BUFFALO, May 3.—Cattle—Receipts, 50 head; market, active, steady; prime steers, $8.40 to $8.75; butcher grades, $8.20 to $8.35.

Calves—Receipts, 400 head; market, active, 25c lower; cull to choice, $4 to $9.50.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 2000; market, slow; lambs, 10c lower; choice lambs, $9 to $9.20; wool lambs, $9 to $10.25; cull to fair, $7.50 to $8.75; yearlings, $6 to $6.50; sheep, $4 to $7.25.

Hogs—Receipts, 3200; market, fairly active, 5c lower; Yorkers, $7.80 to $8; pigs, $7.50; mixed, $8 to $8.05; heavy, $8.05 to $8.10; roughs, $7 to $7.10; stags, $5.50 to $6.

Chicago Live Stock.

CHICAGO, May 3.—Cattle—Receipts, 8000; market, steady to strong; beeves, $5 to $9; Texas steers, $5.35 to $7.35; western steers, $5.75 to $7.90; stockers and feeders, $5.20 to $6.80; cows and heifers, $2.85 to $7.75.

Hogs—Receipts, 32,000; market, weak; light, $7.35 to $7.85; mixed, $7.60 to $7.72½; heavy, $7.60 to $7.75; rough, $7.60 to $7.80; pigs, $4.75 to $6.85; bulk of sales, $7.75 to $7.70.

Sheep—Receipts, 12,000; market, 10c to 15c lower; native, $5 to $8; western, $5.25 to $8.35; yearlings, $8.50 to $9.75; lambs, native, $6.75 to $9.60; western, $6.85 to $10.00.

Cheese Markets.

VANKLEEK HILL, Ont., May 3.—Vankleek Hill Cheese Board held their annual meeting to-day and the following officers were elected: President, C. E. Northcote; secretary-treasurer, D. S. McIntyre. There were 325 boxes of cheese boarded and all sold at 13½c. Five buyers were there present.

Constantinople, May 3.—A small tugboat which was engaged in inspecting the channel buoys in the Dardanelles Wednesday night, fouled a mine and was blown to pieces.

Bryce May Be Recalled.

London, May 3.—Unionist members of the House of Commons are preparing to catechise the Government regarding what they characterize Ambassador Bryce's "treasonable act" in supporting the proposals made by President Taft in the matter of Canadian reciprocity, and as to whether the Government propose to recall the ambassador.

Arthur Shirley Benn is anxious to know if Mr. Bryce was aware that the object of the reciprocity was to make Canada an "adjunct of the United States"; if his acquaintance therein was not treasonable, and whether, in view of the published correspondence between President Taft and Theodore Roosevelt it is the intention of the Government to recall the Ambassador.

The Daily News last night gave special prominence to conjectures whether Mr. James Bryce's journey to Australia means he has been recalled. It points out that he left Washington apparently on the very day Taft published his letter to Roosevelt admitting reciprocity would make Canada only an adjunct of the U.S. "The fact is," declares The News, "Bryce has made himself impossible at Washington."

Railway Firemen's Demand.

New York, May 3.—One of the demands made by the locomotive firemen is that on coal-burning locomotives in freight service a fireman and an assistant firemen shall be employed. This would mean the employment of 14,000 additional firemen.

Fell Three Storeys.

Toronto, May 3.—Fall from a third storey window in the Princess Hotel, 252 East King street, about midnight, David Nicholson, a Scotchman, aged 25 years, was probably fatally injured. He was taken to St. Michael's Hospital in an unconscious condition, and it is thought that his skull is fractured. His wrist was broken and his face badly lacerated.

Tait to Succeed O. M. Hays?

Montreal, May 3.—Head officials of the Grand Trunk Railway here yesterday afternoon, when asked about a Toronto report that Sir Thomas Tait, the former commissioner of railways for Australia, is prominently mentioned as Mr. Hays' successor, said nothing would be known in this connection until Chairman Smithers arrived here from England next week.

A Man With an Appetite.

Nicholas Wood was a Kentish gentleman who gormandized his way to fame in the seventeenth century. This worthy "would eat a whole hog at a sitting and follow it up next day with thirty dozen pigeons." Wood's was an appetite not to be laughed at, and so when some slight was put upon it by Taylor, the water poet, Wood challenged the poet to a bout at "eating as much black pudding as would reach across the Thames at any place fixed by Taylor himself between London and Richmond." The Thames at London Bridge is about 300 yards across, and black pudding is compounded in links the same as sausage, so it's easy to figure Wood's gross tonnage.

A Deep Sleep.

Two well-known Paris dramatists were present at the Comedie Francaise at a performance of a play by one of them, who may be called A. Half way through the play A.'s friend B. pointed to a spectator in a box who was fast asleep. The next evening A. and B. were again at the Comedie Francaise. One of B.'s plays was on the bill this time, and A. saw a spectator asleep and pointed him out to his friend. "My plays are not the only sleepy ones, you see," he said. "Look over there!" "Oh, I don't know!" said B. "I'm nearly sure it's the same box, and I believe it's the same man. He hasn't managed to wake up yet, that's all."

World's Oldest Investment.

The oldest investment security on earth is the real estate mortgage. We know that money was loaned on mortgages in ancient Babylon in the time of King Hamurabi, 4,000 years ago, and that some 2,500 years ago the great Babylonian banking house of the Egibi family invested large sums in mortgages on both city and farm property, the mortgages being recorded on bricks, which have been preserved in the safety deposit vaults of those times — great earthenware jars buried in the earth—preserved until the archaeologists in our own day and age dug them up to show us when, where and how mortgages originated.

Smith (after considering some time) —I'll give it up, old chap.

Brown (as he prepares to dodge things)—It will depend whether he is a professional or a hammer chewer.—London Answers.

Seed Germination.

In Some Cases the Development Is Remarkably Rapid.

It has been said that the seed of the globe turnip when growing increases its own weight fifteen times within a minute. The seed of this turnip is exceedingly minute, being not larger than the twentieth part of an inch in diameter, and yet in the course of a few months the seed will be developed by the soil into twenty-seven millions of times the bulk of the original, and this in addition to a considerable bunch of leaves.

On peat ground turnips have been found to increase by growth 15,000 times the weight of their seed each day they stood.

The funguses offer an instance of remarkably rapid growth. The great puff ball will attain the size of a pumpkin in a single night, and Lindley calculated that the cells whereof it is composed will multiply at the rate of 60,000,000 a minute.

Many seeds germinate in a very short period—the cress in two days; spinach, turnips and kidney beans in three days, lettuce in four, melons and gourds in five, most of the grain used in a week and hyssop at the end of a month. But others remain for a very long period without showing signs of germination.—New York Herald.

An Eye Arrester.

In this day of catch words and slogans, once in a while a roving eye will chance upon a phrase that sticks. Going down in a Broadway car the other day two tired looking men sat side by side, glancing disinterestedly out of the window opposite as the car sped past the signs in the wholesale dry goods district. All at once the gaze of both men focused at a certain point and they turned their heads to read the sign in full. On the door of one of the wholesale millinery houses was this legend: "Come in without knowing, but don't go out the same way." The eyes of both men met as they finished reading it, whereupon each smiled a bit. "Not such bad advice, that," said one, and his neighbor grunted approvingly.—New York Press.

Friday Dickens' Lucky Day.

Charles Dickens was not one of those who are superstitious concerning Friday. It was on Friday that many of the good things came to him, and it was on that day that he entered upon, paid the price and took possession of Gadshill, the one thing he cherished more than all of his other possessions. It was Gadshill that he had gazed upon when a wee bit of a boy with a hope, then giving little signs of fruition, that he might live to own it some day, and it was Gadshill whose walls he covered with mirrors in almost oriental magnificence.—Boston Record.

THE MINDEN MURDERER CAPTURED

Confesses His Crime. Gun Found Within Twelve Feet of Body.

Special to The Examiner.

MINDEN, ONT., May 3rd.—Inspector Reburn and Constable John Welch just arrived with A. A. Ellis, who has been arrested for the murder of Lewis Porter. Prisoner was closely guarded and handcuffed to the constable. He was taken by surprise at his residence early this morning, and captured without difficuly. He is now lodged in the lock up here and will be brought up this evening at jury trial and investigation.

LATER.—Ellis confessed to the murder. Porter and Ellis met on the road. Both were armed. Ellis asked Porter if he was looking for him. The latter replied that he was not. When Porter opened fire wihout effect, and Ellis returned the fire with fatal results, Porter's gun was found this morning within 12 feet of where the shooting took place. He admits taking the body 20 yards away from where the shooting took place. The rifle Ellis used has been secured.

SURPRISE EXPRESSED

Lord Mersey and Attorney-General Isaacs Comment Upon the Disaster to the "Titanic"

SURVIVORS TO TESTIFY

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, ENG., MAY 3. — Lord Mersey, enquiring into the Titanic disaster ,and Attorney General Sir Rufus Isaacs, both made comment and expressed great surprise this morning at the evidence submitted, which made it appear that the vessel ran right ahead into an ice field at a speed of twenty-one knots, despite the warnings from other vessels of the dangerous berg ahead. Sir Rufus also put stress on the grossly inadequate lifeboat accommodation. Among the witnesses already here for enquiry are the surviving members of the Titanic's crew who returned to Southampton from New York on the Lapland.

Sir Rufus Isaacs, continuing the questioning of witnesses brought out the fact that the proportion of first class passengers saved was greatly larger than third class, also that while only five women of the first class went down, there were many more of third class women and children drowned. He pointed out that the life of the third class passengers was just as valuable to his family, perhaps more so, in many cases, than first class passengers. Sir Rufus said it was part of the Commissioner' duty to decide whose fault it was that such discrimination was made.

WATER CONSERVATION ASSOCIATION FINDS FAVOUR IN BELLEVILLE

Will Lend Aid to Scheme That Had Its Inception in Peterborough

BELLEVILLE, MAY 3.—At the meeting of the Board of Trade, on Tuesday evening a communication was read from Peterborough, stating that the water and power users of that city had held a meeting for the purpose of organizing a Central Ontario Water Conservation Association for the purpose of impressing upon the Government the necessity of conserving the water in the back lakes and streams. Belleville was asked to join the Association.

Mr. Reid moved that the Board approve of the Association, and that the President be asked to be a delegate to the proposed Association.

Mr. MacLachlan seconded the motion, which was carried.

Mr. J. W. Johnson, M.P.P., speaking of the matter of conservation, said that in the Legislature, he with Mr. Nesbitt, the member for East Northumberland, had to fight for the Seymour Power Company as Peterborough desired to expropriate all water power in the county of Peterborough. He believed that the Seymour Power Company was acting in good faith and treating the various municipalities in a most honourable manner. This company might take some action in the conservation of the waters of the river Moira, and if it did the Board of Trade would back the company up.

American Coal Companies Are Already Two Months Behind in Their Shipments For Supply in Canada

MINER LEADERS MEET

Special to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, N.Y., MAY 3.—With the suspension of work continuing in hard coal regions, the situation in anthracite mining districts which supply Eastern States and Canada with their fuel, is getting more serious. There was a protracted meeting of the miners' committees this morning, to decide what should be done following the definite refusal of President Baarm of the Mine Owners' Associations to consider the terms offered by the operators. Already the companies are two months behind in their shipments for next winter's supply in Canada.

TO PURIFY CITY'S WATER

Steps Will Shortly be Taken Regarding Water Above the City—Health Board Has Power

CRESCENT ST. DRAINS TO GO

The purifyity of the water of the Otonabee river above the city is bound to be demanded in the near future. The Board of Health has practically all the powers that are necessary, and it was intimated to the Examiner today that if the city must comply with the demands of the townships of North and South Monaghan and Otonabee, equally stringent demands will be made by the Board of Health or the Council to prevent the pollution of the water supply above Peterborough.

This not only includes any contamination that may be discharged from Lakefield and intermediate points, but it will likely restrain the hotels and big summer resorts in Stoney Lake district. Even the steamers plying the lakes will have to comply with the regulations, for the act distinctly states that they shall empty into the water of the lakes or rivers nothing that may pollute them. It is claimed that if Peterborough must expend a large sum of money to assist in keeping the Otonabee river free from impurities, the same will be expected of other municipalities, companies and individuals in order to safeguard the purity of Peterborough's water supply.

It is not known whether any action will be taken at once, but the health authorities have the powers now to enforce these matters and it will only be a matter of time until the enforcement of the law is requested.

The residents along Crescent street will be prohibited from draining into the lake as they have done, at least that is the statement made to the Examiner. Sewerage connection will have to be made with Ware street, or in some manner with the main sewer, and any other services of this nature will have to comply with the letter of the Act. Factories, of course, will be included. Action may be deferred for some time, but at any rate, recent happenings serve as an indication of the work that will have to be undertaken in the near future if the provisions of the Health Act in its present form are to be carried out.

CHANCES ARE POOR

Recent Developments It is Said Have Practically Eliminated President Taft and Champ Clark

RECIPROCITY A FACTOR

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, MAY 3. — Independent observers here are of the opinion that recent developments have practically eliminated President Taft the Republican, and Speaker Champ Clark, Democrat, from the list of possibilities for next President, owing to their attitude on the question of reciprocity. Taft's letter, published by Roosevelt, during the Massachusetts campaign, speaking of the United States making Canada a mere adjunct to the States, has made Taft look absolutely ridiculous as a diplomat, according to one Washington paper. Champ Clark's annexation propaganda during the same period, put him out of the running, say others. On the whole the situation here looks like an easy nomination for Roosevelt, and a stiff fight between Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson or Mayor Gaynor of New York. Canada and her refusal of reciprocity is becoming a greater factor every day in the presidential campaign.

DRY SWEEPING ENDANGERS THE PUBLIC HEALTH AND SHOULD GO

Dr. McPherson is Opposed to It —City of Hamilton to Pass By-law Against It—Measure Must Be Carried to Keep Flies Away

DUST ARE A MENACE

Dr. McPherson recently stated to the Examiner that the dry sweeping of a dusty road was contrary to sanitary principles, and that something would likely be done to prevent it. He had recently seen merchants and other George street men sweeping the dust off the walks in front of their stores, and a large part of it was simply thrown into the air, to be inhaled by pedestrians. The Medical Health Officer stated that he believed a by-law was necessary to prohibit the practice. It is not the intention to create difficulties for citizens, but simply to point out the ways in which things should be done. Fumes accumulate on on the sidewalks, and this, when dried with the dust from the filth on the street, is forced to contain countless germs of some kind or other.

What Hamilton is Doing.

At the meeting of the Hamilton board of health recently it was unanimously decided that a by-law should be introduced by the city to prohibit the dry sweeping of all stores, buildings and sidewalks. Dr. Roberts opened the discussion when he recommended that such a by-law should be passed without delay, pointing out the dangers which existed in the dust nuisance.

Thomas Stadin favoured the doctor's recommendation, and thought it was a matter which could not be taken up too soon. The other morning, while walking along King street, he was almost choked by clouds of dust created by three energetic storekeepers, who were busy with the brooms on the sidewalk in front of their stores.

Thomas Quinn drew attention to the fact that the citizens were not permitted to sweep off their lawns across the sidewalks, and he did not see why dry-sweeping should be allowed. It was a nuisance practiced all over the city, and should be stopped.

The other members of the board also voiced their opinions on the subject, all agreeing that legislation should be introduced to prevent it, and it was decided to refer the matter to a sub-committee to take the matter up with the city solicitor.

Another matter of which Dr. McPherson spoke was the putting of manure in boxes. He knew of many barns and stables in the city from which the manure was carelessly thrown through a window without another thought. In some cases the manure was about a dozen feet from the kitchen of the house, and in another it may be a nuisance to a neighbour. Dr. McPherson considers that means should be provided for this manure, or some means of covering it should be adopted. The fly season is almost here and the M. H. O. claims that there can always be in the city that call for an improvement.

What Chatham is Doing.

In this regard it is interesting to note what Chatham is doing. A paper in that town has the following:

A deputation from the Board of Health was heard with regard to having the city take some action in the recommendation made by the Board some time ago towards having all manure within the city limits placed in boxes or rather receptacles to keep the flies away. Manure piles are admitted to be breeding places for flies, and the first step towards exterminating the annoying insects would be to make provisions for suitable boxes in which to hold the manure. The fly season is approaching, they averred, and immediate action is necessary to cope with the situation. As a health measure it will also be necessary to take steps as the flies are acknowledged to be the means through which many diseases are carried from house to house. It would be a hardship to no one to force the keeping of horses to provide boxes for the manure. They would be constructed of old boards at very little expense. Under the by-law citizens are allowed to have two loads of manure on their premises.

Questioned by one of the aldermen Dr. Chestnutt could not say positively whether or not lime sprinkled freely on the piles would have the desired effect of expelling the flies.

Alderman Arnold believed that it would be a hardship to some to force them to this expense.

On a suggestion of Dr. Roy, Alderman Wanless promised to have the Property Committee present at the meeting of the Board next Monday to take up this as well as several other matters of interest to both sides.

FRIDAY, MAY 3, 1912

DOUBLE-HEADED FALSIFICATION.

It is a remarkable coincidence. "Citizen" writes to the Review, attacking the Examiner in respect of its alleged hostility to old age pensions and woman suffrage. In the corresponding issue of the Times, "Consistency" writes precisely the same letter. While this may be an indication of the fact that great minds run in the same channel, it is also evidence that one man is the writer of both letters or the same letter under a false name; and there is no doubt in the Examiner's mind that Mr. J. H. Burnham is the writer—because the stuff reads like his ramblings; and because of the misstatements and wrong meaning read into our articles in the case in question, as has been done by him in correspondence on other subjects.

A word or two of explanation will suffice. In dealing with old age pensions, the Examiner spoke of their tendency in the direction of developing an undesirably dependent spirit, as compared with the opposite tendency in the direction of the development of national habits of thrift, resulting from the government annuities for old age. Those are dependent upon the exercise of the highest human faculty—self-control, self-government, self-denial; and tend to the development of habits of thrift that, regularly practised, would give Canada a robust, steady, sober people. For no man can spend his wages in dissipation and drink, and be as good and valuable citizen as if he saved his money to provide for old age. If we had the government annuities system, in general operation for a generation, we should have a minimum of poor and dependent. For the few of this class—for the poor we shall always have with us—old age pensions would be a good and desirable thing, and would come easily within the competency of our financial ability.

The fact that the government under the annuities system pays interest for deposits—payments—at the rate of between 10 and 12 per cent. per annum, should encourage the people to take advantage of the great benefits of the government annuities privilege, due to their own industrious and provident habits.

Both "Consistency" and "Citizen"—the same thing—say that the Examiner "only condemns old age pensions to the poor." Here speaks the voice of the demagogue. The Examiner does not do this; it only advocates a way to reduce the number of old age poor, to the lowest figure — to decrease the poor by thrift, and not to increase the number of poor by the encouragement of unthrift.

The concluding paragraph of the double-tailed letter, makes another false statement. The Examiner has never opposed the right of women to vote. In fact the Examiner was one of the first journals in Canada to declare for the principle of the extension of the franchis to women. Millions of them would make more intelligent voters and more intelligent members of parliament than many men who make both the franchise and parliamentary representation a mockery and subject for laughter.

A GOOD TRAIT.

Our western cousins are splendidly optimistic. A May snowfall in Alberta is declared to be "good for the wheat." No matter what comes they look on the bright side of things, which is a good thing for easterners or westerners. We, some of us, were inclined to regard with disfavour the return of a Conservative government to power; but with a little optimism we can look at the matter as not so bad a thing after all. It will give, on the principle of the suggestion of contrast, the people an appetite for good government, which will be satisfied by a return of the Liberals to power. Nature provides winter and cool weather so that we may, with the greater zest, enjoy the benefits and beauties of spring and summer.

The Relation Of The Farmer To The Problem Of Military Service

(Montreal Herald)

The Weekly Sun has a detailed plan for a substitute for the annual military training camps, which, as we fully recall, have at one time maintained (again) with the assistance of irresponsible idlers from Toronto and even Buffalo, managed at no small per head to make up the necessary strength. The Sun says that what this country needs most just at present is sensible and not military development. It feels that the farmers of Ontario, very inadequately supplied with labour at the best of times, depleted by the enormous exodus to the West, overwhelmed, with the toil of their own farms during the joyous month of June, which is supposed to be consecrated to drill, should no longer be expected to abandon their fields and shoulder the musket. Let the annual drill be abandoned, and instead let all patriots be enlisted to give the farmer a lift in June. "They will have all the benefits of military drill such as discipline, obedience, physical training, and the exaltation of spirit which comes of patriotic devotion. What spectacle could be more inspiring than that of the Knights of the Bath, Colonels, Majors and Daughters of the Empire, with the road and the digging out new ditches, mending fences, and spreading the stone-pile dust! And how, when the fruits of harvest were gathered into the bursting barns, Canada would greet defiance if one of them ventured to offend us again!"

It is, we repeat, a delightful conception. While we should not (except for reasons of paleomorphism) like to see it carried out in literal earnest, it affords us a lively reminder of the injustice of denouncing the farmer for his alleged neglect of his duty to his country, when all the while he is labouring hard at services which are just as vital and important, and labouring without the slightest encouragement from tariffs or bounties and against the difficulties of a restricted market, a high cost of living and a constantly depleted supply of labour. It is extremely important for Canada that her farmers should participate in the work of defence; but before we lecture them for not doing it we should make sure that we have not so burdened them as to make it almost impossible.

CONTROLLING THE HOUSE FLY.

Three things come into play coincidently, the warm, or—to be literally accurate—warmer weather, the beginning of garbage collection and the garbage problem in relation to the house-fly. Scientists state that every fly destroyed now will mean a million fewer flies by next August. One good way to kill the fly is to prevent its reproduction. It is admitted that unclean premises, festering garbage and similar conditions of dirt are the favourite breeding place and condition of the fly. Keeping premises clean, therefore, will tend to reduce the fly crop and the dangers to health, that flies represent. Flies are recognised as great disseminators of disease. They delight in filth and, if after travelling over putrid offal, the sputum or disjecta of tuberculosis or typhoid patients, they next travel over our food, they leave germs to be conveyed into our systems. We can't entirely banish the fly, but we can keep it out of our houses and out of the butter. Doors and window screens of wire netting, will practically do it. These, combined with the greatest possible cleanliness of premises will reduce the number of flies almost to the vanishing point. At least our houses and our tables will be safe from their dangerous disease-breeding presence, and the discomfort attendant upon the plague of unrestrained house flies, will be absent.

THEY ARE FUNNY FELLOWS.

Unionist members of the Imperial parliament are, we are told, preparing to catechise the government respecting the "treasonable act" of Ambassador Bryce in supporting reciprocity, between Canada and the United States; and they will inquire whether it is the intention of the British Government to recall the Ambassador. What funny fellows these Unionist chaps are. They should know that in this country nobody, except for partizan purposes, took seriously and national existence from reciprocity. Whatever faults reciprocity may have that is not one of them. The party that raised that cry in the late elections are not any more loyal than those who favoured reciprocity in the recent elections; the latter were just as loyal to Canada and the Empire as those of the party which claims all the loyalty, yet is hand in glove with—has embodied in the cabinet—the Nationalist element, which has declared itself as having "had enough of Britain and the British." These same Unionists, who parrot the cry of Canadian politicians of the "practical" type of politics, as to the Empire-reading nature of reciprocity, are the "loyalists" that are ready to rebel, to shoulder pike and pitchfork in resistance to the King's authority, as expressed in a measure to give a part of the united kingdom a measure of self-government, similar to that we enjoy in Canada. Do these rabid and unreasoning people really think there is no limit to the gullibility of the public?

LLOYD-GEORGE'S TRIUMPH.

The details of the British budget, to hand by mail, serve but to further emphasize the greatness of the success of the financing of David Lloyd-George, the "little Welsh lawyer," who has turned out to be one of the greatest Chancellors of the Exchequer which Westminster has ever known. No new tax is put on, nor is any old tax taken off, but so great is the elasticity of the revenue that the new expenditure upon national education, on the army and on the assistance of agriculture, beside the whole cost of the new system of national insurance to the state, will be defrayed without the imposition of an additional cent upon the necessaries or even the luxuries, of life.

This result is a remarkable triumph for Mr. Lloyd-George's chief essay in finance, the budget of 1909. In their first year the new taxes produced £12,000,000, in their second £16,000,000 and in their third £28,000,000. And, moreover, every one of the dismal prophecies made by the classes has been completely falsified. It was said that the taxes of the 1909 budget would immediately and fatally paralyze trade; trade has, however, achieved the greatest boom in history. Lord Lansdowne, in his attacks upon the budget of 1909, objected that the new taxes would be unproductive; but they have proved the most progressively productive of any system of taxation yet conceived by British statesmen.

It may be recalled that Lord Rosebery found in the budget of 1909 the beginning of the "end of all things"—throne, constitution, property, religion, and so on—but the world has gone on ever since without any of these dire disasters developing. Indeed, it is difficult to see how Britain could have carried the immense burden of her naval expenditure had it not been for the much-condemned but highly successful taxes imposed by David Lloyd-George.—Ottawa Free Press.

RAILWAY NOTES

A certain number of conductors brakemen and trainmen, who were not reinstated by the Grand Trunk Railway after the late strike, have been notified to proceed to Toronto and write on examinations regarding the new railway regulations, after which, if successful, they will, it is understood, be taken back by the company.

General Superintendent Gillen of the Grand Trunk Railway, accompanied by Messrs. H. Ferguson, general roadmaster, L. Harold, assistant trainmaster, have completed an inspection of the Company's property in the vicinity of the Columbia Handle works at Bathurst and London, Ont., with a view to constructing a spur line to connect with the Pere Marquette road at that point.

A Hamilton policeman was recently forced to resort to a novel method of removing a man whom he found lying in an intoxicated condition on the main line of the Grand Trunk Railway. The man was unconscious, and it was impossible to carry him any distance or to get the patrol wagon to the spot where he was lying. The officer therefore flagged a yard engine that he saw approaching and had him placed on the cow-catcher, by which means he was conveyed to the station.

Mr. D. B. Dowling, in his report on the Edmonton coal field to the Geological Survey Branch of the Canadian Department of Mines, has this to say of the Clover Bar seam on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway: "Underneath the city the Clover Bar varies in thickness from 4 feet 6 inches to 8 feet. From its maximum near the Grand Trunk Pacific bridge it decreases to 4 feet 6 inches, although there are places near its outcrop where it is even less. Over the country to the north, where it is supposed that drill holes have tested the continuance of this seam, thicknesses up to 19 feet are reported. Near St. Albert a 7 foot seam is found in the borings. West of Morinville there appears to be evidence of a heavy seam ranging from 12 to 19 feet, while at the mines near Morinville, this seam is between 10 and 15 feet thick. In the vicinity of Namao it is only about 5 feet.

COLLECTION WAS HEAVY

450 Calls Were Made by Garbage Contractor Yesterday—Citizens Should Read Instructions

The first few days' working of the garbage collecting system brings out the fact that its success will be dependent to a considerable extent upon the co-operation of the residents.

Yesterday's route was heavy, more than 450 calls having been made. It was nearly six o'clock before the whole territory was covered. The citizens might facilitate the work if they would follow the instructions left at most residences by the Sanitary Inspector. Special attention is directed to the clause calling for the receptacles to be placed in a convenient location. The collector is not supposed to be a Sherlock Holmes to search out the nooks and corners where the garbage cans have been placed by residents familiar to their own premises.

When there is a lane at the back of the premises where the collector can drive, he will do so, but where there is none it is expected that the male members of the household will place the garbage cans or boxes not necessarily in front but at the side of the house, where it can be seen from the street when the wagon calls.

It should be remembered also that only refuse accumulating from May 1 will be collected. Only two notes of discord were sounded yesterday.

In one place, it is officially stated, an accumulation of tins gathered from all over the premises, was refused as not being in accordance with the terms of the contract, and another big accumulation was placed in an inconvenient place. In this case the lady haughtily informed the Inspector that she had put his notice in the stove without reading it (probably she considered it infra dig. to notice it). To-morrow's work will be the district bounded by west side of George street on the east, Murray on the south, Smith on the north, and the G.T.R. track and Reid on the west.

The contractor is in need of another man.

TEAM RAN AWAY

He has to put a weight on his horses at every house, and this it is claimed, retards the collections.

After the contractor got outside the boundary yesterday he stopped his team to pick up something, and they started off, it is reported, and finished the rest of the home journey with the driver's seat empty.

A WOMAN'S WISH

What Juliette Metzer Would Like to Have.

"If a woman could have one wish granted, for the benefit of other women, it would be that all sickly, run-down women might be well and strong again.

Miss Juliette Metzger of New York says: "I was in bad health for about a year, on account of my blood being poor and thin. A short time ago I began to take Vinol and it strengthened and built me up right from the start. I now feel strong and well again and wish that every weak, run-down woman knew what Vinol will do for her."

Poor blood—that's the whole trouble with millions of pale, weak, run-down people, and our delicious cod liver and iron remedy without oil, Vinol, is just what they need to make their blood as pure as a healthy baby's.

We guarantee that Vinol will build you up and make you strong — if it does not we pay back your money. Now is the time to make your blood right, so get your Vinol to-day. McDermid and Jury, druggists, corner George and Charlotte streets; also Lyne's drug store, corner George and Simcoe streets.

SOME THINGS AND OTHERS

Last night a Westender, while gardening in the gloaming, claims to have discovered and mashed the first mosquito of the season. He lives next door—across a lane—from the place where Mr. Scott's precocious rhubarb distinguished itself.

Complaints are made of inefficient post-office service in some respects—letters delivered behind time, delivered to wrong addresses, etc. The Examiner suffers also. Exchange newspapers from the East, and reaching Peterborough by the 5.25 C. P. R. train are, many of them, not distributed till about, or after, noon. These things are not mentioned as idle complaint, but as a hint to the Postoffice. We have a reformed—unfortunately not a Reform—Postoffice head—but the service does not show the expected, or rather implied, improvement.

A young lady in the south end says her appetite for bread is not sharpened by seeing a delivery baker drop a loaf of bread on the street by accident and stealthily and hurriedly replace it with the other loaves. Faith is needed in other matters than religion.

Some persons received notices of the Sanitary Inspector to prepare for the visit of the garbage gathering, and threw them into the stove without reading. A momentary reminder by the Police Magistrate may be the outcome of our zeal for "cleaning up."

If the Inspector wants to insure the reading of his notices, he should send them on a post card intended for her next door neighbour.

Come to think or come to look at the opening buds on the trees, the leaves will appear at about the same time as other years.

LAND OF OPPORTUNITY—Home of the successful cultivation of the orange and grapefruit. Strawberries from the fields marketed at Christmas time.

The Florida truck grower can have his vegetable crops, lettuce, celery, cauliflower, potatoes, tomatoes, cabbage, early corn, etc., on the market earlier than any section of the United States, and at a time when other sections have no crops to offer. This gives him a great advantage in the markets of large centres of population.

The crop-growing season is 365 days. No other portion of the United States equals it.

The difference between mean monthly temperature of Florida in January and July is less than 25 degrees, while Maine records 40 and Pennsylvania 44.

The state is in the humid area with approximate maximum of rainfall—you know it takes water to raise crops.

ROMANCE OF THE AIR

Belgian Aviator After a Quarrel With Fiancée Deliberately Plunged to Death

According to the French newspapers M. Rémi Verrept, the noted Belgian aviator who was killed at a fair at Versailles, committed suicide. It is asserted that when high in the air he deliberately held his arms aloft, and his machine, freed from control, fell headlong to the ground.

Verrept, who was only twenty-three, had taken part in most of the big competitions and races always with sufficient skill and success to arouse some respect on the part of his fellow pilots, but seldom with the touch of good fortune that might have brought him prominently before the public.

On the day of the tragedy he had a long dispute with his fiancée, and several times those who were near by heard him utter most distinctly that if she would not accede to some demand of his he would kill himself.

Those who overheard the dispute thought no more of it, for Verrept had a reputation as a man of calm and rational disposition. When he arrived at Etne there was nothing in his attitude to cause any alarm. He was seen to grasp a signed photograph of his fiancée, and press it over his heart before going up, but these was thought to be nothing extraordinarily unusual in this. His machine was in the best of order. Verrept went up, and for three-quarters of an hour flew round above the ground with his usual mastery.

Then suddenly, when 1,600 ft. to 2,000 ft. up, he pointed downwards at an angle of 45 deg., and, to their horror, those who had been watching became aware that, whilst doing so, he had not cut off his engine. This was not one of his usual glides but a deliberate dive to death. The machine was a wreck, and the body of Verrept was scarcely recognisable.

Those present were still more harrowed by the arrival of his fiancée, who, having heard that he had gone to Etne, had raced out from Paris to attempt to plead with him not to take his life. She had arrived an hour too late.

TOBERMORAY DISCOVERY

Interesting Relics of the Old Spanish Galleon Recovered

In the Bodleian Library Mr. Andrew Laing and Mr. Purnell found an old letter dated November 20, 1635, written by Archibald Millar, who was working with diving-bells at Tobermory on the Spanish vessel, whose name he gives in a letter which he wrote to the Duke of York, afterwards James II., as the Florence of Spain. In this document he stated—"In the fore part of the ship lyes many great ballast stones and some shot among them. We got a great gun 11 feet in length and 7½ inches measurament in the bore, and there were also got two demi-culverins." In confirmation of Archibald Millar's letter the Tobermory Galleon Salvage Company raised recently by means of the digger which they are employing a large number of these ballast stones, which are to be found nowhere else except in this area, and they also recovered some stone cannon ball, the largest of which is about 1 inch less than is given by Millar. The finds also included several silver plates, cannon balls, quite a cluster of short swords, pieces of lead with several distinct nail holes, and sheets of copper such as were used to cover the keels of vessels. There was also recovered an ancient-looking grill stoup.

COMEDY OF A ROBBERY

Burglars Took French Socialist's Theories at Face Value

The villa of M. Compere Morel, the Socialist deputy for the Department of the Gard, France, has been entered by burglars, and he has lodged with the authorities a formal charge of burlary against a person or persons unknown. M. Morel is not only a Socialist but a firm preacher of the novel theory that no man has a right to have more money than another. This theory does not prevent the Socialist deputy from enjoying considerable wealth. Though he has not yet distributed all his own fortune, M. Compere Morel would like to see all property in France and elsewhere nationalised and redivided. The burglars have proved their agreement with him by taking everything they could find in the villa.

Gasping out that his name was Fisher, and asking that his mother be not told of his accident, a young lad knocked down by a runaway team, while riding a bicycle on St. James street, Montreal, died in the arms of those who picked him up. He was badly crushed, the horses trampling him under foot, and the wheels of the ice-cassion also breaked

COLLIE DOG AS WOLF

Bounty of $10 Claimed From Government Under a Sworn Affidavit.

Coupons have been passed off on the Government as Ontario timber wolves by bounty claimants, and various other crooked jobs have been put over in the same connection. The pelt of a collie dog was shipped in from the North country as a wolf skin and accompanying it was an affidavit sworn before a notary public, stating that the animal had killed by wolf and claimed the $10 bounty. A similar convincing illustration of the credit to which such claims had been put forward prior to the event of the new law, requiring the whole pelt to accompany an affidavit, instead of the ears merely, is given in statistics. For three years prior to investigation conducted by the Attorney General, which resulted in the arrest of Government paid in bounties, as follows:—In 1907, $16,200; in 1908, $16,120; in 1909, $14,961; since the new law came into operation, only $8,642 had been paid, and this includes a portion of the animals killed in 1910. Bounty fees have been re-deemed by one-half.

Recently hunters formerly collected on the ears of coyotes killed in Manitoba and Alberta, and in many cases double bounties were collected on single animals, scouters having neglected to cut off the ears, and second affidavits being sworn to before other notaries.

EGGS FROM UNCLE SAM

Some Details of the Canadian Trade in Eggs.

Canada imported 2,560,000 dozen eggs from the United States during the fiscal year 1911, when the exportation of eggs from the Republic, notwithstanding high prices, was the largest ever recorded. While current market reports and current discussions of the cost of living indicate unusually high prices in the United States for this article of consumption and commerce the Bureau of Statistics in reporting a larger exportation in this line than ever before. The number of eggs sent to foreign countries in the year ending with December, 1911, was 13,250,000 dozen, valued at $3,175,000, while the highest record of any earlier calendar year was 9,350,000 dozen, valued at $1,750,000, in 1907.

Cuba, Canada, Panama and Mexico are the chief countries to which eggs are exported from the United States. Of the 1500,00 dozen eggs imported into the United States in the fiscal year 1911 1,350,000 dozen were from England and about a quarter of a million from China and Hong Kong. This item of eggs imported does not include the yolks brought from other countries, of which the quantity imported from Canada amounted to 350,000 pounds and from Germany 75,000 pounds.

MAKING PATENT FUEL.

In the coal-mines a large amount of small coal is sent up, and, although the miner is not paid for it, it is far from being worthless or useless, the coal-owner selling all the small made at the pits.

In Cardiff, Swansea, and Port Talbot there are works where small coal is converted into blocks called patent fuel. The method is by tipping the coal into a large bin, after which it is mixed with pitch, and all ground very fine. It is then conveyed into pug-mills, and super-heated steam is passed through it, knives revolving on a shaft keeping it in motion while this is being done.

Afterwards, being then in a sticky condition, it is passed into a press, and a tremendous pressure applied. This turns the mass into hot, steaming blocks, which are then pushed off either on to endless travelling wires, which convey them into canal-boats, or to a jetty, whence they are loaded into ships for conveyance abroad. The different Governments use a great deal of it for naval purposes.

In the pit itself much of the small coal that is cut is thrown back with the rubbish. And only large coal is loaded and taken up.—G. F. Rundle, 6 Brookland Terrace, Caerphilly, Glamorgan.—5s.

Corporation Encouraging Art

The Glasgow Corporation Art Galleries and Museums Committee have purchased the large canvas, "Christ Mohr," an important work by D. Y. Cameron, for the city, the price being $3,000. The picture will be shown in the Royal Scottish Academy Exhibition. It represents peaks between Glen Sannot and Glen Rosa, Arran striking a note of romantic and rugged grandeur.

RUBBER BACKED FURS

By an ingenious process recently invented in England, furs can be made absolutely moth-proof by the substitution of rubber for animal tissue. The skin to be treated is stretched on a frame with the fur uppermost in a shallow receptacle, which is filled with water and put in a freezing chamber. The plate of ice is then removed and a layer is sawn from the bottom, thus removing the skin, which is thawed and sold as leather. The lower surface of the remaining plate is then melted till the fur is slightly exposed, and a coating of rubber solution, is then applied, layer by layer, until the required thickness is obtained, when the rest of the plate containing the fur is melted, and the result is a rubber-backed fur.

Thirty-two Years in Prison

At the Denbighshire, Wales, Quarter Sessions George Eckersley, fortynine, shoemaker, was found guilty of breaking and entering the house, of Mrs. Waithe, at Llangollen, and stealing articles of jewellery, etc., worth £200. The prisoner made an earnest plea for leniency, saying he had spent thirty-two years in prison, and had never had a chance to retrieve his character. He was sent to penal servitude for five years.

NOBLEMEN FOUGHT

And at a Ranch Manager And Who Were Are Involved

An extraordinary scene occurred in the Palace of Justice in Rome at the end of a week's enquiry into a duel between Count Gino Calori Cesis and Prince Pietro Pignatelli della Leonessa.

The Marquis Cassimiro Calabrini was prosecuting Count Alessandro Cesis Gamma, alleging that he was the author of a number of anonymous letters addressed to the Princess Pignatelli, which have been sent out in envelopes bearing addresses cut from the visiting cards of the Count and Countess Calabrini.

During the trial, in the course of the court of the wife of a lively scandal, Marquis Spinola, stepped up to the Marquis Calabrini and Count Negroni, two of the chief witnesses for the defence, dealt each former a blow in the face. Spinola's foes came then upon him Calabrini had held him by the arms, while the former cowardly him several terrific blows on the head with a cudgel, causing the victim to drop down unconscious.

The Spinolas next turned their attention to Count Negroni, whose skull Gino also broke. At this stage Count Noli rushed to the rescue, but was himself nearly strangled before the four aggressors could be overpowered.

A MANY FINGERED FAMILY

In the Village of Kosblavo (Grodno Government), Russia, there are over fifty peasants who have more than the usual number of fingers.

According to particulars published in the Novel Vremya, they are all descended of a peasant who married in the first half of the last century and who had extra fingers on one of his hands.

In the present generation this abnormality is reproduced to the extent of two, three, and four or even five additional fingers. Some cases simply show a thumb duplicated from the first joint.

As a result of intermarriage the deformity is spreading to neighboring villages. It dispenses the young men from military service, however sould they may be constitutionally.—Pall Mall Gazette.

PRISONER CARVED BONES

On being searched after re-arrest, the discovery was made that Joseph Dubeau, ex-convict, Montreal, was a wood carver of great ability, and had exercised his skill surreptitiously in St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary. NEGLECTED TO BURY THE CHILD'S BODY

Port Hope Man Arrested in Lindsay on Serious Charge

Chief of Police Chilton of Lindsay received a message from Chief Bond, of Port Hope, yesterday, asking him to look out for one John Sisson, and arrest him on a charge of neglecting to bury a dead body in that town.

The Chief notified Constable Thornbury to look out for the accused and it was not long before he identified him on the street and placed him under arrest.

Sisson lived in a small cottage in Port Hope, and his wife gave birth to a baby on February 28th. It was a still birth and Mrs. Sisson understood that her husband would bury the child in the backyard. He failed to do so, however, and placed the body in a back kitchen, where it was found by another tenant in a decomposed condition. Mrs. Sisson stated at the inquest that her husband had left her.

THIS ARRANGEMENT CAME INTO OPERATION ON MAY 1

Following closely upon the arrangements the Canadian Pacific Railway has made with the Austrian Government for the privilege of running observation cars upon their lines, with the same enterprise the C.P.R. simultaneously made provision for around the world tickets to be good over the Trans-Siberian Railway. The traveller taking this route has various options according to the fares paid and connection with the railway— which has never before opened its arms to any outsider can be made by the Canadian Pacific Railway's Royal Mail Transpacific Steamships at Yokohama, Kobe, Nagasaki and Shanghai, and thence by a variety of routes in connection with the Trans-Siberian. The whole time required for the entire trip from Vladivostock or Dairen to Moscow or St. Petersburg is between nine and ten days. The distance between Vladivostock and Moscow is about 5425 miles and between Vladivostock and St. Petersburg about 5,600 miles. The journey is through most interesting country. Siberia is a land of great fertility ,well wooded and watered and along the routes are many important towns and cities which are bound to attract attention of the tourist. A magnificent panorama is afforded the traveller by the delightful scenery of the great Lake Baikal, consisting of 35,000 square miles and the tunnel and loops by which the Khingan mountains are crossed possess great interest. The trains carry sleeping and dining cars in which meals are served at reasonable rates. It must not be overlooked that all travellers in Russian territory must be provided with a passport issued by his own government and bearing the signature of the Russian Consul, which has to be presented to the Russian authorities on entering and leaving Russia and when staying overnight at hotels in Russia.

This arrangement came into operation on May 1st.

DEATH FOLLOWS THE SURGEON'S KNIFE

Surgery is the fad in medical treatment, and many doctors still recommend a surgical operation for piles. Too often the results are fatal to the patient and even when the operation is a success there is not always a cure.

There is a safer way to cure piles, a less risky and less expensive way. You are certain of obtaining relief by using Dr. Chase's Ointment, and if you persist in this treatment you can also be fully cured.

It is worth while to try Dr. Chase's Ointment, even if you have been told that an operation is necessary. Many have escaped the knife by using this ointment, others have been cured by its use after operations had failed.

Relief from the itching, stinging sensations which make the suffering from piles so hard to bear is obtained almost as soon as Dr. Chase's Ointment is applied.

C. P. R. Passenger Service Through Orillia.

The latest word received by Messrs. James & Horne is that the regular passenger service of the C. P. R., over the Georgian Bay and Seaboard line, through Orillia, will commence on Monday, June 3rd. Through freight from Port McNicoll may be handled almost at once, the first grain steamer having been expected at that port on Monday; and it is possible that there may even be a local passenger train between here and Coldwater, and that excursions will be handled. But the regular service will not begin till the date mentioned. The delay is largely due to the fact that the grading of the line between Lindsay and Bethany has not yet been completed.—Orillia Packet.

DEAR SIR:

If we expect to clothe you, we have to show you that our clothes are better for the same money than you can get elsewhere, haven't we?

We believe that we can prove to you that it will be decidedly to your interests to get your next suit here. But we cannot prove it to you by merely saying so—you must see the garments in order to see the beauty of our styles. You must try on a few of our Coats in order to realize the perfection in fit. You must wear one to really know the excellence of fabric and workmanship.

And so we would be grateful to you for an opportunity to show you some of the elegant Suits now in our store. We will not urge you to buy. We expect every man to buy what his best judgment dictates to be the best for his own particular needs. We know you will like yourself in some one, at least, of the many styles we have. We know the quality of fabric, the style and workmanship is there to appeal to you as a man of good judgment, and, what is more, we know that every garment is so overwhelmingly good in every essential detail that goes to make a thoroughly satisfactory suit of clothes, that when you wear one, you are sure to come here for your next one.

Maybe you think that we claim too much for them, but we want to say right here that we have determined to make our Clothes absolutely unapproachable for the money, and we have done it. If this is a fact, you want to investigate them in justice to your own interests, don't you? Then come visiting and see for yourself. We'll leave it for you decide. We want to sell you your CLOTHING and FURNISHINGS this Spring. We know we will if you see our goods and learn our prices.

Yours very truly,

"Sylvia" Continues The Woman Suffrage Debate A Reply To Miss Roberts

(Written for The Examiner by "Sylvia")

Miss Roberts' article, "Woman's Sphere is the Home," calls for criticism. In the first place her term "anti-suffragist" is superfluous; of our sex there are only "women" and "suffragettes."

Mentioning the various places which serve as a "home, 'Miss Roberts omits the lunatic asyluf which ought to, and probably will, eventually, serve as a home for many suffragettes. The jails in England are now temporarily the homes of many such who have sought to "adapt themselves to changed conditions." Society cannot allow adaptation of conduct to such changed conditions of mind as the woman suffrage craze has shown itself capable of developing.

It is not surprising that erroneous conclusions follow arguments based upon such statements as the following:

1st, "Women and girls are forced to earn their living in numerous factories, stores, offices, etc."

Who forced them and what force was used? The scarcity of female help in homes and on farms for the past few years has been notorious. Why do not these women and girls take positions where the natural work of women has to a large extent been left undone—to the great loss of the community and the injury of women themselves. Except a small minority, women are not in any proper sense "forced" as above stated.

2nd, "The old home duties of woman have been gradually taken from her."

Who took them from her? Who shall or can hinder women from doing as much sewing, washing, baking, teaching of children, etc. ,as they are willing or able to do?

Rev. Father Vaughn in an address before the feminine audience of Loretto Abbey, Toronto, said: "There is enough work for all women to do if only they will address themselves to it. Than do nothing at all, it would be better to take in a little washing. It is not the women who work who need rest cures, but those who are worn out doing nothing and doing it badly." The statement that "woman's work has been taken from her," made by Olive Schreiner and repeated "ad nauseam" by her disciples is absurdly untrue.

3rd, "What earthly rhyme or reason is there in the idea so often brought forward that she should revive those old-fashioned womanly occupations? Why not also revive the sedan chair and stage coach as methods of travel or the candle in place of gas or electric light?"

Womanly occupations do not need to be revived. They were never discarded except by those women who wish to appear "smart," those who ignorantly think the performance of housework a mark of inferiority, and those who are too lazy to do anything useful. Experience has proved that a reasonable amount of housework is beneficial to women who do it and that they are healthier and happier than those who refuse to do it. People do not stop travelling because there are easier methods than the sedan chair and stage coach. Nor do we do without artificial light because an improvement has been made on the tallow candle. Neither do women refuse to do housework because the invention of labour-saving devices has done away with the hardest and most disagreeable parts of it. Sewing machines made sewing at home an easy matter. Bread-making and other cookery is now a simple process requiring as light a touch and delicate movements as that of piano playing. Science has taught us an interesting and simple way of canning fruits and vegetables. If we apply the knowledge now obtainable regarding hygiene, bacteriology and the value of sunlight and fresh air we may not only be healthier ourselves but raise healthier children. Laziness, ignorance and perverted notions of what is commendable or worth while in the way of womanly occupations are the real reasons why work proper to the home, is now done outside of it.

What are the advantages of having housework done at home? The cost of living is considerably reduced and people are more independent and healthier. Ready-made clothing is often poorly sewn and made of shoddy. Its use for children is an extravagance. The unwholesomeness of baker's bread is beyond argument and is a matter which legislation cannot fully control. Canned meats, fruit and vegetables are often adulterated, abused or deteriorated in factories. Any housekeeper whose taste is not vitiated can easily detect the inferiority of factory canned goods when compared with those canned at home. By buying the raw material in bulk and doing our own baking and canning we need not be uncertain about the purity of our food.

The buying of ready-made clothes and canned or baked foods places us in the power of "trusts" and robs us of our independence besides injuring our health. The example of economy and industry on the part of the housekeeper is beneficial to both children and servants.

4th, "She need no longer knit or weave, brew or bake, etc., for she can order all her supplies from Eaton's or a dozen other places."

It is true that women can, and some do, buy their supplies by using their husband's or father's money (it is not to be presumed that these women earn any themselves) but the same old mortgage remains on the home, the prospects of ever owning a home and looking forward to an independent old age or a government annuity is out of the question.

5th: "Matters of education, food, health, morals, are no longer individual concerns under direct control of each mother in her home, and cannot be properly attended to by her remaining in it."

Then what are the "individual concerns" of a mother? Surely the writer of a proposition so shockingly erroneous and so evil in tendency must have but scant knowledge either of children or of the moral obligations of motherhood.

Mr. D. H. Jones of the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, says: "And if we will only apply the knowledge gained concerning the nature of tuberculosis, typhoid fever, diphtheria, and other dread diseases to which we are liable, we can stamp them out of existence. This knowledge should be prevalent and active in every home, and who in the home should possess it if not the woman who takes care of the home? Dr. Charles H. Hodgetts in speaking on Hygiene in Infancy said: "Ignorance of parents caused the death of many children whose lives should have been saved to the state. Too many mothers give more attention to the fashionable forms of gambling than they do to the responsibilities of motherhood."

Mrs. Lair, head of the Department of Household Science in the University of Toronto, said: "An important factor in life is food, since health, the moral, and even the intellectual life depends on the diet; for there is nothing from which so much natural evil springs as from lack of proper food, and it is well known that malnutrition is at the back of most of the desire for drink. The study of house hold science deals with the sanitary condition of the house, the suitability and utility of the furnishings, teaches economy of time and strength, of fuel, of health and of food. A day's illness is a loss to the state. A million dollars a year is lost to the state of New York through typhoid fever alone, a disease which household science, rightly aplied, should prevent.

6th, "But changed conditions necessitate changed methods."

To enable women to adapt themselves to "changed conditions" the Universities, Colleges and Public Schools have added domestic science to their curricula. Of this Miss Gaird says: "It is this economic and hygienic value which demands that household science shall have a place in every well-balanced curriculum, or if to know the common things of life be prime wisdom then this study is the very centre of education and is as truly cultural as any other subject."

It is the women who apply the knowledge they have, who are really serious about the preservation of the race, not those who talk, suggest and write.

Women who have adapted themselves in a womanly way to "changed conditions," have now more time to devote to charity which is the natural outlet of their sympathy. J. M. Guyan, a recognized authority in educational matters, has said: "To women, politics would be barren and unpractised, but philanthrophy is within her reach. By the pathway of philanthropy woman must approach political economy."

To adapt ourselves to "changed conditions" as advertised by suffragettes, would defeat the very end which they pretend to aim at.

Olive Schreiner's book, "Woman and Labour," shows that she is better adapted to her old occupation—writing fiction—than trying to deal with the realties of life.

What Other Cities Are Doing

Chatham has a garbage collecting system and an incinerator. The smoke from the latter has been objected to by citizens residing near it and it will probably be moved outside the corporation. The collection of garbage has been discontinued on some streets during the wet weather owing to the bad condition of the roads. This has aroused the criticism of the Mayor and some of the aldermen. It is proposed to increase the fee charged by the collector from 25 to 35 cents a month for each house.

Woodstock's police station has not even a wash basin. The men have to go to the nearby hotels for conveniences or go without. A woman recently fainted in the police court, but there was no water on the premises with which to revive her.

Belleville's Board of Trade has a membership of 262, an increase of 174 during the past year. It will have representatives at the Imperial Congress of the Boards of Trade to be held in London, Eng., Mr. John Elliott is the president for 1912.

Chatham's assessor announces an increase in population of 873 over the figures secured by the Dominion census enumerators nine months ago. The present population is 11,333.

Chatham Council demands a 10-year guarantee on all biglithic pavements laid.

Woodstock's Industrial Commission has decided that there is not enough work for its secretary, Mr. M. C. Dickson, who was paid $1300 and has engaged Mr. M. J. Brophy, principal of the Woodstock Business College, to look after the work. Mr. Brophy receives $300 a year.

The License Commissioners of Kingston, have reduced the city's licenses from 25 to 15.

Ottawa's board of control has authorized the city engineer to prepare plans for a septic tank at Aylmer, acting in conjunction with the engineer of that village. Ottawa is interested in the proposal ,as it is thought that the sewage from Aylmer contaminates the city's water and the legislature has given authority for spending the necessary money. Com. Wilson reported that the proposal is that Ottawa should pay the cost, about $6,000, and that Aylmer should supply the site and maintain the plant.

IRISH EMIGRATION IS DISCOURAGED

"The Flower of England is Going to Australia," Declares One Authority

IMMIGRATION SITUATION

LONDON, MAY 3.—'With each returning spring the young men of Ireland renew the national tragedy,' says the Dublin Irish Times, which is most determined in its discouragement of emigration, and paints in gloomy colours the conditions awaiting new settlers in Canada. The small homesteaders and their employees, according to the journal, are completely in the hands of the machine agents, the railway and grain elevator companies, the timber merchants, and more than all others, of the small tradesmen. Many of the homesteads are mortgaged up to the hilt, and money is worth half what it is at home.

Sustained opposition of this kind is beginning to tell and is reflected in the emigration figures for 1911, which shows the movement to be the lowest average since 1851. Still it is large enough to make it a national question, seven per cent. of the total population was the record for last year.

In spite of this organized opposition it is satisfactory to note the success which has attended the operations of the Canadian government officials in what is admitted to be the most difficult field on this side. Although the majority of the settlers went as usual to America, Canada secured a goodly number; for instance, over four-fifth of the movement from Ulster went to the Dominion.

An Appeal.

An appeal is being made through the papers of the British overseas Dominions by the Naval and Military Emigration League for financial assistance, to enable them to carry on the work which they have undertaken. H. H. R. the Duke of Connaught and Strathearn is the patron on the league and also president of the Canadian branch, the president of the league being Field Marshal, the Right Hon. Earl oRberts. The objects of the league are to find openings in His Majesty's Dominion overseas for ex-service men, and to advance by way of a loan, the amount necessary for their emigration, arrangements for the repayment of the amountas advanced being made through the oversea representatives of the league. The men so assisted must be of good character, good physique, and must also show aptitude for colonial life, and be unable to find permanent employment at home.

Assisted Passage.

TORONTO, May 3.—"The flower of England is going to Australia. The increase in immigration to that country has been wonderful, and Canada will have to look out for its laurels," declared Mr. A. Newton, manager for W. W. Bell and Company, immigration specialists, of Bath Eng. "The Australian States have a uniform assisted passage rate of £6, with no obligation of repayment. Situations are guaranteed all comers,' he explained to the press representative. "Hundreds and hundreds of the best farm help would come to Canada if there was an assisted passage scheme.

"The Ontario government advances £4 towards the fare of bona fide farm labourers, conditional upon the approval of their applications."

Last week Mr. Newton brought out the largest party that ever left the west of England, comprising 120 first class farm hands.

CASCARETS SURELY STRAIGHTEN YOU OUT

No Headache, Biliousness, Upset Stomach, Lazy Liver or Constipated Bowels by Morning.

Are you keeping your bowels, liver and stomach clean, pure and fresh, with Cascarets, or merely forcing a passageway through these alimentary or drainage organs every few days, with Salts, Cathartic Pills, Castor Oil or Purgative Waters.

Stop having a bowel wash-day. Let Cascarets thoroughly cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the undigested, sour and fermenting food, and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out of the system all the decomposed waste matter and poisons in the intestines and bowels.

A Cascaret to-night will make you feel great by morning. They work while you sleep—never gripe, sicken or cause any inconvenience, and cost only 10 cents a box from your druggist. Millions of men and women take a Cascaret now and then and never have headache, Biliousness, coated tongue, Indigestion, Sour Stomach, or Constipated Bowels. Cascarets belong in every household. Children just love to take them.

BOUGHT CALGARY REAL ESTATE

But Says He Hasn't Been Able to Get the Deeds

LINDSAY, ONT., MAY 3.—Edward L. Lloyd Jones, arrested in Toronto, on information laid here by Arthur Crandell, was brought back yesterday morning and appeared before Magistrate Jackson, when L. V. O'Connor, representing the prosecution, asked for a week's adjournment.

Jones was arrested on a charge of fraud in connection with the sale of lots in Calgary, which, it is alleged, he did not own and had no interest in. He is alleged to have secured from Arthur Crandell $800 and a promissory note for $400 for two lots in what is known as the Great Northern district. Another interested purchaser is a cripple, who mortgaged his place for $700 and put the money into Calgary real estate.

Jones lived here at the Simpson House, where he had a private telephone installed, and lived in comfort. He sported an auto.

The arrest was made because Crandell alleges he could not secure title, deeds to the lots or the return of his money.

BASEBALL STORIES

First Inning

Copyright, 1909, by Hall & McClure Company.

THE midmorning Colorado sun beat down upon a rectangular little group of men on the steps of Fort Morton courthouse, upon the dusty cottonwood trees growing dolefully on each side of the road that stretched away from the little sandy square to become a few hundred yards below the main street of the slave-and-open-to-the-sun sorts of the two story brick or frame stores on each side of it. The jury had been out overnight still, although it was 10 o'clock in the morning, and given no sign. The prisoner had not yet been brought up from the county jail near by, and the group of men directly interested in the proceedings were sitting and lounging about the steps, smoking and carrying on desultory conversation. The district judge, sitting on the top step, was an eastern college man, about forty years of age, once an athlete and still with a trim, slender figure. The only touch of the western in his dress was the gray sombrero hat worn straight and firmly set upon his brown hair.

"A pretty bit of grazing land," he was saying to the sheriff as he looked out over the level prairie, dotted here and there with an adobe shack and occasional herds of cattle.

The sheriff, a brawny, blue shirted young fellow of thirty, with sandy hair and mustache, unbent his bodied legs, straightened out one of them, pushed his hand deep into the pocket of his confining trousers and yawned. His big coat was thrust back with the movement the butt of his 44 caliber "gun" might be seen. Without replying he drew out a large silver watch and studied it absently.

The small boys among the group of hangers-on in front of the steps were beguiling themselves tossing ball, and the prosecuting attorney, a young graduate from the east, who had come up from Pueblo, called out:

"Here you are, Johnnie; give us a catch!"

The small boy who had the ball grinned sheepishly and threw it at him.

"Harder, harder!" said the young lawyer cheerily. "That's no way to pitch a ball. Throw it this way." And the boy's hands were scorched as he caught the return.

"Say, kin you pitch a curve?" he asked. "Let's see you do it."

"All right," said Hardy, rising good naturedly and taking off his coat. "Here you go. Hold on," he added. "You couldn't catch it if I did. Here, Mr. Hackett, you let 'em have the ball. I'll throw you a few curves."

The others laughed at this, for Hackett, the senior counsel for the defense, (line up from Pueblo for the trial, was an enormous middle aged Hoosier, six feet two in height and weighing 250 pounds. He had a mass of crisp black hair and wore a black broadcloth frock coat and trousers, low turned down collar and ready made tie. He was slow moving and ponderous, though forceful and shrewd in his profession, deliberate of speech and anything but an athlete.

"Here, I'll catch you," exclaimed the junior counsel, Blake, a somewhat

"SUPPOSE'N HERD A HEIFER OR TWAT HE-RIFFING HEIFER," SAID THE JUDGE.

hunky, powerfully built westerner, rising and depositing his rough brown sack coat beside Hardy's.

"Gee, you've got muscle!" he added, rubbing his hands after the first pass.

"Hurry!" yelled the small boy. "That was a corker. Git on to them curves, Clarence!" he cried in worship and admiration.

"Wouldn't mind a little of that exercise myself," said the judge, rising deliberately and hastening on the boys.

"Why not have a little game while we are waiting?" said Hardy half jokingly. "Come on, sheriff."

Moved by a common impulse, the little group straightened up, threw away their cigar stubs and moved half speculatively into the sandy square. At the side of the courthouse and adjoining it was a small open field of well trodden dusty grass, where a scratch ball game was played occasionally and which house was referred during court—one of the small boys was dispatched for the ball, and the game began.

The sheriff was put in the box, Hackett behind the bat, Blake on first base, Hardy on second and the judge on third. The prosecuting attorney was put in left field, and the boys scattered over the prairie to right and center. The sheriff was a fair pitcher, but he was no match for Hardy, who had been a member of the baseball team of his college, and who had a puzzling assortment of curves and a swift ball. The first inning was a procession to the bat and back to the bench, and the second was not much better. In the third inning Hackett managed to get to first base on a scratch hit, and Blake, the junior counsel, made a home run, the ball being fumbled by several of the boys.

The judge took off his coat, and, being known to be a good batter, was given a place when he left the steps, but the reaction had worked insidiously. The trial had been a particularly exciting one, and those who had followed it were tired after the three days' strain in the ill ventilated courtroom. The sympathies of all had undoubtedly been with the prisoner, although the state had been vigorous in its prosecution and the judge had conscientiously done his duty. Murder had been committed at Jamestown Creek a few months previously, though a change of venue had been obtained to Fort Morton, the prisoner's own town. Copperthwait had always been a quiet, law abiding ranchman. He was under thirty years of age, big, broad shouldered and swarthy, diffident in manner and somewhat slow of speech, though he had been slowly and thoroughly angered in a quarrel over a bunch of cattle. Six or eight shots had been exchanged, twice one man over the other, and the dispute arose over this. Duke, the victim of the shooting, had borne a bad reputation, and the village street was usually more or less uneasy during his infrequent visits. He had killed his man and had been known to boast of it several times in Flynn's saloon. After this last quarrel he had sworn to shoot Copperthwait on sight. The quarrel had occurred in the morning. That afternoon Copperthwait had just left the Eagle hotel to mount his mustang tied to the hitching post in front when Duke happened to turn the corner.

COPPERTHWAIT CAME TO THE BAT.

"Here comes Duke!" a bystander exclaimed. Copperthwait started and caught sight of his adversary. Duke stopped short and put his hand behind him, and Copperthwait, quick as a flash, fired once and put a bullet between Duke's eyes. He had offered no resistance to arrest and now was in the rough little jail near by while the twelve good men and true deliberated in the hot back room under the tin roof of the courthouse.

"I guess my hands are a little too soft to play," said the judge good naturedly, feeling a qualm as to the appropriateness of his joining actively in the sport, "but I'll be umpire if you want me."

The two teams were quickly formed, the "Comanches" against the "Sioux." The Sioux won the toss and took the field, and the Comanches were struck out in one, two, three order. When the sides changed Hardy, the prosecuting attorney, took the box, and Blake, the junior counsel for the defense, caught him. After much urging the judge had consented to preside over first base since Mr. Hackett had positively refused to play and had been made umpire by general acclaim. As soon as his honor found himself cushion and on the field he threw himself into the battle with the greatest enthusiasm.

The runs were frequent and the errors numerous, and at the end of the third inning so many hands were sore and so many arms growing stiff that it was mutually decided to the teams to call the next inning the last. The score stood 11 runs for the Comanches (the team made up of Judge Hillier, Hardy, Blake, the keeper of the Eagle hotel and one or two other witnesses) and 9 for the Sioux, the battery of which was formed by the court clerk and the sheriff, whose heavy, long boots, extending far up inside his corduroys, detracted somewhat from any grace of movement he might have had as he lost his outfield mail and mind to the clerk's erratic curves, ably backed up by the assistant prosecutor, the stenographer and several witnesses.

At the beginning of the fourth and concluding inning the deputy sheriff had come up with the prisoner, who was not handcuffed, and they became interested onlookers. Copperthwait's nerve had been superb throughout the trial, and he seemed to take an intense interest in the game.

Just after play had commenced Hardy knocked a hot grounder to short, who fielded the ball swiftly to first base. The baseman caught it, pinning Hardy to the bag, who then quickly decided "That settles his. Look at the score!"

"No sure, old man," Hardy protested, straining to "fix his bandage."

"Well, never mind; let somebody take my place. Here, some one—you, Mulligan. Come and take the base. I've cut it."

"Guess not," said Mulligan, the dog. "I ain't played ball since"—

"Say up with the game!" cried a young athlete excitedly. "Some one, any one, take his base!"

"There, Copperthwait, play first base. We've only got to keep 'em down this inning and we'll beat 'em sure. There's one out already."

Copperthwait looked uncertainly at the faces, then at the judge, and quickly pulled off his coat and stepped to the base. His face showed clearly the prison pallor, and the warm sunlight and fresh air seemed wonderfully sweet to his spirit. Taken suddenly away from the active, vigorous life of the ranch, for seven months confined in a dreary prison, the world had seemed gradually to recede from his life. This sudden contrast of green, open field, ringing with the hearty voices of his fellow men, and the vision of the free, limitless prairie on all sides was a tragic one to the man.

"Go ahead," he said quietly. "I'll play."

The Comanches failed to make a run during the rest of the inning, and when the Sioux came in they made two runs almost at once, tying the score amid great enthusiasm.

As Copperthwait came to the bat it was evident that the psychological moment of the sport had arrived. Everything had been completely forgotten save the game, and so intense was the interest that the approach of the courthouse janitor was entirely unnoticed. He had come slowly down from the steps and after a few moments of bewildered surprise stood leaning against a tree near the catcher, watching the prisoner as he slowly moved his bat backward and forward.

"One ball!" yelled Mr. Hackett, mopping his neck with his handkerchief.

"Two balls!"

"Strike one!"

"Three balls!"

Crack!

The ball flew straight from the bat high above the right fielder's head, and Copperthwait was safe on second before the ball was fielded in.

The janitor began to grow very uneasy and edged slowly down the field toward the first baseman. The crowd yelled as Copperthwait, still pausing, edged off toward third, Hardy turned suddenly and tried to catch him napping, but in his excitement he threw a little wild, the baseman missed it, and Copperthwait reached third amid much uproar. The Sioux were all gathered now in a frantic crowd between third and home, yelling like their prototypes, and the Comanches were also noisy.

"SAFE!" YELLED THE UMPIRE.

"Go it, Copperthwait!" shouted his teammates. "Get home and you'll win the game! Steady now! Look out, look out! Don't let them catch you!"

"Now, Hardy," pleaded the judge, "for heaven's sake play ball! Don't let him make this run!"

"Steady, Hardy," said the catcher. "Watch my signs."

The janitor had crept up close to first base.

"Say, judge," he whispered to his honor, who was now dancing like an Indian and watching every move of the pitcher and Copperthwait with devouring anxiety—"say, judge, the jury has come in and is ready with the verdict."

"Oh, to h— with the jury!" snapped out the judge. "Go on with the game!"

Hardy slammed in the ball straight over the plate, the baseman batted it for a sacrifice hit, and Copperthwait, who had crept nearly halfway, rushed in and slid triumphantly to the plate on his stomach.

"Safe!" yelled the umpire, and pandemonium broke loose.

"I guess 'safe' is the word, all right," muttered the janitor to the deputy, who had hastily started for the prisoner. "I had a wink from the foreman of the jury as he came in."

KENNEDY'S OLD STAND

MINDEN MURDER

Special to The Examiner:

MINDEN, MAY 3.— Detective Reburn of Toronto is here investigating the death of Louie Porter, and it is stated that arrests may follow. It is not improbable that it may transpire that more than one person had a hand in the mysterious affair. Detective Reburn was on the ground to-day, accompanied by John Welch, local constable, who is an old resident, and thoroughly acquainted with all parties concerned in the case. There will be a sitting of the inquest to-night.

WAS REMOVED TO KINGSTON

Joseph Cross was removed to Kingston penitentiary to-day. Turnkey Ray left this morning with his man via the G.T.R. 5.20 train for Port Hope. With good behaviour, the prisoner will be liberated several months short of his five year prison term.

As announced exclusively in yesterday's Examiner, Cross was sentenced by His Honour Judge Huycke, to five years' imprisonment on a charge of having committed an unnatural offence.

PARALYZED LIMBS

To-day it is sleeplessness, headaches, digestive trouble, and irritability. Next thing you know some form of paralysis has developed. Mr. Alex. Hoosburger, 10 Moore Street, St. Catharines, Ont., writes: 'Nervous trouble developed into paralysis of the limbs so that I became helpless. Doctors failed me, but after using ten boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I returned work, and now feel better than I did for 10 years.'

CANADIAN CLUB BANQUET TO-NIGHT

Members of the Canadian Club are again reminded of to-night's banquet at the Y. M. C. A. at 8 o'clock, at which an address will be delivered by Mr. E. F. B. Johnston. This is the last meeting of the season and every member is requested to be present.

OBITUARY

MR. SAMUEL ADAMS.

The many friends in Peterborough of Mr. Samuel Adams will regret to learn of his decease, which occurred early this morning, in Edmonton, the news of which reached the relatives in this city by wire.

The deceased gentleman, who was thirty-five years of age, was born and raised in the city and was consequently, very well known. He was at one time one of the foremost hockey players of this district, having been connected with the Peterborough Hockey Club for some years before leaving the city. He left for the West some fifteen years ago, spending five years at Sault Ste Marie, and the remaining ten years at Calgary and Edmonton. His illness was of short duration and death was due to pneumonia.

The late Mr. Adams is survived by a sorrowing mother, two sisters and five brothers, namely Mrs. Burgess, Miss Maud Adams, Frank and T. H. of Peterborough, Robert of Winnipeg, William, of Snowflake, and George of Alaska.

The remains will be brought to Peterborough for interment, but the arrangements are not yet definitely decided upon.

PERSONAL AND SOCIAL

Rev. Mr. Robson of Ivanhoe, was in the city yesterday.

Mr. C. R. Banks left this morning for Oshawa on business.

Mr. W. G. Ferguson left yesterday for his cottage at Stoney Lake.

Mr. George Howson, local emigration agent, went to Belleville last evening on business. He will return on Saturday evening.

Rev. H. J. Keith has returned from St. Agatha, where Mrs. Keith is staying. Their friends will learn with pleasure that Mrs. Keith is greatly improved.

Mr. D. N. King yesterday assumed possession of the hotel on the corner formerly occupied by Mr. L. E. Killoran, and has a staff of men at work renovating and fixing it up.—Register.

Mr. R. J. G. Sutherland and Mrs. James Sutherland left yesterday afternoon for Philadelphia, Brooklyn and Boston, where they will spend a few weeks visiting friends and relatives.

Miss Bennie, head milliner at Robert Fair & Co's., returned last evening from Toronto, where she had been spending some days purchasing new summer millinery for her department.

Mrs. J. Davis, her son David and daughter Ethel, of Cattelack, Michigan, are visiting her brother, Mr. Jas. Booth, of 176 Sherbrooke street. This is her first visit to Canada since leaving here 34 years ago.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Dunning announce the engagement of their daughter, Ethel Gladys Gordon, to Mr. Frank Wallace Cox of Toronto, son of the late A. A. Cox and Mrs. Cox, formerly of Peterborough. The marriage will take place quietly early in June.

HARBINGERS OF SPRING.

A Weller street resident invaded the editorial sanctum of the Examiner to-day, armed with a small branch of a cherry tree. One section of the limb bore a cocoon in which was massed several hundred small caterpillars. Some of these had severed their home ties and were busily engaged in scouring the limb in search of food. The twig also contained a number of well-developed buds.

BISHOP O'CONNOR MET NEW CARDINAL

His Lordship Bishop O'Connor returned last evening from Ogdensburg after attending the consecration of Mgr. Joseph H. Conroy, as coadjutor bishop of the Roman Catholic diocese of Ogdensburg, embracing all northern New York. Cardinal Farley of New York, was the consecrator, assisted by Archbishops Spratt of Kingston and Gauthier of Ottawa. Twelve Bishops, partly from Canadian cities and partly from cities in New York state, 20 monsignors and 175 priests were in attendance. The sermon was preached by Bishop Hickey of Rochester. Bishop Conroy will be coadjutor to Right Rev. Henry Gabriels, second bishop of Ogdensburg, and his title will be Bishop of Arendelia, Palestine.

Bishop O'Connor had the pleasure of meeting Cardinal Farley for the first time since his elevation to the Cardinalate, although having met him on a previous occasion prior to that event.

Y. W. C. A. ANNIVERSARY.

The twenty-first anniversary of the local Y. W. C. A. will be held to-night, and promises to be of unusual interest. Miss Cullen of Toronto, will give an address on "Student Life in Paris," and there will be a musical programme and reception of reports.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

"White Caps" Show Good Form in First Practice

Manager Templin Had a Squad of Twenty Working Out Yesterday Afternoon and Big Crowd of Fans Were on Hand to Get First Look at the Peterborough Canadian Leaguers---Look Like a Classy Bunch of Real Ball Players.

With warm, summer-like sunshine streaming down, Manager Curt Templin led his squad of twenty White Caps out onto the field at Exhibition Park, yesterday afternoon, for the first real workout of the season, and for nearly three hours he kept them hard at it without a let up. Two hundred fans were on hand to get a look at the Peterborough Canadian Leaguers, and the crowd went away satisfied that Manager Templin has collected a classy bunch of real ball players. Although it was the first practice and the grounds were in no shape for fast fielding stunts, the team showed enough to convince the ball students that they will be heard from later on. Templin had three catchers and seven pitchers in uniform, the back stops being Trout, Brode and Mooney, and the heaving section Bartlett, Schaeffer, Scull, Baver, Davis, Quinlan and Cresswell. The rest out were infielders Dolan, Connolly, Templin, Tully, Hartman, Bennie and Ulmer, and Outfielders Beard, Schwartz, and Johnston.

After half an hour's preliminary warm-up, consisting of tossing the ball around and playing catch, Templin started his pitchers to work with the infielders and outfielders doing the club-swinging. Davis, Schaeffer, Scull, Bartlett, Baver and Cresswell all had their turn on the slab with Trout, Mooney and Brode alternating behind the bat, while the rest of the squad batted in turn. The twirlers were given orders not to put any "stuff" on the ball, and they obeyed instruction, but several of them cut loose with some speed. All showed good form on the slab, but until they begin to show what they have it is pretty hard to get a line on their capabilities. The word will go out to the heaving section in a day or two to put something on the ball, and then there will be a chance to see what the throwing brigade have up their sleeves. Schaeffer is the giant of the squad—a strapping big right-hander, who burned a few across yesterday that banged into the catcher's mitt like a bullet.

The batters had nearly two hours good, solid hitting, and they made the most of it. Nearly all the bunch, after they got their eye on the ball, hammered the pill hard enough to start the seams. Templin showed the way by boring them out on a line, and the others caught the infection, and stepped into the straight ones with a vengeance. Dolan, who hits from the first base side of the plate, looks an extremely promising batter. He meets the ball on the bugle and hammers them out on a line. Tully hits either side, batting right-handed against a left-handed pitcher, and reversing for a starboard side twirler. All the catchers showed good form at the bat, while Schwartz and Beard should crowd that .300 mark all season.

A fifteen-minute fielding practise was the next item on the bill-of-fare. The ground is so rough that fielding ground-balls was not only difficult, but dangerous, and the players did not take any chances. At that they showed enough to make the fans anxious to see them perform on a decent ball park. Dolan worked at first base with Templin at second, Tully and Ulmer at short, and Hartman and Bennie at third, and some lively stuff was pulled off. Tully refused to allow the bad ground to bother him, and tore in and smothered some bounders in lightning fashion. All the infielders showed good whips as did the catchers.

A great work-out was wound up with a run around the field a couple of times.

Through their work all talking after the practise was over. Charlie was there all afternoon, getting everything that came within his reach—liners, pops, and infield flys, for his boys alive. The manager himself could not throw the sphere fast enough for Charlie. No matter how fast they went down he stayed, he hung on to them. A number of old-time players noted there was a number of likely recruits on hand to watch the boys work out, and if Nichol can keep up yesterday's performances through the season he will be a wonder.

The pitchers, Elder, Zabell, Merritt and Farquharson, went through a short warming-up exercise.

Manager Bowerman was busy instructing all players in the art of how to handle the stick, light batting work being done by all.

Catchers Haggerty and Bieski are expected to report late this afternoon.

This morning's practice was light, due to the fact that the diamond is being put in first-class condition. When the work of taking off the sod is finished, Tecumseh park will be an exact reproduction of Navin park, Detroit.

White Cap Notes

Frank Dolan, the big first baseman looks like the real goods on the first corner. He is a big boy, a left-handed hitter and thrower and he covers the bag in finished style, while he promises to be the clean-up kid with the willow when his lamps get working right. He slammed the cork centre on the nose yesterday and his drives were right on a line, too. He is fast on his feet and shows class all through.

Pitcher Wm. Schaeffer is built on the Jeff Tesreau model. He has speed to burn and steamed them up in fine fashion yesterday.

Templin kept his squad on the jump all the way yesterday and chased around in lively fashion himself. He demonstrated that he has his eye on the ball by driving similers to all parts of the field.

Percy Davis, the little Philadelphia pitcher, is most promising. He it not very big, but he shapes up splendidly and is said to have a fine repertoire, including a spit-ball. The Quaker recruit also proved to be some outfielder by pulling in a number of running catches in fine style.

Pitchers Quinlan and Cresswell, the two local boys were both in uniform and Cresswell had his turn on the firing line. It was the first time out for Quinlan and he did not care to do any heaving.

If the weather is fine to-morrow, there will be a big crowd of bugs down at Exhibition Park for the practise. Manager Templin may put on a game between the Regulars and Yannigans as an attraction for the week end workout.

Babe Tully, the big shortstop, caught the eye of the fans yesterday. He is lightning fast on his feet and the way he eats up a ground ball is a treat. His whip is all to the good, too.

Earl Hartman, third base candidate, is a rangy youngster, who can whip them over to first in finished style.

In Irwin Trout, Frank Brode and Jas. Mooney, Peterborough has three splendid catchers. All three look good any way you look at them.

A basketball game between the local Y.M.C.A. team and a picked five from the White Caps is on the cards for next week. Earl Hartman is a crack professional basketball player, and Trout, Ulmer, Tully and several others of the ball tossers also play the game. Pitcher Bill Schaeffer has been elected manager of the White Caps basketball team, while First Baseman Dolan has offered his services as coach.

Joe Ulmer the Philadelphia infielder looks like a handy man to have around any ball team. He is a fast fielder, who can play any position in the infield and he hits some as well.

Bennie, the Hamilton boy, is a bear for work. He leaned into the ball in good fashion yesterday and drove one that went a mile.

Percy Johnston did some nice work in the outfield yesterday and held his own at the batting work.

Jimmy Beard and Willie Schwartz, the two Reading boys in the outfield are gingery ball players who are on their toes all the time. The fans cottoned to Beard's hitting and the veteran sure did line them out, while Schwartz also did some nice batting. The pair will give the Canuck League pitchers some lively moments.

Louis Cook has eight left-handed batters in his Ottawa bunch. The White Caps south-paw twirling section should be able to stop the port-side hitters.

Harry Scull, the young southpaw heaver is a likely looking unit on the pitching staff. He has lots of speed and good control.

Elmer Baver, the Leesport pitcher, made a good impression during his turn on the rubber. He has some weight to take off but will soon round into shape.

Connolly, who is a first base candidate, worked in the outfield yesterday and took his turn in the hitting bee.

The bright sunlight, this morning, was greeted with delight by Manager Templin and his squad of ball tossers and the bunch were out in greater numbers at the Exhibition grounds for a two-hours' workout, the time being devoted, principally, to batting practice, while the pitchers were given a chance to work. The White Caps were in good shape, after yesterday's doings. Templin will chase them around again in strenuous fashion this afternoon.

The boys are delighted with the conveniences at the Y.M.C.A. They have a dressing room to themselves, and the shower baths and swimming pool are appreciated. The squad have already become good friends and there were many fanning bees last night. They promise to pull together all the way, and already look like a happy family.

President W. H. Denham motored down to the Exhibition grounds yesterday, and watched his White Caps perform. He was delighted with the form shown by the ball players.

Pitcher John Derr, who comes to Peterborough from the Haverhill Club, is expected some time to-day. He is a southpaw and a good one. His arrival will complete the squad.

NEWS FROM THE LEAGUE CIRCUIT

PLAYERS FOR ST. THOMAS.

ST. THOMAS, MAY 2.—Albert Jacobson and George Kiefel, a pitcher and catcher, have been purchased by the local Canadian League team from the Kalamazoo club of the South Michigan league. Jacobson was the premier twirler of that circuit last year, and Kiefel caught most of the games he worked in. They will report to Manager Stewart here next Monday. The candidates already here had a good workout yesterday, and show considerable speed for so early in the season. Shortstop Gilbert Gorgue arrived in the city from Providence, R.I., last night, and says he feels fine, and is ready to jump in the work out to-day. He brought a third-sacker and a pitcher with him, who will be given trials.

NICHOL'S GOOD WORK.

LONDON, MAY 2.—Charlie Nichol's work at second yesterday afternoon set the large crowd of fans who went over to Tecumseh park to see Manager Bowerman put the boys through their work all talking after the practise was over. Charlie was there all afternoon, getting everything that came within his reach—liners, pops, and infield flys, for his boys alive. The manager himself could not throw the sphere fast enough for Charlie. No matter how fast they went down he stayed, he hung on to them. A number of old-time players noted there was a number of likely recruits on hand to watch the boys work out, and if Nichol can keep up yesterday's performances through the season he will be a wonder.

BERLIN INVADES MICHIGAN.

WINDSOR, MAY 2—Manager Geo. Deneau of the Berlin champions, had an army of ball-tossers out yesterday. There were about thirty players in action. The boys were kept right on the jump morning and afternoon. To-day Deneau and his speed boys invade Michigan for a series of games, starting with Flint. Next week practice will be resumed in Windsor, and a week from Saturday the Berlin boys will play the Windsor team. Eight members of last year's team are taking a hand in the workout. These are Manager Deneau, Pitchers Gibson and Bramwell, Thirdbaseman Bullock, Outfielders Burns, Dinsmore and Cambria, and Miller, the utility man. The last mentioned has not signed a contract and is holding out for more money. Catcher Teed arrived yesterday from Boston, and Catcher Beltz from Fulton, N.Y., was expected in camp last night.

Deneau will take about seventeen men on the Michigan barn-storming tour, and says by next week he will have each position filled in satisfactory style. Pitcher Cad Campeau with St. Thomas last year, may land a berth with Berlin. Star Mason, who played top-notch ball with Guelph last year, has been holding out, but has closed at a considerable advance over last year's salary. He is training here and looks to be in splendid condition.

Through coaches and Pullman Tourist Sleepers will be carried, fully equipped with bedding and porter in charge. Berths may be secured in sleepers at a low rate. This is an exceptional opportunity for those wishing to take advantage of the remarkably low one-way settlers' rates or round trip Homeseekers' excursions through the American cities. No change of cars. Settlers' tickets good both transportation from any Grand Trunk Agent, or write A. E. Duff, District Passenger Agent, Union Station, Toronto. d-w-M

HORTICULTURE AT BARRIE.

This year the Barrie Horticultural Society is offering ten options. During the past five years the membership of the Society has increased from 68, in 1907, to 270, in 1911. This year a membership of 400 is aimed at. Prizes are to be awarded, as usual, for window boxes, flower beds, lawns and boulevards. The annual flower show will be held in the town hall in August or September. Last year the Society paid out about 33 per cent. more than the town grant, in prizes for lawns, boulevards, window boxes and flower beds and returned to the members, in the form of premiums, more than the value of their subscription fees, besides giving generous prizes at the flower show.

THE SUMMER RESORTS

The recent desirable weather is awakening things at Sidney Lake, where several cottage owners have already appeared and are preparing for the summer season. The cottages are being cleaned and placed in order for the opening of the season, while some of them are under inspection by their owners, who are ascertaining whether any damage has been caused by the frost and ice.

At Chemong Park the season has already opened, Messrs. W. R. Harstone and J. D. Tully having taken up their residence for the summer, and there are several others who are preparing to follow suit.

Things in this direction are not yet active on the south side side, however, although the swing bridge is now in use, the "Naiad," with Captain Carson, passing through last evening.

NEW ARRIVALS

"It took us fourteen days to get here, but we landed intact, and not in pieces," remarked a likely looking new comer, to the Examiner Friday morning. In this he was backed up by three of his "mates," whom he constantly referred to for reference as to the credibility of his statements. The party sailed on the S. S. Scillian, which docked at Quebec on Wednesday night. For the past twenty-nine hours they have found refuge in a C.P.R. colonist car.

Encountered Icebergs.

They arrived in the city this morning and were quickly signed up by a number of farmers who were on hand to receive them. The spokesman of the party reports an uneventful trip. Several large ice floes were encountered, necessitating the stopping of the ship's engines for a day. But the presence of ice caused no anxiety among the passengers, who placed their confidence with the ship's officers. They avoided the course of the ill-fated Titanic by taking a more circuitous route.

Colds Most Fatal At This Season

This is the time of year when colds seem to turn into pneumonia or quick consumption and to prove more generally fatal than at any other season. With many people one cold follows another during the winter months until finally the human body becomes so run down that it can no longer resist the attack of the germs which cause lung trouble.

The best rule is to never allow a cold to get farther than the throat, and this you can do by the prompt use of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. Do not wait for chest colds and bronchitis to develop. Keep this well-known medicine at hand for use in case of emergency.

Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine loosens a cough, aids expectoration, and soothes and heals the irritated and inflamed membranes.

The Peterboro Light & Power Company's show-room will be open on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings during May, and June from 8 to 10 p. m. for the convenience of those wishing to secure gas appliances or to arrange for gas connections.

THE EFFECT OF INTEMPERANCE UPON NATIONS

A Paper Read at a Recent Meeting of St. Peter's Total Abstinence Society by W. J. Bruder, Principal of St. Peter's School.

A paper read at a recent meeting of St. Peter's Total Abstinence Society by W. J. Bruder, Principal of St. Peter's School, Peterborough.

What is true of individuals comprising a nation is equally true of a nation, as John Bright, the great English statesman, once said, and truly said, when addressing the working people of Birmingham—"Princely palaces, baronial castles, great halls, stately mansions do not make a nation. The nation in every country dwells in the cottage—in the homes of the common people." Whatever influence, therefore, for good or evil that affects the individual affects the state. If nations disobey and reject the laws of morality there is a punishment that will inevitably follow, sooner or later, just as surely as punishment follows when an individual violates one of Nature's laws.

From the remotest times nations have suffered more or less from the evils of intemperance. The inordinate use of alcoholic liquors appears to have existed even in the pre-historic times, and its origin is shrouded in mystery. Some attribute it to the Arabs. The heathen ancients regarded the god, Bacchus, as the inventor of wine; and of all things known to mortals wine is the most powerful for exciting and inflaming passions of all kinds, being indeed like a common fuel to all.

The earliest references to the debauchery of drink appears on the tombs of some of the Ancient Egyptians, which are over 5,000 years old, and on which are found numerous carvings illustrating the drink customs of those early times. An Egyptian papyrus, at least 5,400 years old, was found among the ruins of the Pyramids, on which were writings exhorting the people, in the days of pyramid-building in Egypt, to let wine alone. Grapes were cultivated abundantly in early times in the land of the Pharaohs.

The Chinese emperors and Chinese teachers from the earliest times have always taken an advanced position against the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, and whatever they may be in other respects, they now maintain a high standard in regards temperance. As an illustration of this, in the reign of Ching-Kang, about 2154 B.C., two of the Emperor's astrotomers were condemned to death for not forewarning the people as to the approach of a certain eclipse, owing to their drunkenness and disability, and as the Emperor said in his decree, "allowing the heavens to get into disorder"—they were behind the time. "Fondness of wine" is one of the five great sins according to the system of Confucius.

We find, also, that near the beginning of the Han dynasty, in B.C. 202, an edict was published in China, imposing a fine of four ounces of silver upon persons found guilty of meeting and drinking in companies of more than three members. In A.D. 1160, which was 1,362 years later, it was decreed that all officers of the government found guilty of drinking intoxicating liquors should be beheaded; and in A.D. 1279, all liquor dealers were condemned to banishment and slavery, their property confiscated, and their children handed over to the care of the state. It was from rice that the Chinese distilled their liquors.

Ancient Brahmin India presents the strange spectacle of a country led into the debasement of drink by religion long before the Christian era, and afterwards rescued therefrom by the same influence, the temperance movement beginning about the sixth century B.C., when Manu, the greatest of Hindu lawgivers, issued the following famous edict against the habit of drinking which had become the greatest abuse of the time among the people:

"With the drinker of "madhoo" let no one eat, no one join in sacrifice, no one read. With such a wretch let no one be allied in marriage. Let him be abject and excluded from all society and all social privileges; cast forth as a vagabond on the earth. Branded with indelible ignominy, he shall be deserted by his own parents, and treated with by none."

In addition, the physical penalty was incurred by the drinker that he should be made to swallow molten lead, and have the mark of a bottle branded on his forehead. These extreme prohibitory laws included the first three castes of Hindus only. The aborigines and lower classes had their own peculiar intoxicating drink which some of them use even to the present day. One of the cardinal principles of Buddhism, a religion founded by Gautama about this period, and which is now so prevalent in India, was abstinence from intoxicating liquors and such things that tend to destroy the composure of the mind.

The foundations of that wonderful civilization of Ancient Rome, that at one time was master of the then known world, were laid on a basis of hostile attitude, both legal and sentimental towards the use of intoxicating liquors, and the collapse—the ultimate decay and final downfall of that once mighty empire with its great civilization—can be directly and undeniably traced to this same cause—the abuse of intoxicants, with all the attendant immoralities that cluster round its use. The light of Rome went out in Bacchanalian revels such as the world has never seen before or since. According to Pliny there were 195 kinds of wine in use, but only about eighty kinds were examined. Distillation was entirely unknown in Rome. None of the writers of this period mention spirits, while describing wines in their minutest detail. The drink that swallowed up this mighty empire in a deluge of drunkenness was "the pure, harmless, healthful wine," that is now recommended by certain savants both in Europe and America. The lesson to be learned is, if it did this for ancient Rome, with its pomp, power, magnificence and legions of conquering armies, what would the vile produce of modern times do with civilized Christian nations if the influences for temperance were allowed to wane or to be entirely withdrawn?

Much the same story may be told about Ancient Greece, only there it was not carried to such excesses, for the greatest minds of Ancient Greece were almost unanimous in their warnings against wine. Demosthenes, the Greek philosopher, was a total abstainer. Aristophanes, however, tells us that Greek women pawned their clothes in order to procure wine, and made pass-keys to their husbands' wine cellars. Alexander the Great of Macedon, the world's greatest conqueror of early times, drank himself to death in a series of carousals about 330 B.C. Ancient Greece, the centre of philosophy, literature and art of the known world at one time, may attribute her decay and downfall in a large measure to the inordinate and excessive use of wine.

The ancient Arabs, Saracens and Turks made palm wine which was much used according to Strabo, one of their early writers, and they also possessed a knowledge of distilling but strong drink was prohibited among the soldiery. The success of the Mohammedan armies against outside tribes, and later, against the Christian Crusaders, was largely due to their temperate, disciplinary habits. The prohibition of drink among these people appears to have had a military rather than a religious basis. However, in the 5th chapter of the Koran, their sacred book, the faithful are enjoined to abstain from wine and gambling, as being the works of the evil one. The Prophet forbade the use of wine and games of chance under any circumstances whatever, and their peculiar religion becomes a kind of fanaticism among the followers of Mahomet.

If time permitted we might go on to consider Persia, the ancient Britons, the early Saxons, and other nations—barbarous, civilized, and semi-civilized—in a similar way, but enough has been said to shew that in early times the influence of drink wrought havoc among nations, and led to the decay and ruin of the greatest of them through the demoralization of their people.

Spain and Portugal are among the few nations of Europe that have remained moderately temperate, though, strange to say, in these countries and in France the vine flourishes better than in any other countries of Europe. Many societies for the active promotion of temperance, have been established in France. Railway companies promote abstinence among their employees. The use of spirits in the French army has been abolished. Of late years, however, the French, at least a great number of them, have become addicted to the use of absinthe—a concentrated, distilled liquid, that is capable of producing worse and more lasting results than any drink yet invented, and the craving for which, among certain classes of the people, amounts to almost a mania. Grave dangers threaten the spread of this habit in France.

In Russia the condition of temperance is about as deplorable as in any country of Europe at the present time. The recent escapade of a drunken Russian admiral and his officers firing on a few defenceless fishing trawlers in the North Sea, and which nearly led to international complications during the recent Russo-Japanese war, is fresh in the minds of everybody and needs no comment.

The prevalence of suicide and infant mortality so alarming in the great centres of the German Empire of late years may be traced very largely to the inordinate use of beer and spirituous liquors among the people, and recently active measures are being taken to enforce, as far as possible, abstinence from intoxicating liquors among the soldiers of the German army in order to maintain and increase that standard of efficiency among the troops, required, owing to the competition and rivalry with England, France and other first-rate powers of Europe.

It might be well now to briefly consider the decadence of intemperance and the consequent growth of abstinence among the people of England, of America, and in our own country, the welfare of which every loyal Canadian has so much at heart.

About the beginning of the Christian era we have little information about the drink practices of Britain. The Britons, however, were apt pupils, and from the Romans they became fond of wine, so as early as 61 A.D. we find the Emperor Domitian, who then ruled Britain, in order to check the growth of intemperance, ordering the destruction of half the vineyards, and commanding that no more be planted without imperial licence. Here began the battle of legislation and government regulation against the ravages of alcohol among the Anglo-Saxon people. The uses of cider and ale followed the introduction of agriculture into England when the Romans left. Other rulers reversed this decree of the Roman governor, so intemperance grew apace in England and it became a country of ale-houses. Then during the Norman period there was a revival of wine-drinking in England.

There was a constant struggle for centuries afterwards with the forces of temperance ranged on the one side and those of the liquor traffic backed up by revenues and royalty on the other, each in its turn triumphing for a brief space of time like the advancing and receding waves of the sea. During the reign of Elizabeth ale-houses and drinking clubs became the greatest pests of the kingdom, and we find the Queen, herself, sharing in the business of exporting liquors for profit. By the middle of the 18th century gin drinking became epidemic in England. Lecky, the historian, tells us that about this time the leading physicians of England declared that "in excessive gin drinking a new and terrible course of mortality had been opened for the poor, and that the grand jury of Middlesex declared that much the greater part of the poverty, the murders and the robberies of London might be traced to this single cause."

During the dark days just preceding the passing of the century, when there was revolution at home and rebellion abroad, when the richest colonies the world has ever known went apart by themselves, and when the ale-house and tavern had Britain helpless in the gutter, attempts at better things practically ceased. What little restrictive legislation there was on the statute books was in the main ignored. These were dark days indeed for the cause of temperance in England.

In the beginning of the colonization of America the vices of European debauchery were transplanted into American soil and diligently cultivated by the fathers to set the children's teeth on edge for future years.

Every ship that sailed for the New World brought an abundance of liquors, in many cases drink being the chief cargo. So we read in 1629 the ship Arabella that brought Gov. Winthrop to Massachusetts had among its supplies 42 tons of beer (a ton is equal to nearly 210 Imperial gallons), 14 tons of water, one hogshead of vinegar, two hogsheads of cider, and four pumps for water and beer—three times as much beer as water aboard for drinking purposes.

The evil flourished from the start, and the history of early temperance movements in the States is one continuous struggle against this and other social evils that followed in its wake. The American Temperance Union was formed and it was endorsed by presidents, senators, and legislators from every state against the common growing vice. From the formation of this Union in 1833 and the years following no less than eight successive presidents of the United States signed the following important document and lent their active influence and support in furthering the cause of temperance:

"Being satisfied that observation and experience as well as from medical testimony, that ardent spirit, as a drink, is not only needless but hurtful; and that entire disuse of it would tend to promote the health, virtue and the happiness of the community: We hereby express our conviction, that should the citizens of the United States, and especially all young men, discontinue the use of it, they would not only promote their own personal benefit, but the good of the country and the world.

Signed:
"James Madison,
"John Quincy Adams,
"Andrew Jackson,
"Martin Van Buren,
"John Tyler,
"James K. Polk,
"Zachary Taylor,
"Millard Fillmore."

To stem the increasing tide of intemperance in the United States what is known as the Washington movement and other kindred societies were established. The history of this particular movement is interesting. On the night of April 5th, 1840, twenty chronic drinkers sat in Chase's Tavern, on Liberty Street, in the city of Baltimore. On the same evening in another part of the city a lecture on the subject of temperance was in progress, and in a spirit of jest two of the twenty were chosen to attend the lecture and report. They returned and gave a favorable report of what they heard which led to much discussion, with the result that the debate was continued from night to night until a few days later six of the company decided to quit liquor and form themselves into a society, adopting the name, "Washingtonian" for their movement, and signed the following pledge:

"We, whose names are annexed, desirous of forming a society for our mutual benefit, and to guard against a pernicious practice which is injurious to our health, standing and families, do pledge ourselves as gentlemen, that we will not drink any spirituous or malt liquors, wine or cider."

This movement was so successful that on the first anniversary, the 5th of April, 1841, six thousand men marched in the street processions in Baltimore. To help on the good work the women formed themselves into the Martha Washington societies in the same year. John B. Gough, an able temperance reformer, also lent his assistance, while the famous Capuchian friar, Father Matthew, who had performed such wonderful work in the cause of temperance in Ireland, came across the ocean to play an important part in this great temperance revival. He arose from a bed of sickness to come to America, and his tour through the New England States was one serious of triumphs. He received the greatest honours wherever he went, and in his great meeting in Faneuil Hall, Boston, three thousand took the pledge. In all something like one hundred thousand pledges were administered in his tour of the Eastern States. After spending a year in America, he returned to Ireland broken down in health, where he soon died. But his great work lived on after him and extended even to Australia, where, in 1844, over ten thousand signed the total abstinence pledge on becoming members of the Father Matthew societies. The names of Henry Ward Beecher, General Neal Dow, Horace Greely, and others, are also prominently associated with this and other temperance movements in the United States.

The problem of intemperance in Canada has claimed attention from the very beginning of the white man's domination. The first temperance reformers in this country were the Roman Catholic clergy, and more particularly the Jesuits, whose efforts were made largely on behalf of the Indians. Their policy of prohibiting the sale of liquor to Indians was, after many lessons, generally adopted by the provinces, and is the law of the Dominion to-day. During the time of the Jesuits in Canada the

Optical Institute Talk No. 5

It Will Pay You

We frequently hear from persons far and near that they would not be without the eye-glasses which they had from the Optical Institute for several times their price. One lady remarked, I wouldn't take $50 for my glasses; another "they are worth ten times their price to me." A gentleman says "I wear mine constantly scarcely know they are on, but have perfect sight far and near. They are worth all they cost me and I want another pair in case of an accident."

The best cost a little more and require a little more time to have made up but it pays, and they are worth all you pay when they please you.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Mrs. Green's Health—Her Own Statement.

Covington, Mo.—"Your medicine has done me more good than all the doctor's medicines. At every monthly period I had to stay in bed four days because of hemorrhages, and my back was so weak I could hardly walk. I have been taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and now I can stay up and do my work. I think it is the best medicine on earth for women."—Mrs. JESSIE GREEN, Covington, Mo.

How Mrs. Cline Avoided Operation.

Brownsville, Ind.—"I can say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done me more good than anything else. One doctor said I must be operated upon for a serious female trouble and that nothing could help me but an operation.

"I had hemorrhages and at times could not get any medicine to stop them. I got in such a weak condition that I would have died if I had not got relief soon.

"Several women who had taken your Compound, told me to try it and I did and found it to be the right medicine to build up the system and overcome female troubles.

"I am now in great deal better health than I ever expected to be, so I think I ought to thank you for it."—Mrs. O. M. CLINE, S. Main St., Brownsville, Ind.

As he thought this out, not swiftly as recorded, but slowly, deliberately, piecing the bits together within his mind, blindly feeling his way to a final conclusion, the boy had sunk back upon the bed, overcome with liquor, and fallen asleep. Keith stepped over, and looked down upon him in the dim light. He could recognize something of her features in the upturned face, and his eyes softened. There was no use seeking again to arouse him; even had he been sober, he would not have talked freely. Keith lifted the dangling feet into a more comfortable position, turned the lamp lower, went out, and latched the door. Two men were tramping heavily on the stairs, and they turned into the hall at the very moment he disappeared within his own room. He still retained his grasp upon the latch, when a voice outside asked:

"What number did you say, Bill—29?"

Keith straightened up as though suddenly pricked by a knife; he could never forget that voice—it was Hawley's.

CHAPTER XIX.
A GLIMPSE AT CONSPIRACY.

Leaning against the inside of his own door, startled by the rapid sequence of events, Keith was able, from different sounds reaching him, to mentally picture most of what occurred in the next room. He heard Bill sink down into the convenient chair, and drink from the bottle, while the gambler apparently advanced toward the bed, where he stood looking down on its unconscious occupant.

"The fool is dead drunk," he declared disgustedly. "We can't do anything with him to-night."

"I say—throw bucket of water over him," hiccoughed the other genially, "allers sobers me off."

Hawley made no response, evidently finding a seat on one end of the washstand.

"Hardly worth while, Scott," he returned finally. "Perhaps I better have some understanding with Christie, anyhow, before I pump the bay any further. If we can once get her working with us, Willoughby won't have much hand in the play—we shan't need him. Thought I told you to keep sober?"

"Am sober," solemnly, "ain't had but six drinks; just nat'rly tired out."

"Oh, indeed; well, such a room as this would drive any man to drink. Did you get what I sent you here after?"

"I sure did, Bart," and Keith heard the fellow get to his feet unsteadily. "Here's the picture, an' some letters. G didn't take only what he had in the grip."

Hawley shuffled the letters over in his hands, apparently hastily reading them with some difficulty in the dim light.

"Nothing, there to give us any help," he acknowledged reluctantly, "mostly advice as far as I can see. D—— the light; a glow worm would be better." There was a pause; then he slapped his leg. "However, it's clear they live in Springfield, Missouri, and this photograph is a peach. Just look here, Bill! What did I tell you? Ain't Christie a dead ringer for this girl?"

"You bet she is, Bart," admitted the other in maudlin admiration, "only, I reckon, maybe some older."

"Well, she ought to be, accordin' to Willoughby's story, an' them papers bear him out all right, so I reckon he's told it straight—this Phyllis would be twenty-six now, and that's just about what Christie is. It wouldn't have fit better if we had made it on purpose. If the girl will only play up to the part we won't need any other evidence—her face would be enough."

Keith could hear the beating of his own heart in the silence that followed. Here was a new thought, a new understanding, a complete new turn to affairs. Christie Maclaire, then, was not Willoughby's sister Hope. The girl he rescued on the desert—the girl with the pleading brown eyes, and the soft blur of the South on her lips—was not the music hall singer. He could hardly grasp the truth at first, it antagonized so sharply with all he had previously believed. Yet, if this were true his own duty became clearer than ever; aye, and would be more willingly performed. But what did Hawley know? Did he already realize that the girl he had first met on the stage coach, and later inveigled into the desert, was Hope, and not the music hall artiste? He, of course, fully believed her to be Christie Maclaire at that time, but something might have occurred since to change that belief. Anyhow, the man was not now seeking Hope, but the other. Apparently the latter was either already here in Sheridan or expected soon. And exactly what was it the gambler desired this woman Maclaire to do? This was the important matter,—and for its solution Keith possessed merely a few hints, a few vague suggestions. She was expected to represent herself as Phyllis—Phyllis who? Some Phyllis surely whose physical resemblance to Hope must be sufficiently marked to be at once noticeable. Willoughby had evidently revealed to Hawley some hidden family secret, having money involved, no doubt, and in which the discovery of this mysterious Phyllis figured. She might, perhaps, be a sister or half sister, who had disappeared, an dremained ignorant as to any inheritance. Hope's picture shown by the boy, and reminding Hawley at once of Christie Maclaire, had been the basis of the whole plot. Exactly what the details of that plot might be Keith could not figure out, but one thing was reasonably certain—it was proposed to defraud Hope. And who in the very truth was Hope It suddenly occurred to him as a remarkably strange fact that he possessed not the slightest inkling as to the girl's name. Her brother had assumed to be called Willoughby when he enlisted in the army, and his companions continued to call him this. If he could interview the girl now for only five minutes he should be able be able probably to straighten out the whole intricate tangle. But where was she? Would she have remained until this time at Fort Larned with Kate Murphy?

There was a noise of movement in the next room. Apparently as Hawley arose carelessly from his edge of the washstand he had dislodged the glass, which fell shivering on the floor. Scott swore audibly at the loss.

"Shut up, Bill," snapped the gambler, irritated, "you've got the bottle left. I'm going; there's nothing for any of us to do now, until after I see Christie. You remain here! Do you understand?—remain here. D—— me, if that drunken fool isn't waking up."

There was a rattling of the rickety bed, and then the sound of Willoughby's voice, thick from liquor.

"Almighty glad see you, Bart—am indeed. Want money—Bill an' I both want money — can't drink without money—can't eat without money—shay, when you goin' to stake us?"

"I'll see you again in the morning, Fred," returned the other briefly. "Go on back to sleep."

"Will when I git good an' ready—go sleep, stay awake, just as I please—don't care d—— what yer do—got new frien' now."

"A new friend? Who?" Hawley spoke with aroused interest.

"Oh, he's all right—he's mighty fine fellow—come in wisout in—invitation—ol' friend my sister—called—called her Hope—you fool, Bart Hawley, think my sister Christie—Christie—damfino the name—my sister, Hope—don't want yer money—my—my new friend, he'll stake me—he knows my sister—Hope."

The gambler grasped the speaker, shaking him into some slight semblance of sobriety.

"Now, look here, Willoughby, I want the truth, and mean to have it," he insisted. "Has some one been in here while Scott was gone?"

"Sure—didn't I just tell yer?—friend o' Hope's."

"Who was he? Speak up? I want the name!"

There was a faint gurgling sound, as though the gambler's vice-like fingers were at the boy's throat; a slight struggle, and then the choked voice gasped out:

"Let up! d—— yer! He called himself Jack Keith."

The dead silence which ensued was broken only by heavy breathing. Then Scott swore, bringing his fist down with a crash on the washstand.

"That rather stumps yer, don't it, Bart? Well, it don't me. I tell yer it's just as I said from the first. It was Keith and that nigger what jumped ye in the cabin. They was hidin' there when we rode in. He just nat'rally pumped the gal, an' now he's up here trailin' you. Blame it all, it makes me laugh."

"I don't see what you see to laugh at. This Keith isn't an easy man to play with, let me tell you. He may have got on to our game."

"Oh, h——, Bart, don't lose your nerve. He can't do anything, because we've got the under holt. He's a fugitive; all we got to do is locate him, an' have him flung back inter jail—there's murder an' hoss-stealing agin him."

Hawley seemed to be thinking swiftly, while his companion took another drink.

"Well, pard, ain't that so?"

"No, that trick won't work, Scott. We could do it easily enough if we were down in Carson, where the boys would help us out. The trouble up here is that 'Wild Bill' Hickock is Marshal of Sheridan, and he and I never did hitch. Besides, Keith was one of his deputies down at Dodge two years ago—you remember when Dutch Charlie's place was cleaned out? Well, Hickock and Keith did that job all alone, and 'Wild Bill' isn't going back on that kind of a pal, is he? I can tell you we've got to fight this affair alone, and on the quiet. Maybe the fellow don't know much yet, but he's sure on the trail, or else he wouldn't have been in here talking to Willoughby. We've got to get him, Scott, somehow. Lord, man! here's a clean million dollars waiting for us in this deal, and I'm ready to fight for it. But I'm d——d sleepy, and I'm going to bed. You locate Keith to-morrow, and then, when you're sober, we'll figure out how we can get to him best; I've got to see Christie right. Good-night, Bill."

He went out into the hall and down the creaking stairs, the man he wanted so badly listening to his descending footsteps, half tempted to follow. Scott did not move, perhaps had already fallen drunkenly asleep on his chair, and finally Keith crossed the open space, and lay down. The din outside continued unabated, but the man's intense weariness overcame it all, and he fell asleep, his last conscious thought a memory of Hope.

CHAPTER XX.
HOPE GOES TO SHERIDAN.

The discovery of the locket which had fallen from about Keith's neck made it impossible for Hope to remain quietly for very long in the hotel at Fort Larned. The more carefully she thought over the story of that murder at the Cimmaron Crossing, and Keith's tale of how he had discovered and buried the mutilated bodies, the more assured she became that that was where this locket came from, and that the slain freighter must have been her own father. She never once questioned the truth of Keith's report; there was that about the man which would not permit of her doubting him. He had simply failed to mention what he removed from the bodies, supposing this would be of no special interest.

Mrs. Murphy, hoping thus to quiet the apprehensions of her charge, set herself diligently at work to discover the facts. As her house was filled with transients, including occasional visitors from Carson City and was also lounging headquarters for many of the officers from the near-by fort, she experienced no difficulty in picking up all the floating rumours. Out of these, with Irish shrewdness, she soon managed to patch together a consistent fabric of fact.

"Shure, honey, it's not so bad the way they tell it now," she explained, consolingly. "Nobody believes now it was yer father that got kilt. It was two fellers who stole his outfit, clothes an' all, an' was drivin' off wid 'em inter the sand hills. Divil a wan does know wh· kilt 'em, but there's some ugly stories travellin' about. Some says Injuns; some says the posse run 'em down; an' Black Bart in' his dirthy outfit, they swear it was Keith. Oi've got me notion. Anyhow, there's 'bout three hundred dollars, some mules, an' a lot o' valyble papers missin'."

"But if it wasn't father, where is he now?"

"That's what Oi've been tryin' ter foind out. First off he went out to the Cimmaron Crossing, gyarded by a squad o' cavalry from the fort here. Tommy Caine wint along, an' told me all about it. They dug up the bodies, but niver a thing did they find on 'em—not a paper, nor a dollar. They'd buried all roight. The ould Gineral swore loike a wild mon all the way back, Tommy said, an' the first thing he did at Carson City was to start huntin' fer 'Black Bart.' He was two days gittin' on the trail av him; then he heard the feller was gone away trapsing after a singin' or dancin' gyurl called Christie Maclaire. She was supposed to be ayther at Topeky or Sheridan. A freighter told the ould man she was at Sheridan, an' so he started there overland, hopin' ter head off 'Black Bart.' Oi reckon we could towld mor'n that.'

"What do you mean?"

"Why shure, honey, what's the use tryin' ter decave me? Didn't Jack Keith, wid his own lips, tell me ye was Christie Maclaire?"

"But I'm not! I'm not, Mrs. Murphy. I don't even know the woman. It is a strange thing; I cannot account for it—both those men mistook me for her, and—and I let them. I didn't care who the man Hawley supposed me to be, but I intended to have told Mr. Keith he was mistaken. I don't know why I didn't, only I supposed he finally understood. But I want you to believe, Mrs. Murphy—I am Hope Waite, and not Christie Maclaire."

"It's little the loss to ye not ter be her, an' Oi'm thinkin' loikely Jack Keith will be moighty well plased ter know the truth. What's 'Black Bart' so ayger ter git hold av this Maclaire gyurl fer?"

"I do not in the least know. He must have induced me to go to that place in the desert believing me to be the other woman. Yet he said nothing of any purpose; indeed, he found no opportunity."

Mrs. Murphy shook her head disparagingly.

"It was shure some divilment," she asserted, stoutly. "He'll be up to some thrick wid the poor gyurl; Oi know the loikes av him. Shure, the two av yez must look as much aloike as two payes in a pod. Loikely now, it's a twin sister ye've got?"

Hope smiled, although her eyes were misty.

"Oh, no; Fred and I were the only children; but what shall I do? What ought I to do?"

The Irish mouth of Kate Murphy set firmly, her blue eyes burning.

"It's not sthrong Oi am on advisin'," she said, shortly, "but if it was me Oi'd be fer foindin' out what all this mix-up was about. There's somethin' moighty qyare in it. It's my notion that Hawley's got hold av thim papers av yer father's. The ould gint thinks so, too, an' that's why he's hot afther him. May the divil admoire me av Oi know where this Maclaire gyurl comes in, but Oi'll bet the black divil has got her marked fer some part in the play. What would Oi do? Be goory, Oi'd go to Sheridan, an' foind the Gineral, an' till him all I knew. Maybe he could piece it together, an' guess what Hawley was up ter."

Hope was already upon her feet, her puzzled face brightening.

"Oh, that is what I wanted to do, but I was not sure it would be best. How can I get there from here?"

"Ye'd have ter take the stage back to Topeky; loikely they'd be runnin' thrains out from there on the new road. It'll be aisy fer me ter foind out from some av the lads down below."

The only equipment operating into Sheridan was a construction train, with an old battered passenger coach coupled to the rear. A squad of heavily armed infantrymen rode along as protection against possible Indian raids, but there was no crowd aboard on this special trip, as all construction work had been suspended on the line indefinitely, and most of the travel, therefore, had changed to the eastward. The coach used had a partition run through it, and as soon as the busy trainmen discovered ladies on board, they unceremoniously drove the more bibulous passengers, protesting, into the forward compartment. This left Hope in comparative peace, her remaining neighbours quiet, taciturn men, whom she looked at through the folds of her veil during the long, slow, exasperating journey, mentally guessing at their various occupations. It was an exceedingly tedious, monotonous trip, the train slackening up, and jerking forward, apparently without slightest reason; then occasionally achieving a full stop, while men, always under guard, went ahead to fix up some bit of damaged track, across which the engineer dared not advance. At each bridge spanning the numerous small streams, trainmen exammed the structure before venturing forward, and at each stop the wearied passengers grew more impatient and sarcastic, a perfect stream of fluent profanity being wafted back whenever the door between the two sections chanced to be left ajar.

MEN WOMEN LIKE

Qualities Which Appealing Persons May Attempt to Cultivate

Although women may all admire the gentleman type of male, it is a good [illegible] are few and far between, more's the pity—that they [illegible] or minister would [illegible] than they already are.

While it is quite safe to say that all women admire big men—all women—luckily for the small men—do not set the big men up on their level. Admiration and love a gulf is fixed. Little men often bridge the gulf and step in where big men dare to tread.

Every woman, at heart, admires the man who is audacious, just as every woman admires the man who can master her. To give a case in point:

A certain belle of a town in the Midlands was renowned for her conquests over the opposite sex; but she confused all her visitors, and in time obtained a certain notoriety as the maid who could not be won.

There came, one day, a new resident to the town. He was not tall, neither was he handsome, but there was the tenacity of the bulldog in the set of his jaw. He saw the maiden, and grew to know her very well, but no one could tell whether he admired her or not.

The maiden was piqued; she could not understand his manner. One day, just to test him, she told an imaginary tale of a man she was going to marry. The tale ended, and her listener arose.

"You'll not marry that man, Miss B."

"What do you mean?"

"What I say. You'll not marry that man."

"Why?"

"Because you're going to be my wife."

What followed is not known to the world at large, but the belle was won, and is, to-day, a happy woman. To the inquisitive, who wonder how Tom managed to win her, she replies:

"By sheer audacity! I just loved him for it."

Not every woman would appreciate such a masterful wooing, but, at the same time, it is not every woman who appreciates adoration and being set up as a divinity. She likes to be thought human, and not a paragon of all the virtues, therefore she admires the man who understands her weaknesses.

Applied to men and women, there is much in the scientific law, "Like repels; unlike attracts." A woman is attracted most by the man who really is manly. Although she always admires the welldressed man, she scorns the dandy. She may resent bullying, but she loves masterfulness. A milksop stands very little chance of gaining a woman worth the winning.

Just as a pretty girl attracts a mate, so a handsome man awakens a woman's interest. While most women admire the handsome Adonis, a great many prefer to marry the man with less perfect features and form. Handsome men receive so much voluntary admiration that they are taken up with conceit. If a woman desires a calm life, unruffled by jealousy, she avoids Apollo.

Generally speaking, the man with a rugged strong face has more admirers than his handsome brother with perfect features. A face with character in it appeals to every woman, and the faces with character are rarely perfect in feature.

A finely-built man with a rugged face will have very little difficulty in winning a wife. "Six feet in his socks and broad in proportion" gives a little thrill to any feminine heart, and awakens admiration.

Height, girth, figure, face, and clothes may draw a woman's admiration, but, at the same time, we must acknowledge that there are women who look below the surface ere they let their admiration grow to something deeper. Every woman admires the giant in brain and will power, but every wise woman remembers that the brain and will of the little man is sometimes more than equal to that of a son of Anak.

So, by one of Nature's compensations, the little man often enters into his kingdom of a good woman's love when the giant only draws a blank in the lucky-bag of his life's happiness. —Answers.

INVALUABLE TO EVERY FARMER

Its Wonderful Power in Curing Sick Cattle and Colicky Horses Makes "Nerviline" Worth Its Weight in Gold.

The stockman or farmer that doesn't know of the thousand and one uses of "Nerviline" around the stable has a great deal to learn. "Why, I wouldn't think of locking my stable door at night without knowing I had a supply of 'Nerviline' on hand. I always get a dozen bottles at a time from my druggist. To cure colic, indigestion, and bad stomach in a horse or cow there is no remedy on earth in the same class as 'Nerviline.' Last summer I had a $250 horse that got the scours, and I would have lost him if I hadn't been able to give him Nerviline. I poured a full bottle of Nerviline in a pint of water down his throat and saved his life. I know of neighbors who have saved many heads of valuable stock, stricken with colic, just by using Nerviline. It is equally good as a rub-on liniment, and I know from my experience that for man or beast, internally or externally, 'Nerviline' is worth a dollar a drop.—James E. McCullough, Stock Breeder, etc."

THIRTY YEARS OF DISFIGURING ECZEMA CURED

Eczema is the term know of my case. My [illegible] was considered very badly. A friend told me that I should try to get rid of it. I spent pounds in doctors' bills, and I attended several hospitals but nothing did any good.

Then one day an article in a paper recommended the Cuticura Remedies. I took his advice, and commenced to use the Cuticura Soap. To my astonishment an improvement at once set in, and my hair, which had been a complete mass of scales and scurf, soon began to look in splendid condition. Then I bought a box of Cuticura Ointment, and this cleared my skin wonderfully. In a few weeks' time all traces of the scaly eruptions had completely disappeared. Now my skin is clear and healthy, and thanks to the Cuticura Remedies I am completely cured of eczema. All my neighbours were astounded. The Cuticura Remedies are worth their weight in gold, and one tablet of Cuticura Soap goes further than four cakes of cheaper soaps. It has brought happiness into my home." (Signed) Mrs. Butler, 17, Francis Rd., The Cotterrids, King's Norton, Birmingham, Eng., July 26, 1910.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold everywhere, but those who wish to try them without charge may do so by sending to Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., 82 Columbus Ave., Boston, U. S. A., for a liberal sample of each, post-free, with 32-p. skin book.

WHERE JET COMES FROM

Long in Use for Ornaments—Mines in England and Germany

Should jet ornaments again come into fashion such a revival would furnish an illuminating example of the manner in which taste and fashions repeat themselves even after the lapse of centuries.

There was unearthed a choice specimen of Roman sculpture, which, according to experts, says the London Globe, represented a lady who lived in the cathedral city at the time of the Roman occupation, and which was considered of great historical value as representing the costume of a British female of that period. Included in the costume was a jet necklace which was obviously an indispensable item to every well dressed female.

The decline of this ancient domestic industry is to be attributed to many causes. In the latter part of the Victorian era jet ornaments went out of fashion and nowadays they are seldom worn even in times of mourning. Moreover, the industrial revolution, occasioning as it did a great remand for iron and coal, attracted the jet miners to these industries owing to the higher wages that could be obtained.

In addition jet can be obtained easily and in large quantities in Germany, Spain and France, with the result that the Whitby jet industry has dwindled into insignificance. Then the advance of science has made it possible to imitate the real jet in vulcanite or glass, though the glass imitations can generally be detected owing to their great hardness and increased weight.

In Germany jet is found in large quantities associated with amber, and as the latter is of considerable commercial value for pipes and various ornaments, jet is treated as a by-product, and is unearthed in just sufficient quantities to supply the demand.

The Prussian amber diggers term it black amber owing to its similarity to the more valuable commodity. Jet still meets with a considerable sale on the Continent, for it is fashioned into rosary beads, crucifixes and other objects of piety. Many of these objects of piety are carved with the greatest skill and are a tribute to the artistic qualities of the craftsman.

JOHN SMITH AT HOME

The good old name of John Smith does not suggest in English any great degree of aristocracy, and transferred to other languages it seems to climb the ladder, so to speak.

Thus, in Latin it is Johannes Smithus, the Italian smooths it off into Giovanni Smithi the Spaniards render it Juan Smithus, the Dutchman adopts it as Hans Schmidt, the French flatten it out into Jean Smeet and the Russian says Jonlof Smitcswald.

When John Smith gets into the tea trade in China he becomes Jovan Skimmat; if he clambers about Mount Hecla the Icelanders refer to him as Johns Smithson; if he trades among the Tuscaroras he becomes Tom Qa Smitts; in Poland he is known as Ivan Schmittiswik; should he wander among the Welsh mountains they talk of Rhon Schmidd; when he goes to Mexico he is called Jontil P'Smitti; if for classic turn he lingers among Greek ruins he turns to Ion Smitton, and in Turkey he is utterly disguised as Ben Smit.

WHY SHOULD NOT OLD PEOPLE RETAIN THEIR YOUTHFUL VIGOR

No Reason Why Men And Women Of Sixty, Seventy And Eighty Should Not Be Well—The Secret Of Happy Old Age

"Fruit-a-tives", The Famous Medicine Made Of Fresh Fruit Juices, Again Proves Its Great Value In Curing Kidney Trouble.

Old age pays the cost of living. Few men and women of fifty, sixty and seventy are free of Kidney Trouble. Hard work, mental strain and general debility, tell in the long run. And many men and women show they have Kidney Trouble by suffering with pain in the back, headaches, rheumatism, sciatica, bladder disease.

To such people "Fruit-a-tives" has proved one of the wonders of the age—and the most remarkable discovery of the century in modern medical science. This fruit medicine has performed hundreds of cures where the sufferer had been told that the case was incurable.

Take, for instance, Mr. Geo. W. Barkley, a prosperous farmer and one of the leading citizens of Dundas County, Ontario.

At seventy-six, he is the picture of health—with the vigorous actions and the sprightly step of a man of fifty.

Yet for twenty years, he suffered with Kidney Trouble. He took "Fruit-a-tives" and it cured him.

CHESTERVILLE, ONT., JAN. 25th, 1911

"For over twenty years I have been troubled with Kidney Disease, and the doctors told me they could do me no good, and said I would be a sufferer all the rest of my life. Nearly a year ago, I tried "Fruit-a-tives". I have been using them all the time since and am glad to say that I am cured. I give "Fruit-a-tives" the credit of doing what the doctors said was impossible."

GEO. W. BARKLEY.

"Fruit-a-tives" is the only medicine in the world made of fruit, and is the only one that acts directly on the kidneys. It cures. 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50 or trial size, 25c. At dealers or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

VARICOSE VEINS CURED

NO NAMES USED WITHOUT WRITTEN CONSENT.

Confined to His Home for Weeks.

"Heavy work, severe straining and over-lifting in youth brought on Varicose Veins. When I worked hard the aching pain became severe and I was often laid up for a week at a time. My physician told me an operation was my only hope. I tried several specialists, but soon learned all they wanted was my money. I commenced to look upon all doctors as little better than vultures. One day my boss asked me why I was off work so much and I told him my troubles. He advised me to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kennedy, as he had taken treatment from them himself and knew they were square and skilled. I wrote them and got from Dr. Hudgson Treatment. My progress was somewhat slow and during the first month's treatment I was somewhat discouraged. However I continued treatment for three months longer and was rewarded with a complete cure. I could only earn $18 a week in a sawmill prior before treatment, now I am earning $30 and never loose a day. I wish all sufferers knew of your valuable treatment."

ELLIS CONFESSES

He Says He Killed Louis D. Porter in Self Defence.

LIVED IN TERROR OF HIM

Brother-in-Law of Dead Man Says He Met the Trapper by the Lonely Road and a Fight Took Place in Which Porter Fired First—He Then Dragged Body and Rifle to a Hiding Place Nearby.

Minden, May 4.—Arthur A. Ellis, brother-in-law, and sworn enemy of Lew Porter, the farmer and trapper, who was shot on the lonely road at the edge of Ellis' little farm in the dusk of Thursday evening, confessed to the shooting of Porter to Provincial Detective Reburn, who arrested him at his farm on the Cameron road early yesterday morning. He repeated the confession last night.

Ellis requested permission to go into the box and tell his story at Coroner Pogue's inquest last night. The little courthouse has never seen such a crowd as packed it and overflowed in gossiping groups, who waited at the close for word from the luckier ones who had succeeded in gaining entry. He said that on Thursday evening, the night of the shooting, he noticed Porter passing his house going north on the Cameron road. The witness soon after went south along the road to look for some stray cattle, but was unable to find them. He returned to his house to get his dog and gun. After this he went north still looking for the cattle. He met Porter who was returning to his father's house, which is a little south and off the road from Ellis' farm. He asked Porter if he had seen the cattle. Porter answered, "No. Is it cattle you are looking for or is it me you want to get?" Ellis says he replied that if it was Porter he wanted he could easily have found him long before.

Ellis declared that they walked some distance together and then Porter said, "Damn you, if you want me you can get me right now." Porter turned and fired at Ellis, but the bullet went wide. Ellis raised his gun and said, "Lew, that will do," and Porter then went on down the road. Ellis said that he went on to the open land, where he had expected to find his cattle, but not finding them he started back for his house. He saw Porter coming back toward him. Ellis stepped into concealment under a tree and when Porter had passed he spoke to him. Porter wheeled about again and opened fire on him. This time the bullet barely missed his face. Ellis hid behind the trees and fired three shots, all of which took effect. He says he cannot remember whether it was two or three shots which he fired, but dropped as the last shot was discharged.

He walked cautiously to the form upon the ground and found that Porter was dead. He then grasped the body by the collar and hauled it around a road which he had used the previous winter for taking out wood, and hid it behind the upturned stump of a fallen tree. Then he hid the rifle, where it was found behind a log close to the road.

Lewis Porter, the father of the murdered man, went over his story as previously told on the spot. Edith Porter, the 14-year-old daughter of the victim, told of having met Ellis on the day after the shooting and that he wanted to talk with her, but that she would have nothing to say to him. C. Kellett, the man who found the body, told of coming down the hill behind the log, behind which it lay and finding the hidden corpse.

Constable Welch of Minden, who was with Provincial Detective Reburn, when the confession was made, confirmed Ellis' story as virtually that which he had told in his confession earlier in the day.

The inquest was adjourned till Monday night.

Detective Reburn drove to the little farm six miles from here yesterday morning. He found Ellis attending to his chores, and led him to the scene of the murder, which is on a rise of ground about 200 rods toward Minden, along the road. The officer took Ellis over every inch of the road dwelling upon the ghastly markings, which are still present, and Ellis, who appeared upon the verge of a breakdown, when interviewed by the press at this same spot, two days ago, completely collapsed.

He declared that he had been in terror of Porter for four years, ever since his wife and Porter's sister died in child birth, and from what all the Porter family had declared to be Ellis' neglect. The man was a pitiful sight as he told his story. He kept running his long, nervous fingers through his shock of curly gray sandy hair, and scraping at his unshaven chin in nervous unrest.

The burden of his secret had been too great, for as he lay in his shack, every wheel that passed on the road seemed to him to mean some one coming for him. One day he went into Kinmount, 16 miles away, to do some work, hoping to drive away the terror from his mind by companionship, but every man he met seemed to accuse him of his crime. He became possessed with a hunger to share his secret, which he could resist no longer under the questioning of the detectives. This is Ellis' story:

Reburn and Constable Welch took their prisoner to Minden. He was handcuffed and carefully guarded. He is lodged in the lock-up here, but will be taken to Lindsay after he has been arraigned before Magistrate Fielding and remanded.

When Ellis was arrested he asked permission to write a letter to his father. The following was written in his little shack at Gull Lake:

"Dear Father,—I am arrested for the shooting of Porter. I admit doing it. Of course it was self defence. Please forgive me for telling you what I did. I will be taken to Minden. I want you to pick up everything around here and rent the place to someone, as I don't expect I will get a trial till fall. Come to Minden as soon as you can and see me.

(Signed) "A. A. Ellis."

A Little Sage and Sulphur Makes Gray Hair Vanish—A Remedy for All Hair Troubles

Who does not know the value of sage and sulphur for keeping the hair dark, soft, glossy and in good condition? As a matter of fact, sulphur is a natural element of hair, and a deficiency of it in the hair is held by many scalp specialists to be connected with loss of colour and vitality of the hair. Unquestionably, there is no better remedy for hair and scalp troubles, especially premature grayness, than sage and sulphur, if properly prepared.

The Wyeth Chemical Company of New York put out an ideal preparation of this kind, called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy, in which Sage and Sulphur are combined with other valuable remedies for keeping the hair and scalp in clean, healthy condition.

If your hair is losing its colour or constantly coming out, or if you are troubled with dandruff or dry, itchy scalp, get a fifty cent bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur from your druggist, use it according to the simple directions, and see what a difference a few days' treatment will make in the appearance of your hair.

All druggists sell it, under guarantee that the money will be refunded if the remedy is not exactly as represented. Special agent, Warne Drug Co.

Woman Saved His Life.

New York, May 4.—Daniel Buckley, who was a steerage passenger on the Titanic, in his testimony yesterday before Senator William Alden Smith, who is chairman of the U. S. Senate committee which is investigating the cause of the wreck, stated that a fireman who was on the steamer told him that the Titanic did not, he believed, hit an iceberg, but that while trying to make a record the boilers burst.

Regarding treatment of steerage passengers, Buckley said that he thought they were given as good an opportunity to escape as the first and second class passengers. He got into the sixth lifeboat to leave the ship, and when an order came for men to leave the boats, he was crying. A woman, whom he thought was Mrs. John Jacob Astor, saw him, and covered him up with a shawl in order that he might escape.

Rabbi Causes Excitement at the Funeral of Titanic Victims.

TOOK AWAY TEN CORPSES

When Clergymen, Dread and Band Are Gathered at Hollies Graveyard It Is Discovered That Ten Bodies Are Missing—Fact Is Discovered by Rabbi Pastor of Jewish Flock Took Them on Own Initiative

Halifax, May 4.—A sensation was created at Fairview Cemetery yesterday afternoon when the funeral services began over the bodies of the unidentified Titanic dead. A big crowd was present, a military band was there and half a dozen clergymen were on hand to officiate in the interment exercises.

The plan for the burial was to inter the bodies in a long trench, each body numbered and a corresponding number to be placed on a slab over the graves when filled up, so that the remains could be exhumed should this be necessary in the future.

When the officials, including representatives of the White Star Line, arrived, it was found that ten bodies were missing. The interment went on, however, of the incomplete number in spite of some confusion. It developed when enquiries were made that the ten vacant graves should have been occupied by the remains of Hebrews and that the bodies had been taken away in the forenoon by the Jewish rabbi with some of the principal Hebrews of the city and had been deposited in the mortuary room of the Jewish cemetery.

The rabbi had been given nine Hebrew bodies at the morgue after his report to the registrar of deaths that he had found them to be Hebrews. This was all right, but the rabbi said he had had no opportunity of examining the other bodies at the cemetery awaiting interment which had been taken out previously to his investigation at the morgue. He therefore repaired to the cemetery, opened the coffins waiting for interment, satisfied himself that they were bodies of Hebrews and forthwith, with some assistants, had them taken to the Jewish burying ground.

Nothing was said to any of the officials about his intention, but the rabbi acted thus promptly, he says, because if he had waited the burial would have taken place and it would have been too late. The authorities' action is awaited.

The burial permit distinctly states that the interment was to be at Fairview Cemetery. The rabbi went over all the bodies at the morgue and reports that of 190 brought in by the Mackay-Bennett, 42 are Hebrews.

Of the 98 bodies still in the morgue, 43 have been claimed by friends and shipped to destination; permits for the burial of 55 unidentified have been issued and the baby boy will be buried to-day by the crew of the Mackay-Bennett.

The 98 that remain are all identified.

Brakeman Fell to His Death.

Toronto, May 4.—James H. Wray, a brakeman, living at 27 Euclid avenue, was killed by a freight train in the Grand Trunk yards just west of Bathurst street yesterday morning. Last night Coroner Dr. Hardy opened an inquest and adjourned till May 9. Wray was walking across the top of a long strip of freight cars when he slipped and fell between two cars, his body being mangled by the wheels. Wray had been a railroad man for 25 years. His wife died eight months ago. He is survived by two daughters and two sons, the latter being workmen on the railroad.

Final Settlement in Sight.

Washington, D.C., May 4.—The Canadian Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Hon. J. Douglas Hazen, and Sir Edward Morris, the Newfoundland Premier, on the one side, and Chandler Anderson, solicitor for the Department of State, on the other, are expected to confer here next week regarding the regulations to be adopted by the two Governments to carry out the award of The Hague arbitration regarding the North American fisheries.

The arbitrators left for the adjustment of the two Governments a few things involving no question of principle, but of considerable importance to the fisherman, the settlement of which must be determined by the development of facts unknown to the arbitrators at the time the decision was rendered. It is expected that next week's conference will result in a permanent settlement of the last of the issues connected with the fisheries, which have caused friction betwen the two countries for the last century.

Fifty British Financiers Coming.

Ottawa, May 4.—Arrangements have just been completed for the visit to Canada next month of some fifty representatives of the best known business and industrial firms of Great Britain. They include chairmen and directors of corporations renowned throughout the world, representing a total capitalization of approximately $200,000,000. The London Chamber of Commerce and other British Boards of Trade will also be represented in the party.

The party will arrive June 6 at Quebec and will tour Canada and become acquainted with the resources of the Dominion.

Funeral of C. M. Hays.

Montreal, May 4.—The remains of Charles M. Hays will reach Montreal on Tuesday evening or Wednesday morning next. The body has been embalmed aboard the Minia. When that steamer arrives in Halifax early Monday morning. Mr. Hays' body will be at once transferred to the special train which has been awaiting it there. Vice-President Kelly is still in Halifax and will remain there until the arrival of the Minia.

The funeral will be a private one at the wish of Mrs. Hays. It will be held either on Wednesday or Thursday.

CONVENTION CALLED

Miners Will Have Delegates Pass on the Terms.

WANT A NEW CONFERENCE

General Assembly of the Representatives of the Anthracite Workers Is Called for May 14 When the Men Will Be Urged to Reject Present Terms and Empower Officers to Confer With Bosses Again.

New York, May 4.—After being in conference for four hours yesterday, the members of the three anthracite boards issued a call for a general convention at Wilkesbarre, Pa., on May 14, to consider the tentative agreement entered into by the sub-committees representing the operators and the mine workers, and which was rejected by the full committee of the miners in joint conference with the operators here Thursday. The convention also will be urged to empower the committee of ten to enter into a second joint conference with the operators and conclude an agreement subject to ratification by a referendum vote of the mine workers.

"Negotiations have not been broken off," said William Green, who is acting for President White of the United Mine Workers, "and we have arranged for another conference with the operators after the Wilkesbarre convention. We are confident that an agreement will be reached."

Those who participated in the conferences here left for their homes last night.

The operators' committee of ten also issued a statement reiterating their conviction that the leaders of the mine workers can secure the ratification by the miners of the agreement signed after discussion and deliberation by all the members of the subcommittee, after consultation with the members of the general committees on both sides. Under the circumstances, therefore, they say, they cannot be expected to advance any further proposition in view of the great care and thoroughness with which this one was prepared and in view of the authority and standing of the mine workers' representatives who took part in its preparation.

Elk Lake Line Goes On.

Toronto, May 4.—Over 300 men are now busy on the construction of the Elk Lake branch of the T. & N. O. Railway, twelve miles of the right-of-way having been cleared already.

On the uncompleted portion of the Porcupine branch ballasting is now being done and the station buildings at Timmins are under construction. Chairman Englehart has hopes of being able to have the line open for traffic by December 1.

All along the railway from Liskeard to Cochrane settlers are flocking in and the prospects are bright for a good season's business.

NO MORE BODIES.

The Minia Is Finding Little Success In Her Search.

New York, May 4.—P. V. G. Mitchell, Halifax agent of the White Star Line, transmitted yesterday to the company here a wireless message which was received from the steamship Minia, which had been searching for bodies in the vicinity of the Titanic's ocean grave. The message, dated Thursday, follows:

"Returned to position last night during east gale and fog and searched all day; found no bodies; omitted giving you following: Joseph Finney, second-class, rubber merchant, Brown Building, Liverpool; Thomas Mullin, Badge No. 32, steward. Have searched from latitude 49.25 eastward to 49, and north from 41.20 to 41.50. No doubt some single bodies remain; no groups. As they cannot be seen more than half a mile, you will understand how difficult it is to search every square mile for them. Regret must leave Friday night, but will make another search to-morrow. Passed one body during dense fog; unable to find it afterward."

Kidnapped and Deported.

Mexico City, May 4.—The deportation from Mexico Thursday of A. Z. and Joseph Rattner, president and manager, respectively, of the Tampico News Co., and dealers in general merchandize by application of the famous Article 33, providing for the banishment of pernicious foreigners, has caused a sensation.

The Rattners, who are Russian subjects, were accused of trafficking in arms and ammunition with Zapatistas. They were taken by a subterfuge without court process of any sort, and their families and associates were ignorant for 24 hours of their whereabouts. Both men were called to police headquarters under the pretext of a business transaction, and placed under arrest, and two hours later were escorted under guard to Vera Cruz. Thursday they were placed with the utmost secrecy on board the German steamer Corcovado.

Morocco's Sultan Aggrieved.

Paris, May 4.—Mulai Hafid, the sultan of Morocco, in an interview at Fez forwarded to this city yesterday disclaimed all responsibility for the massacre of French soldiery and civilians during the revolt of the Moorish troops April 17, and insisted on his devotion to France, evidenced by the fact that he always had resisted the repeated solicitation of the Germans and Spaniards, subsequent to the incident at Agadir.

Mulai Hafid complained, however, that he had been despoiled of all authority. He never had been consulted even regarding affairs relative to his own family. He advised the French to go slow in winning over the Arabs. If they were treated with gentleness and liberality he declared they would make a marvellous efficient corps of the French army.

Chicago Newspapers Strike.

Chicago, May 4.—The differences between the pressmen and the publishers of the principal Chicago dailies yesterday assumed the aspect of a determined contest, although the prospect for a settlement was believed by some to be not distant. Limited editions of the afternoon papers were printed and carried from the newspaper offices by wagons under guard.

The newsboys' union and the wagon drivers sided with the pressmen and none of the papers appeared on the usual street stands, and great difficulty was found in delivering papers which were printed.

One afternoon paper found its motor delivery wagons unfit for service, necessary parts having been taken from the mechanism, and horse-drawn vehicles were pressed into service.

Found Remains of Sportsman.

Kingston, May 4.—Last October Bernard McColl, aged 22, drug clerk of Rochester, N.Y., was visiting at his home, Camden East, when he went out on a hunting trip and disappeared. The police scoured the country, but he could not be located. To-day his body was found in the woods near Newburg and his rifle lay at his side. It is supposed his gun was accidentally discharged. Little more than his bones remained. The rifle lay in front of the remains and was discharged. He is survived by his mother, a widow.

MOST BEAUTIFUL GRANDMOTHER

Mrs. Serena A. Minard, the most beautiful grandmother in America, is dead. This old lady who was the living exemplification of age passed away peacefully at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Titus, Southwick street, St. Thomas. Mrs. Minard was one of the few survivors of the quaint settlement of the Friends' Settlement at Sparta. A few years ago a photograph of this woman won the prize in competition with all the world as the ideal type of the grandmother. She was born in New York State in 1828 and came to Canada in 1848.

NATIONAL ANTHEMS

San Marino Has the Record for Long National Airs

The late King Edward, it will be remembered, ordered our National Anthem to be played to faster time on ceremonial occasions.

But had a like order been made by the Chinese or Japanese Governments the music would be over in a few seconds, for the Anthems of these two countries are extremely short.

The Belgian National Anthem is much longer than the French "Marseillaise," or "God Save the King," but the Russian consists of only sixteen bars.

There are twenty-eight bars in the American "Hail Columbia," while the Siamese people require seventy-six to proclaim their loyalty.

The record length for National Anthems is held by the State of San Marino, in Italy, which has ninety-seven bars.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE KING

East End Jews Have Erected a Fountain in Memory of Edward VII.

In memory of King Edward the Jewish community in the East End of London have erected a fountain in the Whitechapel road. The fountain is surmounted by a bronze figure of Peace, and on either side are figures of Liberty and Justice. Facing the London Hospital is a plaque bearing a portrait of the late King, and the inscription on the opposite side reads: "In grateful and loyal memory of Edward VII., Rex et Imperator. Erected from subscriptions raised by Jewish inhabitants of East London." The fountain cost over $40,000.

The Hon. Charles Rothschild in unveiling the fountain, said that many of the Jews of East London were aliens, and the reason they came to the more hospitable land of England was to try a change of fortune. One could not but feel that they received in England a toleration and a kindness far in excess of that for which they hoped. Under these circumstances it was not surprising that the Jews of London should wish to show some small token of their appreciation of the ruler under whom their lot had been so much improved.

A SHINING EXAMPLE

"He must forever shed lustre on our young nation," says Hon. James Young, biographer, in giving his impression of the late Hon. Edward Blake. He adds:

"I have known a considerable number of distinguished statesmen and other eminent and other men, and so far as my judgment goes Mr. Blake possessed at once the most powerful, most acute, and most cultivated intellect of any person I ever had the pleasure to meet. He was the soul of honor. He would never even overstate the argument against an opponent, but this rather strengthened his supremacy as the most powerful and effective parliamentary debater heard within the ornate walls of our Canadian House of Commons. He was popular both in the House and in the country, won many supporters wherever he addressed the people, was a constructive statesman of a very high order. That he did not accomplish all that he had intended in his heart to do for Canada, gives a touch of pathos to Mr. Blake's life and career. But he did enough to prove himself the greatest of all native Canadians and his remarkable gifts as a jurist, a statesman, and a patriot, coupled with all the graces of a Christian gentleman, must forever shed lustre on our young and furnish a shining example for the youth of Canada to admire and to follow."

STATESMEN LIVE LONG BUT POETS DIE YOUNG

Painters, Authors and Men of Science Also Likely to Reach Old Age

The British Medical Journal has good news for those who are "of superior brain power" if they desire long life. It points out that it might naturally be supposed that superior brain power would not be conducive to long life, as the possessors thereof have to "bear the strain of an intense intellectual life," to which is often added "the unhygienic condition of a sedentary existence." But it seems that intellectuals on the whole have a high expectancy of life.

"The longevity of statesmen," says the paper, "has been so remarkable that during the last half century or so it has been said with truth that the world is governed by old men. For the poet it has been said that the fatal age is 37. This seems to be founded on nothing more solid than the fact that Byron and Burns died at that age. Leopardi died at 39 Shelley at 29, and Keats at 25. Shakespeare died at 52, but his creative life had ceased some years before. Goethe on the other hand, lived to 83 in the full possession of his faculties. He was a man of powerful physique, and though he ate and drank and did other things in anything but moderation, and in fact was supposed to be doomed to an early death in his youth, he continued eating and drinking and high thinking almost to the end.

"Victor Hugo died at 83, yet poets as a class are not long lived. In them generally intense exercise of the imagination alternates with periods of inaction, and these have too often been passed in excesses which tend to undermine the constitution.

"On the other hand painters are long lived, as pointed out by Hazlitt in a well known essay. Michael Angelo was 92, Titian 99, and there are many other instances. Men of science too, whose life is spent, to use Newton's phrase, in 'intending' their minds on problems in the solution of which disturbing influences are deliberately put aside, have a high average of longevity. They are to a large extent free from the baleful emotivity which is a frequent accompaniment of creative genius. They are not the slaves of passions which wear out the body as the sword does a scabbard.

"If an 'intellectual' enters on life with a weakly constitution he is more likely to take care of his health than a man whose only aim is to get as much enjoyment as he can. But apart from this, the man with a powerful brain is likely to have a corresponding vitality in his other organs. He is in fact better equipped than his fellows for the race of life. But a fine cerebral organization may coexist with lack of staying power. Hence success is largely a matter of survival, the strong outliving possible rivals.

"Men of great intellect, if they start in life with a good family history, are more likely to live long than the common run of men only as far as their way of life keeps them out of the sordid struggle for a livelihood that beset most people. There is an element of truth in the cynical saying that a bad heart and a good digestion constitute the secret of long life."

GROANS WERE HEARD

A well-known German, who is something of a wag, walked into one of the public offices in Cincinnati the other day, and from the noise it was plain that he was wearing a pair of new shoes, or ones that had recently been repaired.

One of the clerks remarked about the shoes, and the German said:—

"I comes pretty near selling dese shoes the other day."

"How was that?" asked the clerk.

"I had 'em half-soled," said the German, as he walked out of the office.

BOON TO THE BALDHEADED

The bald-headed are likely to take an interest in what the Budapest papers describe as the sensational invention of Dr. Szekely.

The doctor recently explained to the Society of Hungarian Physicians his method of implanting hair in a bald scalp. He ties together an extremely thin gold wire and sterilized hair, implanting the latter by means of a thin injection syringe in the scalp where it is fixed with small hooks of gold wire. He states that in this painless way he can implant 300 to 500 hairs per hour. Of course the hair will not grow, and the transplantation only produces a new kind of wig.

Dr. Szekely presented to his colleagues three men wearing these wigs, which could not be distinguished from natural hair.

RADWAY'S READY RELIEF

RHEUMATISM, SCIATICA

Strong Testimony of Emigrant Commissioner the Hon. George Starr, as to the Power of Radway's Ready Relief in a Case of Sciatic Rheumatism.

Van Rees Place, New York.
Dr. Radway—With me your Ready Relief has worked wonders. For the last three years I have had frequent and severe attacks, sometimes extending from hardage regions to my ankles, and at times to both lower limbs. During the time I have been afflicted I have tried almost all the remedies recommended by wise men and fools, hoping to find relief, but all proved to be failures.
I have tried various kinds of baths, manipulation, outward application of liniments too numerous to mention, and prescriptions of the most eminent physicians, all of which failed to give me relief.
Last September, at the request of a friend (who had been afflicted as myself), I was induced to try your remedy. I was then suffering fearfully with one of my old terms. To my surprise and delight the first application gave me ease, after bathing and rubbing the parts affected, leaving the limbs, in a warm glow created by the Ready Relief. In a short time the pain passed entirely away. Although I have slight personal attacks, approaching a change of weather, I know now how to cure myself and feel quite master of the situation. Radway's Ready Relief is my friend. I never travel without a bottle in my valise. Yours truly,
GEORGE STARR.

CHAIN CABLES.

Severe Tests to Which They Are Subjected Before Being Used.

One weak link in a cable may mean the loss of a great ship worth a million pounds or more, so before being used every link of the great chain cables used in the navy or merchant service is carefully tested. The apparatus employed is a most ingenious one.

The cable or link is a sort of long vessel, open and being fastened to an enormous steel machine, which is passed round a revolving drum, the other attached to a hydraulic ram.

The machinery is worked from an adjoining building, so the being shielded in the cable shed while the testing is in progress. If a chain does break under the terrific strain to which it is subjected it simply smashes everything near it and may bring the whole roof down.

The operator in the next room has before him an ordinary looking pair of scales, but the small weights which he places upon it represent as many tons as they actually weigh pounds.

While the weights go into the scales a loud creaking and groaning is heard through the thick partition as the seventy-eight foot length of cable, which is the amount tested at one time, stretches under the enormous pressure. A new cable stretches about two inches, an old one a good deal more.

The ordinary cable of steel, two and one-eighth inches in diameter, is subjected to a pull of over eighty tons.—London Answers.

MARK TWAIN'S TRAMP.

And His Quaint Introduction in the Enterprise Office.

"It was the afternoon of a hot, dusty August day in 1862," says Albert Bigelow Paine in Harper's, "when a worn, travel stained pilgrim drifted laggingly into the office of the Territorial Enterprise, then in its new building on C street, and, loosening a heavy roll of blankets from his shoulders, dropped wearily into a chair.

"He wore a rusty slouch hat, no coat, a faded blue flannel shirt and a navy revolver. His trousers were hanging on his boot tops. A tangle of reddish brown hair fell on his shoulders, and a mass of tawny beard, dingy with alkali dust, dropped halfway to his waist.

"Aurora lay 130 miles from Virginia City—hard, hilly miles. He had walked that distance, carrying his heavy load. Editor Goodman was absent at the moment, but the other proprietor, Dennis E. McCarthy, signified that the caller might state his errand. The wanderer regarded him with a faraway look and said absently and with leisurely reflection:

"'My starboard leg seems to be unshipped. I'd like about a hundred yards of line. I think I am falling to pieces.' Then he added: 'I want to see Mr. Bunstow or Mr. Goodman. My name is Clemens, and I've come to write for the paper.'"

Leap Years.

Leap Year, it has been complained by some one, seems to have been named on the same principle as the "Meeting of the Waters" at Killarney, which is a place where two streams do not meet, but part. A leap year ought to be a year in which we jump over a day—a 364 day year. One explanation is that all the days after Feb. 29 jump forward one day in the week more than usual. The Romans used to call it a "bissextile year," and the French still do so.

DOCTORS ADVISE MEDICATED AIR

It Cures Catarrh, Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma, Throat Troubles, Hoarseness.

For diseases of the lungs, throat and nasal passages mountain air has always been deemed salutary because of its pureness and freedom from disease germs. The air of pine forests, laden with minute particles of volatile germ-destroying principles, has enjoyed an almost unexampled reputation in these diseases also.

A MARVELLOUS DISCOVERY.

After years of exhaustive study a chemist devised a means of supplying right at home a healing balsamic remedy that is even more effective in catarrhal diseases than the air of the pine woods. Of course, this remedy was copyrighted in every civilized country and was at once offered to the public under the name of "Catarrhozone." Its success has been phenomenal.

Just think of it! A healing, soothing substance capable of destroying those noxious organisms which excite and maintain disease. Capable, also, of allaying congestion and of stimulating the healing processes of nature, which are combined in that invaluable compound so well and so favorably known to the medical world as "Catarrhozone."

CATARRHOZONE CURES.

Catarrhozone is simply the concentrated qualities of the air of pine woods. If you breathe it you will derive more benefit in one hour than you could possibly get from the woods in a year.

This great advantage arises from the fact that, in addition to those healing emanations from pine, other ingredients distilled from the vegetable kingdom are so united as to give results that could not possibly be derived in the simple form in which nature supplies medicated air.

20,000 PHYSICIANS ENDORSE IT.

For all diseases of the nose, ear, throat, bronchial tubes and air passages—for catarrh in every form—cure is certain with Catarrhozone, which is not a nostrum, but a high-class scientific treatment. Large size, sufficient for two months' use (guaranteed), price $1.00, smaller size 50c, at all dealers or the Catarrhozone Company, Kingston, Ont.

RUNNING AMOK.

A Simple Par Murder That Is Peculiar to Oriental Countries.

The expression "run amuck" is the Anglicized form of a term used in some parts of the orient to describe a form of homicidal mania, accompanied by a frenzied plunge in any and every direction. In the countries where the malady originated the word applied to it was "amuk." The corrupted form of it is now applied in a score of ways—without much warrant.

In Malacca, Siam, Java and adjacent regions the mental state which causes amok is well defined and much dreaded. It is attributed almost invariably to excessive drinking of stimulants. The victim first turns morose, generally remaining in this state for several days. Then he is suddenly seized with the mania for slaughter and starts out to run amuk with the first weapon he can reach.

Extra precautions against these mad ravages are taken in some of the more civilized places, especially Batavia. There the police are armed with what is called a catch fork. The instant the victim of amok starts on his mad dash he finds himself hooked by a strong iron fork and held firmly the length of this odd human spear. He can harm himself, but that is the limit of his insane power.—Exchange.

AN ERRATIC VOLCANO.

Rose From the Sea, Formed an Island and Sank Again.

On June 16, 1810, the Nisnings, a British sloop of war, observed smoke arising from the sea near St. Michael, off the Azores, and made for it, believing that a naval engagement was in progress. Her crew found, however, that great tongues of flame were issuing along with the smoke and that they had closed for action as right as could be.

Forty-eight hours later an island made its appearance, having risen from a depth of forty fathoms in that period, and in another day it was fifty-one feet above the surface, with a length of about three-quarters of a mile. By July 4 the Sabrina's people were able to land on this new shore, which was then 300 feet high, with a circumference of fully a mile, with a stream six yards wide running from the center to the sea.

They took formal possession of it for his Britannic majesty, hoisting the union jack on its most conspicuous point, but by degrees the island sank until about the middle of October it vanished below the surface, with the union jack still on it, like a battleship sinking with colors flying after a fatal engagement.—London Standard.

A Letter of Importance.

The letter P is the most important in the alphabet because it leads all others in perfection. It is likewise first in peace and prosperity and gives to pleasure its proper form. It is found in every enterprise and aspiration, and without its valuable offices our stanchest anchor of hope would be but a commonplace hoe. Is importance it is decidedly the dominating letter. It has no place in history, but is foremost in philosophy and gives power to the pen. While always first in provocation, it likewise leads in pardon and possesses great power in persuasion. It is rich in the emotions and virtues. Patriotism, passion, patience, pity and poetry acknowledge it as their very own. No point or picture or port was ever made without it. It leads all others in power, permanency and preciousness. Purpose has no meaning without it, and pyramids are built upon its base. —Galaxy.

Staining Glass.

The art of coloring glass has been lost and refound, guarded and stolen many times during the history of civilization that it seems almost impossible to say anything new on glass staining. Yet a modern process for making the stained glass used in windows is a departure from anything known to the old timers. The glass first receives its design in mineral colors, and the whole is then fired in a heat so intense that the coloring matter and the glass are indissolubly fused. The most attractive feature of this method is that the surface acquires a peculiar pebbled character to the heat, so that when the glass is in place the lights are beautifully soft and mellow. —New York Herald.

Drew the Line.

"Madam," began the man respectfully, "I am very hungry. Could you give me a bit of something?"

"I will call the dog," the woman replied.

"I am hungry enough to eat the dog," the man said, "but I'd rather have something else."

And, woman like, she went inside and banged the door.—Buffalo Express.

HIS SERIOUS REWARDER.

Had a Lifetime of Solitary Confinement in Russian Prisons.

A few weeks ago N. Morosoff, a Russian author and scientist of brilliant achievement, was put on trial for a little volume of poems published in 1909, which, it seems, didn't quite meet with the approval of the authorities. He was condemned to imprisonment in a fortress for one year. Now, to Ibsen, there is nothing very startling in that. To spend a year or so in a gloomy prison is a rather common experience in Russia, especially so far as poor poet persons who are not afraid to say what they think are concerned. But the case of N. Morosoff is quite exceptional, even in Russia, for this man, famed throughout the world of science as the author of important researches in chemistry and physics, has been rewarded by a grateful Government by half a lifetime in solitary confinement. Here is, briefly, the story of his life.

The son of a wealthy land owner, at 20 Nicholas Morosoff, while a student at the University of Moscow, was arrested on a charge of spreading socialistic ideas among the peasants, and was kept in solitary confinement for three years before his trial. In the end he was made one of the defendants in the famous "trial of 193" political offenders, but was released after the trial. In January, 1881, he was again arrested because of his literary activity and condemned to penal servitude for life. He was at first confined in a solitary cell of the ill-famed fortress of SS. Peter and Paul. Four years later he was transferred to the "stone sacks" of the terrible Schlusselburg fortress, where he was kept for another 21 years.

Many times during that long period Morosoff nearly became the victim of a deadly disease, and was on the brink of madness, but his indomitable spirit overcame his physical weakness. His extraordinary kindness and courtesy gained him the hearts even of his jailers, who called him "the marquis."

From the very first years of his confinement Morosoff had set his mind to the solution of various scientific questions. During the last decade of his imprisonment he was allowed the use of paper and pencil, and provided with scientific books. Then this prisoner, his body emaciated and feeble, but his brain still vigorous, his intellect burning, began day after day, with amazing and pathetic perseverance, to think out and set down on paper his hypotheses and reasonings, to make endless calculations for the preparation of tables and schemes.

"The greater part of his life was already behind him," writes Mme. Vera Figner, another of the Schlusselburg prisoners, "and before him was nothing but blank hopelessness and a nameless grave in a little plot near the walls of the fortress, where lay his friends, once, like himself, full of mental energy and strength, but cut off by consumption and scurvy. And yet how he worked! He never ceased to think and write, animated by the undying hope that his ideas would some day see the light."

At the end of 1905, when the general strike had for a moment held the Russian autocracy under its heel, Morosoff, with the few other Schlusselburg prisoners who were still alive, was set free. He was then 51 years of age.

Of these he had passed 22 years—more than half his life—in solitary confinement. Yet, with unbroken spirit, this feeble man, made prematurely old, threw himself into the world of science, to which he was so passionately devoted, and issued a series of scientific researches in chemistry and physics, and other works, including the little volume of poems for which he has been again sent to prison.

Why Hens Don't Lay in Winter.

I have found it very difficult to make people understand that a hen cannot make eggs and feather at the same time. She can lay while she is shedding her feathers, because there is then no drain on her system for any other purpose. But when the new coat of feathers is started she quits, simply because she cannot do double duty—make feathers and eggs at the same time. When people learn this fact they will not expect eggs from a hen that is growing a coat of feathers. And then they may also learn how to manage their hatching and feeding so as to get eggs in the late fall and winter, when they want them badly.—Farm and Fireside.

Conversational Strategy.

"I observe that you never contradict any theory that Mr. Heftybrane advances."

"Yes," replied Miss Cayenne; "he's likely to get through talking much sooner if you don't break in and suggest new topics."—Washington Star.

Fur Animals in Russia.

The annual total of animals killed for fur throughout the Russian empire is about 20,000,000, of which squirrels represent 13,000,000, hares 3,000,000 and marmots 1,000,000. There are 300,000 ermines and 40,000 blue foxes.

The Widow's Might.

"I hear you are engaged to marry the lovely widow, Mrs. Squirt"

"It's true."

"Let me congratulate you. Why, I hadn't any idea you were thinking of matrimony."

"Neither had I."

Tempests.

Science attributes tempests to a general internal movement of detached masses of aerial projectiles, which traverse the general mass of the atmosphere like the discharge from a mitrailleuse.

A WONDERFUL REMEDY

Orange Lily is daily curing the most obstinate cases of Female Disorders, Falling of the Womb, Leucorrhoea, Painful and Suppressed Menstruation, etc., etc., are all of them relieved from the start by its use, and a few weeks' or months' treatment accomplishes a complete cure. This remedy is a positive, scientific preparation, and is based on the discoveries of Pasteur and Lister. It is an applied treatment; that is, it is not taken internally, but is applied direct to the suffering parts, and it, therefore, acts with all the certainty of the known laws of chemical action. As it comes in direct contact with the diseased tissue, by contact kills it and prevents further spreading of the disease. Many ladies receive from 5 to 10 letters daily, speaking of the benefit they are receiving, and we ask every sufferer to write for it. Price, $1 per box, which is sufficient for one months' treatment. Address, Mrs. FRANCES E. CURRAN, WINDSOR, Ont.

PIONEER DAYS IN THE TOWNSHIP OF DOURO

Written for the Examiner (By Roy Gilray)

The first settlers in Douro arrived in the autumn of 1822—a date prior to the survey of the township, which was made the following year. The enterprising men who, with their families, thus dared the perils of the bush, were the Hon. Thomas Alexander Stewart and Robert Reid, both of whom not only triumphed over the difficulties of the situation, but in after years looked their toils rewarded by wealth and affluence.

Both were created Justices of the Peace, and filled many other important offices of trust and emolument in the settlement and amid the community they were the first to found. Indeed, so high was the estimation in which Mr. Stewart was held, both for his personal qualities and the services he had rendered by example and influence, in furthering the interests of the country, by the promotion of actual settlement, that in the year 1838 he was elevated to a seat in the Legislative Council of Canada by appointment of the Crown—a position he continued to fill until his death in September, 1847.

These gentlemen, on leaving Ireland, were furnished with letters to the Governor of the Province, by whom land was assigned to them in Douro, then a wilderness, and, as already stated, not even surveyed. Mr. Stewart received a grant of 1,900 and Mr. Reid of 2,000 acres, on condition of actual settlement and the performance of settlement duties—terms, at the time, sufficiently arduous and trying even for the stoutest hearts and the bravest spirits. They also received permission to hold the entire township for a period of five years, with a view to promoting its settlement by their friends, acquaintances, or others who might be induced to emigrate and settle in so remote a situation—a right which they cheerfully and patriotically relinkuished at the request of the Hon. Peter Robinson, in 1825, on his arrival at Peterborough with the immigrants under his charge.

We cannot better portray the difficulties and privations, as well as the heroism incident to the settlement of the township of Douro, at the period referred to, than by quoting the following touching narrative of the personal experiences of the wife of one of the first settlers:

"On the first day of June, 1822, we sailed from Quebec, accompanied by my brother-in-law and his family, which consisted of his wife, six daughters and three sons. We came up the St. Lawrence from Lachine in batteaux, which was a very tedious mode of travelling. We reached Toronto (then called York) in August, and were detained there several weeks by illness. Meantime my husband and brother-in-law procured a grant of land in Douro, and started to see it.

"About the first of October we came to Cobourg, then a very small village. From thence, my brother-in-law, with some hired men, proceeded direct to Douro, to make an opening in the woods; my husband being prevented by illness from accompanying them. Two clearings were commenced about a mile from the boundary of the township of Otonabee.

"Early in November my sister-in-law and her children joined her husband in the backwoods. They took a large scow, or flat-bottomed boat, from Rice Lake, and on the second evening reached Little Lake. They landed on a point of land near where Ashburnham is situated, and from thence proceeded to their shanty, about three miles from the landing.

"My husband, myself, and three little children, with a maid-servant and a boy, were to come up on the return of the boat; but we were detained at Cobourg by the illness of one of our children, and therefore were but few settlers in these township; and on he second day we were obliged to wait for sleighing, to perform the journey by land through the townships of Hope, Cavan and Monaghan. At that time there were but few settlers in these townships; and on the second day we travelled nine or ten miles without seeing a house or clearing. At last we reached "Scott's Mill," on the 13th of February, 1823, at 1 p.m.

"The Little Lake not being safe for teams to cross on the ice, we were obliged to walk over, our children and luggage being carried by our servants and some men who kindly assisted. The snow was then about two feet deep. Our ox-team and sleigh were in waiting on the other side, but by the time we had all reached the place daylight began to fail, which made our progress through the woods much more difficult; and the sleigh being added, I was obliged to walk. Our lanterns, unfortunately, got filled with snow, and our candle so we it would not light. So we proceeded slowly, and at last perceived a light before us and soon reached our log house. The light proceeded from a large wood fire, which rejoiced our hearts.

We found our house in a very unfinished state; the door had not been hung, nor were there any partitions made. A large opening was left in the roof where the chimney was to have gone up, but the intense frost had stopped the masonwork when about half completed. Finding this rather cooled us, and we felt puzzled where to lay our sleeping children, as the floor was coated with a thick layer of ice and mortar. However, we soon discovered some shavings left by the shingle-makers, which we spread on the ice, and laid on our mattresses, and on these made a temporary 'shade-down' on which we cheerfully lay down, after a supper of tea, bread, butter, and pork. Being very weary we slept soundly, but in the morning on looking up I saw the stars through the aperture left for the chimney.

"At this time, my brother-in-law and his family lived in an open shanty about half a mile north of us, and from having their fire outside, they were much annoyed by the smoke and sparks blowing in, which at night often set fire to their bedding.

"By slow degrees these difficulties were surmounted; but we found new ones arising from the want of roads, or some means of conveying our provisions from Cobourg, which was the nearest town. Mr. Bethune was the only storekeeper there, and was also postmaster. We sent to him when a fresh supply of provisions or other necessaries was required, and these were forwarded to us by way of Rice Lake, which proved a very tedious and expensive mode of conveyance, and the delay of our supplies sometimes drove us to most painful straits. In the autumn a sufficient store had to be procured in this way to last for five months, as our winters at that time set in about the end of October and seldom terminated until the middle or end of April. At one time before we had any shoemakers near us, we sent an order to Cobourg for boots and shoes, for both families, numbering about twenty persons of all ages, and after waiting a long time for them we learned that they had been lost in crossing Rice Lake, and could not be recovered. This was a serious loss, as they could not be replaced for some months, and in the meantime many were obliged to go barefooted.

Pea soup and pork was our principal food. Our bread was good when we could get good flour, or when the yeast was not frozen. Very often we had only rye meal, which was not disagreeable; but one season, not being able to procure flour or meal of any kind we were obliged to use boiled wheat and corn, and were once reduced to bran cakes, which soon disagreed with us.

As our first spring in the backwoods advanced I was delighted with the beauty and novelty of the scene around us. Our clearing was opened to the river, which in those days rushed along with great rapidity and noise, carrying down large masses of ice from the lakes and waters above us. Since then the numerous dams have marred the natural beauty of the river; while the fine hemlocks and cedars which grew so beautifully along the bank were since cut down and have disappeared.

"In the autumn of our first year in Douro our youngest child, a sweet little girl of not quite two years, was seized with dysentery. I was quite ignorant of the treatment of that disease, and there was no doctor within reach—the nearest being Dr. Hutchinson, who then resided in Cavan, a good many miles distant. We had as yet no canoes on the river, and were often depending on the chance visit of the Indians for a passage to the other side. One of our hired men, a faithful Highlander, seeing how very ill our darling was, volunteered to swim across the rapid stream and walk through the woods to the doctor, promising that if I wrote the particulars he would bring the necessary medicine. He started early in the morning of a cold October day, and returned about midnight with some powders and a message that the doctor would come up on the following day. But no improvement followed, and the day was passed in great anxiety, for the doctor did not arrive. On the third day he came, having left home at the promised time, but got lost in the woods, and hence the delay. The next day she appeared more lively, but refused to take the arrowroot and sage which I offered her. She asked for bread, and of this we had none that was fit to give her, having for some time been unable to procure good flour. It was a bitter trial not to have what she seemed to crave. The next day she fell into a stupor, and towards midnight her angel spirit passed away to the immortal land. A few weeks after this sad event, she was replaced by another dear little daughter—the first white child born in Douro.

Ague did not make its appearance for some years. Between 1823 and 1825, when the Hon. Peter Robinson arrived with a large immigration, we had many hardships and privations to endure, partly from a want of knowledge of the proper way of managing, and partly from the heavy expense incurred on our first starting, by the exorbitant charges, and the high price of every kind of provisions and clothing, besides the great difficulty of procuring even the most necessary articles. But after the establishment of Peterborough, all these difficulties gradually disappeared, and have now nearly faded from my memory."

(To be concluded.)

Constipation Bad Breath Headache

When the bowels are constipated and you have stomach trouble and headache, try Dr. Hamilton's Pills; they are so mild you can scarcely feel their action, yet so effective that the entire secretory apparatus is stimulated to healthy action.

DR. HAMILTON'S PILLS CURE QUICKLY

Thus writes Mrs. D. P. Fowler, from Yarmouth: "I used to feel drowsy and heavy, my color was shallow, and there was usually a bad taste in my mouth. I had vague pains all through my limbs, and an annoying headach as well.

"After one dose of Dr. Hamilton's Pills there was a sudden change. I felt better, my appetite increased, and that exhaustion and depression gradually left me. Life seemed brighter and happier after I used Dr. Hamilton's Pills, so I strongly recommend such a good medicine."

Dr. Hamilton's Pills you certainly need; then why not get them now, and enjoy the abundant good health they are sure to bring you? Price, 25c per box, or five boxes for $1.00. At all dealers.

Facts About McClary's "Sunshine" Furnace

—The Understudy of the Sun—

The Fire-pot of the "Sunshine" is made of Semi-Steel—that of the ordinary furnace is made of Cast Iron. Here's the difference — Destructive sulphur fumes penetrate Grey Iron easily because it is porous. Semi-steel is not porous—it is a close-grained material with a smooth surface secretly processed by McClary's. Gas fumes cannot penetrate Semi-Steel therefore it lasts longer. The "Sunshine" Fire-pot is built in two sections joined together with our famous cup joint. The shape of this joint, combined with a layer of McClary's asbestos cement, makes it absolutely gas, smoke and dust-proof.

Clearly, the "Sunshine" is the premier furnace as far as the Fire-pot is concerned.

The Grates of the "Sunshine" Furnace have three sides each. Plainly, they have three times the endurance of one-sided grates. Every time you rock down the ashes of the "Sunshine" you can expose a fresh side of the grate to the fierce heat of the fire—lengthen the life of the grates.

And the short, strong teeth of "Sunshine" grates simply grind up clinkers. The "Sunshine" Furnace is the best as far as grate construction goes.

Shaking an ordinary furnace is hard, back-breaking labor. You don't need to shake the "Sunshine"—you simply rock it and the ashes drop into the ash-pan. A child can easily rock the grates of a "Sunshine" — merely another reason why you should buy a "Sunshine" Furnace.

Ordinary furnaces are called coal gluttons. There may be good reasons for that—we don't know. But—we have built the "Sunshine" Furnace so that it is very easy on coal. Hundreds of people now using the "Sunshine," and having used ordinary furnaces, declare that the "Sunshine" makes two tons of coal do the work of three. Evidently, the "Sunshine" Furnace saves coal and money.

The ordinary furnace has a water-pan hidden somewhere about the base. There, it cannot carry out the purpose for which the water-pan was devised. The water-pan of the "Sunshine" Furnace is placed scientifically above the radiator near the dome—the heat laps up the water, before being diffused all over the house. It contains the same amount of moisture as the air of a balmy June day. Plainly, as far as the water-pan is concerned, the "Sunshine" is the furnace you should buy.

There are many more reasons why you should invest your money in "The Understudy of the Sun"—McClary's "Sunshine" Furnace. Call on the McClary agent and ask him to show you all the mechanical reasons and exclusive devices which go to make the "Sunshine" the best and therefore the cheapest furnace you can buy. Write us at our nearest address if you cannot get in touch with him.

STRAW HATS MAKE THEIR APPEARANCE

It was a juvenile summer day today, a circumstance which prompted a couple of nervy individuals to don straw hats and promenade the main streets of the city.

The first panama hat of the season was among the two—beautifully cleaned up, with a brand new band. The owner had safely navigated the "Brooklyn bridge" in East City, when a gust of wind—all hats look alike to the wind—lifted that headpiece and it aviated heavenward for a distance of fifty feet. Little boys scrambled, then men sprinted, fat men puffed and grunted and swore softly, as politely as could be expected, all madly in pursuit of that hat, which by this time was cartwheeling merrily along the banks of the Otonabee. "I'll get it for you, mister," cried one accommodating youth, and get it he did. The hat stopped quicker than the boy, with the result that his feet went straight through the crown and so perished the premature harbinger of hot weather.

"I had been given up to die by three of our best doctors,

I could not stand it to be on my feet and I was so swelled in the abdomen I could hardly breathe.

But thanks to Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy and Nervine I am able to be about the streets, a walking advertisement of the curative qualities of your remedies, although I am 70 years old."

JOHN R. COCHRAN,
Lewistown, Ill.

Better than any statement we could make regarding the value of

Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy

are these words of Mr. Cochran. He speaks from experience, the highest possible source of knowledge. If you have any of the signs of a weak heart, such as pain in the left shoulder or arm, fainting and hungry spells, shortness of breath, smothering spells, fluttering or palpitation of the heart, you need which for over twenty years has been recognized as the best preparation of its kind to be had.

Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy

Sold under a guarantee assuring the return of the price of the first bottle if it fails to benefit. AT ALL DRUGGISTS.

INTEMPERANCE

HE days went by pleasantly for the situation was kept well in hand, and brandy sellers received but little comfort. Selling to the Indians was an offence which was not tolerated by the followers of Loyola. General regulations were made against drunkenness among both natives and whites. In the summer of 1648, at Sillery, occurred what was probably the first temperance meeting on American soil. The speech was delivered by a converted Algonquin chief. He addressed the braves, proclaimed an edict against drunkenness, and exhorted his people to abstain from all intoxicating liquors. The fight against selling brandy to the natives was carried on under the direction of Laval, first Bishop of Quebec. It is a well-known historical fact that this strenuous opposition of Bishop Laval to the liquor traffic led to a quarrel with Frontenac, the Governor, who was finally recalled to France. An equal interest in the welfare of the white population, as regards temperance, did not arise until well into the nineteenth century.

In the early pioneer days in Canada liquor played a prominent part at the social gatherings and public functions both in Acadia and in the United Canadas, and even in comparatively recent years the older inhabitants will relate numerous circumstances where carousals and dissipation reigned supreme, even in our own province, to the great disadvantage of the well-being and prosperity of the community. To counteract and discourage this influence prohibitive legislation has been enacted from time to time, but this method is not always entirely successful. The trouble seems to be that it is difficult to legislate to ensure permanent sobriety among the different elements of any community. The very fact of anything being forbidden will stimulate in the minds of certain element a desire to break the law. And so it has been from the earliest times.

The Dominion Alliance for the "Total Suppression of the Liquor Traffic," was formed in 1876. In Ontario and Quebec we have had the Dunkin Act, and we have had the Canada Temperance Act, better known as the Scott Act. Many able advocates of temperance reform have interested themselves in this laudable work, while fraternal societies and women's associations have given valuable aid. More recently the Local Option Law is being tried out in our own province with perhaps varying degrees of success.

There appears to be a divergence of opinion as to the best means of promoting a successful temperance movement among the people of any province or country—a condition of freedom from drink that will be permanent. The best plan would appear to be not alone moral suasion but a continual persistent campaign of education in which those three great factors — the home, the church and the school—would mutually co-operate in creating an atmosphere of temperance, the influence of which would be contagious, the effects of which would eventually become permanent, and which in due course of time would very materially contribute to the happiness and prosperity of our fair Dominion.

Boy Was Identified.

Toronto, May 4.—Coroner Dr. Pickering opened an inquest last night into the death of John Whitehouse, the ten-year-old boy who was killed on the Brock avenue crossing Thursday night. No evidence was taken and the enquiry was adjourned till May 16. John Whitehouse was the son of a stoker in the Toronto Glass Works and lived at 150 Brock avenue. The mutilated body of the boy remained in the morgue for twelve hours before being identified by the father.

Club Licenses Deemed, Too.

Ottawa, May 4.—"The impression that seems to have become prevalent that our policy does not include the wiping out of club licenses, is wrong."

Such was the statement of N. W. Rowell, who was in Ottawa yesterday.

Mr. Rowell stated that while club licenses were not expressly mentioned in the first clause of his resolution, it was the party's intention to wipe them out under its second clause.

TAFT IS MENTIONED.

One Report Says He Is Chosen to Succeed Hays.

London, May 4.—Sir Thomas Tait yesterday was chosen president of the Grand Trunk Railway, to succeed Charles M. Hays, who was lost in the Titanic disaster, says a story current here today.

The officials of the line, however, vigorously deny the report and say that it is utterly without basis.

Sir Thomas is well known. He was formerly connected with both Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and is one of the foremost authorities on railroads in Great Britain.

Sir Thomas James Tait, son of Dr. Melbourne Tait, was born in Melbourne, Que., July 4, 1864. He received a high school and McGill University education and in 1880 entered the railway service. He was first a clerk in the audit office of the G.T.R. at Montreal, and in July, 1881, became clerk in the office of the assistant to the president of the Chicago and G.T. Railway. He was next clerk in the solicitor's office at Belleville, was then clerk in the general manager's office, and then from October, 1883, till September, 1886, was private secretary to the vice-president and general manager of the C.P.R. For the next six months he was clerk in the general traffic manager's office, and in May, 1887, became assistant superintendent of the C.P.R. at Moose Jaw.

From Feb. 1, 1889, until March 19, 1890, he was superintendent of the Ontario division, with headquarters at Toronto, and for the next three years was general superintendent of the Ontario and Quebec divisions. For four years he was manager of transportation of all C.P.R. lines, when he resigned in 1903 to become chairman of the Victorian railways commission at Melbourne, Australia, from which post he resigned in September, 1910. He was knighted in 1911. In Australia he brought the almost bankrupt state railways to a paying basis.

Both Linemen May Recover.

Kingston, May 4.—Although suffering from a fractured skull from a fall Clarence Hays is still alive, and the doctors say he has a chance of recovery. He alighted on his head.

Peter Currier, a Toronto man, is doing well. He had two ribs broken in his fall off a pole. Hays come here recently from Napanee.

Boys Smoking Caused Fire.

Berlin, Ont., May 4.—Two boys smoking in a barn were responsible for a $2,500 fire at St. Clement's on Thursday night. The lads were in the village hotel barns, up in the hay loft having a smoke. The fire spread to the Catholic Foresters Hall, and at one time the whole village was threatened.

MARKET REPORTS.

Girl Driven to Suicide.

Brantford, May 4.—Death by suicide under mental excitement was the verdict rendered by the coroner's jury at the inquest into the death of Lottie Gibson, whose body was recovered from the Holmedale mill race on Saturday last.

It was shown that the girl's frenzied determination to end her life was caused by the threatening contents of a letter which she received, the sender of which is alleged to have been Reginald Robbins. The letter referred to the girl's rejection of the writer and his intention to get even.

Overheard 'Phone Conversation.

Calgary, Alta., May 4.—Because he alleges that he overheard a conversation not intended for his ears, that was being conducted over the telephone, J. B. Royal, a builder's supply man of this city, has instituted proceedings against Edwin J. Albert and T. E. McCauley, contending that they were parties to a conspiracy to monopolize the builders' supply business.

Fielding and Borden Silent.

London, May 4.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Hon. W. S. Fielding, who sailed for Canada yesterday, refused to be drawn out regarding the Roosevelt-Taft disclosures and wouldn't "discuss the subject from any viewpoint."

Sir Frederick Borden said: "Anything I could say wouldn't alter the situation or alter the argument of Canadians. It is obvious Taft was trying to persuade Roosevelt to his view. Taft is a politician and a very deep one. I think he is doing his utmost to carry his point."

To Canadian Investors

It has been our custom, no matter where the mining camps are being made, to present to investors complete information on them. It was because of this we were pioneers in the field in interesting American investors in the wonderful camps of Cobalt, Porcupine and other Canadian districts. Ore zones know none of the imaginary lines dividing countries from one another, and mining investments should be on the same basis.

American investors are reaping and have reaped big profits from the two premier precious metal camps in the country, Tonopahs (Silver) and Goldfield (Gold), and it is our purpose, solely that Canadian investors may enjoy the same privilege, to offer to them, without charge, an opportunity to become acquainted with these camps, the various properties and securities. To this end we have prepared, at great expense,

Coloured Maps

Of these two districts. Each map is about 19 x 13 inches, nine square miles being shown in the Tonopahs map, and twenty square miles by the Goldfield map.

We have supplemented these maps with complete information on sixty eight of the leading Goldfield and Tonopahs companies, showing capitalization, par value of shares, officers and directors, dividends paid and current rate, number and names of claims owned, acreage, etc. In addition there is a short description of each district.

The stocks of the properties in these camps are rated among the best dividend payers as well as the most promising mines-in-the-making in the country.

These maps and the data concerning the various companies will be SENT FREE ON REQUEST.

WOMAN SET FREE.

Imprisonment That Aroused Feeling Is Revoked.

Toronto, May 4.—After three days spent in jail, Mrs. Lillian Murphy, the widow with four children who was sentenced to two weeks in jail by Judge Winchester for the theft of five dollars, was released yesterday.

Detective Finch, who had furnished the crown with the information, was placed in the witness box. According to his story the version given at the time the woman was sentenced was not quite correct.

He stated that Mrs. Sturgeon of Carleton place, who was waiting to take a train from the C.P.R. Royce avenue station, had placed her chatelaine bag, containing a five-dollar bill, over the back of a chair and, forgetting it for the moment, rushed out to see if the train was coming. When she returned it was gone.

Mrs. Murphy, who was employed as a matron at the station, on being accused, broke down and admitted taking it. She had apparently repented her act as soon as committed, as she had torn the five-dollar bill into little pieces and threw them in the waste paper basket, being afraid to return it.

In discharging Mrs. Murphy, Judge Winchester said: "I am doing this because I am informed your health is bad and for the sake of your children. I am acting somewhat beyond my jurisdiction, but I think the circumstances justify me."

CANADIAN CLUB'S OFFICERS

The meeting of the Canadian Club in the Y.M.C.A. assembly hall, on Friday night, as arranged by the executive, was a distinct disappointment to the members through the unavoidable absence of Mr. E. F. B. Johnston of Toronto, who was detained by an accident on the C. P. R., near Pontypool. When it became evident that he would be unable to arrive in Peterborough, in time for the meeting, Mr. Johnston transferred to the west bound express and returned to Toronto.

The meeting, however, was not unfruitful. The chairman, Mr. W. R. Morris, called upon a number of the members for their opinion concerning a number of questions of general interest to the club, thinking that Mr. Johnston might arrive before it was too late. And it was in this respect that the keen disappointment was, to a certain extent, forgotten, and the discussion entered into by the members effected a success that was entirely unexpected.

The officers for 1912, as recommended by the nominating committee in its report, that was adopted, are as follows:

President—Mr. W. R. Morris.
1st Vice-Pres.—Mr. G. C. Wainwright.
2nd Vice-Pres.—Mr. D. Walker.
Sec.-Treas.—Mr. W. H. Munro.
Executive Com. — Judge Huycke, Rev. F. J. Sawers, Messrs. A. Stretton, A. J. Grant, Basil Hall, Keith Lech, Claude Rogers, A. Mowatt, W. H. Dunsford.
Executive ex-officio — Mears. F. D. Kerr, H. R. H. Kenner, O. O'Connal, Dr. Cameron and E. L. Goodwill.

A vote of thanks was tendered the Y.M.C.A. for the use of the Assembly Hall, on the motion of Dr. Cameron, seconded by Mr. F. D. Kerr.

Want More Young Men.

Dr. Cameron stated that it was the wish of the Executive that more of the city's young men become members.

Mr. Kerr supported this idea and remarked that while the meetings were sometimes a disappointment in respect to attendance, the apparent intelligence of the members should be a source of gratification to the Club.

Mr. J. W. Bennet stated that as a member of the Y.M.C.A. directorate he would convey the thanks of the Club to the Board, and in the future he hoped that the opportunity would be presented of holding some of the meetings at the Y.M.C.A., or at least as stated intervals. "I hope that the Canadian Club will be maintined here and that it will continue to give us a freer thought and interest in Canadian life and politics".

In regard to the proposed celebration by Canadian Clubs throughout Canada of Dominion Day, Mr. G. C. Wainwright stated that a communication had been received from the President of the associate Canadian Clubs in regard to the proposal. Last year the Club had presented patriotic buttons to the school children on the last day of the school year and the significance of Dominion Day was brought before them in a special manner.

History Prizes Effectual.

"The prizes presented for Canadian History by the Club," Mr. A. Mowat said, "have had a good effect. They have created an impetus in the study of Canadian history among the school children. The prizes have had a more lasting effect than the buttons."

Champlain's Visit.

On the suggestion of Mr. Morris, Dr. Cameron spoke upon a proposal which he has favoured, namely, the commemoration of the fact that Champlain was the first white man to visit Peterborough. One of the duties of Canadian Clubs is to commemorate important events and personages in Canadian history. We have got into communication with the people who have the original documents, and as far as any evidence we have there is no question as to Champlain's visit to the site of this city. We have practically determined that he was here in September, 1615. In Ottawa, they are erecting a memorial to commemorate his visit to that place. Our idea is to erect a tablet in a public place, possibly in the Public Library. As the years slip by the important facts of our history are gradually forgotten, but by this means the important fact of Champlain's visit, the visit of the first white man, to Peterborough, would be kept fresh in the memory.

Sheriff Hall considered that this was a fact to be commemorated, and it made but little difference as to the exactness of the date of Champlain's arrival.

Mr. Morris stated that the proposal would be considered by the executive.

Celebration of Empire Day.

Mr. F. D. Kerr stated that a matter

C. P. R. MONTREAL EXPRESS MET WITH BAD ACCIDENT

Struck a Spread Rail a Few Miles West of Pontypool and Cars Left Track. Baggage Car Went Down the Embankment and Men Had Narrow Escape---Track Was Torn up.

The C.P.R. west-bound express, leaving Peterborough at 4.28 was wrecked by the spreading of, or a broken rail, two or three miles west of Pontypool, yesterday evening. Two baggage cars, with the post office car, went down the embankment and while three of the passenger cars left the tracks, no one was seriously injured. The baggage man, Roy Maybee, of Montreal, who was in the baggage car, was the only person who was at all inconvenienced and his injuries are confined only to a few cuts and bruises about the legs. He was taken to St. Michael's Hospital. It was, however, a miraculous escape, considering the twisted condition of the rails and the overturning of the several cars.

The passengers in the second class car, which fell partly over the embankment, were forced to leave by the windows.

The local "Y'd" at Burketon and ran backwards to the wreck, taking the west-bound passengers, while an engine coming from Havelock took the passengers from the local to Peterborough, where they arrived exactly at ten o'clock, none the worse for their experience.

The auxiliary was quickly upon the spot and in the space of a few hours the track was cleared. The cars and the track were damaged, but not extensively.

NEWSPAPER STRIKE ON IN CHICAGO

Special to The Examiner:

CHICAGO, ILL., MAY 4.—All the stereotypers on the Chicago papers joined the striking pressmen, and drivers this morning, and newspaper publications here are practically tied up. Some of the newspapers did not appear at all this morning, though most of the turned out in a greatly condensed form. This evening's papers will have similar trouble getting out. The publishers claim that the employees have grossly broken their agreement, and are bringing men from other cities. There was some shooting on Dearborn street this morning, when the waggons of one paper drove along. Several arrests were made.

A TRIP TO BERMUDA

The Rev. H. M. Manning will deliver a lecture on his recent trip to Bermuda, in Mark St. Church, on Monday, May 6th., at 8 o'clock. The lecture is to be given under the auspices of the Epworth Leagueand Choir. Light refreshments will be served.

FUNERAL OF JOHN JACOB ASTOR

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, N.Y., MAY 4.—Impressive funeral services were held at Rhinecliffe, the Hudson River home of Astors, in connection with the funeral of John Jacob Astor, a victim of the Titanic disaster. Mrs. Madeline Force-Astor was able to attend. Miss Muriel Astor and Vincent Astor, children by the annulled marriage, was there. Mrs. Ava Willing-Astor, the divorced wife, was not present.

OPTIONS RECEIVED

Rose Bushes, Shrubs etc., Will be Distributed to Horticultural Society Members

The Rose Bushes, Shrubs, etc., for distribution among the members of the Peterborough Horticultural Society have been received from The Connon Floral Company of Hamilton and will be delivered at once. The stock received is exceptionally good, and to insure satisfactory results, members should plant their allotment as soon after it is delivered, as possible. Those members receiving Option No. 2, Bedding Plants, will not receive same until it is time to plant same directly in the ground.

A SUFFRAGETTE DEMONSTRATION

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YOR, MAY 4.—The weather man provided a warm sun and a cloudless sky to-day for the biggest woman's suffrage demonstration in the history of New York city. Fifteen thousand people were in line, including a baby carriage brigade. The men marchers, three thousand strong, were disappointed to learn that Colonel Roosevelt had declined an invitation to lead their division. He was away in Maryland.

MILLINERY

Our latest shipment of high-grade Millinery for summer wear has arrived and is now ready for your inspection at the Peterboro Millinery Parlours. Mrs. W.B. Armstrong, 435 George Street. Upstairs in old T. A. S. Rooms. 2d-105

USING PUNTS

Because C. P. R. Bridge is Closed to Pedestrians—Examiner Reporter a Trespasser.

ONE MAN GAVE WRONG NAME

If chance or design takes you to the vicinity of the Wolfe St. Wharf, you may observe on the opposite side of the river a number of punts, most of them new, by which employees of the Peterborough Lumber Company's mill cross the river to and from their work.

These punts are new and painted red, so you will scarcely miss seeing them. Stay around until the day's work is over and you will see employees of the mill climb down the bank and into the punts and row across to the west shore, where the punts are locked up until the next morning.

The only alternative would be to walk around by Hunter street, and that is out of the question. To cross the C. P. R. bridge is to run the risk of being arrested for trespass, as an Examiner reporter realized yesterday afternoon, when he was held up by Mr. R. Pinchin at the west end of the bridge.

"Your name, please," was the salute of the C.P.R. representative.

"How do you do, Mr. Pinchin?"

"How do you do? You know me, I see."

"I was rather expecting that you might be in this neighbourhood."

The reporter had to give his name and address, but not before putting a special plea.

"I came over here to find out whether people were still trespassing on the bridge in spite of recent arrests.

Mr. Pinchin had taken the name of a young man only a few minutes before, and while speaking to the reporter another young business man was reminded that trespassing was not allowed, and he turned back.

A Young Man's Bluff.

One of those whose names were taken was a young man who gave his name as William Jones. He assured Mr. Pinchin that this was his right name.

"Well, if you are going up home I will take a little trip up with you, for that's my neighbourhood," said Mr. Pinchin.

"I guess you've got me this time, my name is ——" and the young man gave his right name and address. He lives in the south end of the city, and will likely be handed a summons before he is many days older.

"The Company is determined to stamp out trespassing on this bridge" Mr. Pinchin stated to the reporter. "It seems too bad that workmen have to walk around by Hunter St., but there you are. I can only do my part. We do not want to have people arrested, but if they continue to use this bridge they certainly will find themselves in trouble. The people should know, by this time, that the Company is opposed to trespassing here, and they might as well make up their minds to find some other way of getting over the river."

The reporter told Mr. Pinchin that there was no use taking out a summons in his case for the police would not serve it."

"They wouldn't, eh?" I think they would jump at the chance. However, we will give your case consideration, but you are likely to hear from us."

A FREE TRIAL THAT MEANS SOMETHING

Most of the "Free Offers" that appear in advertisements do not pan out very well. There is usually some string attached or some conditions to be complied with that amount to a good price for all you get. A notable exception, however, is the offer made by Mrs. F. E. Currah, of Windsor, Ont., as stated on page 7 in her ad. entitled, "Proving by Actual Experiment." She sends, absolutely free, a box of Orange Lily, an expensive, concentrated remedy, put up in pure gelatine capsules, which is sufficient for 10 days' treatment, and which is worth 35 cents. Miss Currah finds it pays to do this, for the reason that being a strictly scientific preparation, its good effects are noticeable from the start, and almost all who give it a trial continue its use until completely cured.

VIOLATED THE PURE FOOD ACT

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN, GERMANY, MAY 4.—A druggist named Scharmagh, convicted of violations of the pure food law, in supplying the inmates of the National Workhouse poisonous food, causing nearly one hundred deaths, was sent to prison for five years, to-day. There were other minor sentences.

One Hundred Girls at Work at the Time—Twelve or Fifteen Persons Killed and Many Injured

TORONTO, ONT., MAY 4.— From five to fifteen people were injured, and it is feared fatally so, when the wall of Neilsen's ice cream factory here gave way this morning, while business was in full swing. Nearly one hundred people, mostly girls, were in the building when the crash came, but in the confusinon and noise it was impossible for sometime to ascertain the casualities.

At noon the body of Miss Eva Anderson had been recovered badly crushed, from under the heavy beams. It is feared there are others dead in the same spot. Hundreds of relatives of the missing girls are at the scene, and the police have difficulty in handling them. Searchers are working to recover more bodies.

The scene of the accident presents a weird scene. Scores of factory girls are seated on lawns recovering from their harrowing experience the houses of all the neighbours have been thrown open to them and everything possible is being done for those who fainted.

At 11.30 workers found the feet of two men and a girl sticking out of the debris. They at once started to work frantically to get at them. Who they are is unknown. From their position it is feared that they are killed. A few minutes later the rescuers were attracted by the means of another woman and frantic efforts were then made to get her out alive. She was badly hemmed in by girders and a mass of debris, and it is feared that she will not live.

One report says that at least ten persons are dead and buried in the ruins. At noon the body of Louis Shine was taken out of the wreckage. He was dead.

A tiwelve fifteen, police say that everybody in Neilson's candy factory has been accounted for and that the total casualities are: Two dead, eight seriously injured and fifteen slightly. It is not decided yet whether the accidant was caused by an explosion or defective building. Many were partially buried in the ruins, being rescued just in time.

FINE IMPOSED FOR VIOLATION OF THE LIQUOR LICENSE ACT

Two Charges Recorded Against a Bridgenorth Resident---Miscellany of the Police Court This Morning---Vagarants Before the Magistrate.

"We were going as far as Lindsay to work on a C. P R. construction outfit, when we got as far as Peterborough, and our money gave out." Thus pleaded Harry McLaughlin, who together with his companion, Sheridan by name, faced a charge of vagrancy.

"These two men have been trawelling together, and we believe they are the two men who have been annoying residents in the south end of the city. There is no reason why able bodied men like these two should be out of work at this season of the year," explained the Chief.

"You are discharged, and get out of town as quick as you can," came from the Court.

"Thank you sir! thank you sir!" said McLaughlin fervently, as he stepped out of the dock.

DISCHARGED WITH A WARNING

A local citizen appeared in the court on a charge of allowing two of his children to violate the truancy act, in respect of their non-attendance at school.

Truant Officer Cochrane laid the information.

The delinquent was discharged with a warning.

VIOLATED LIQUOR ACT

Harold Coons of Bridgenorth was conspicuous by his absence. He sent a letter of explanation to License Inspector Stewart, who submitted the document to His orWship.

Coons had two charges pending against him, one of having been under the influence of liquor in a local option locality, and the other with having been under the influence of intoxicants while on the prohibited list. To both charges the accused pleaded guilty in absence.

For the first named charged Magistrate Dumble imposed a fine of $10 and costs, amounting in all to $15.18. An adjournment was made on the other charge.

KILLS THE DANDRUFF GERM

The discovery of the dandruff germ as the cause of all hair troubles is not a recent event. Prof. Unn gave the germ theory to the world in 1887 and two years later Sabouraud by his experiments with a rabbit proved beyond a doubt the actual existence of this germ.

On the heels of this establishment of the germ theory came the discovery of Newbro's Herpicide. This was the first and only remedy for the destruction of the dandruff germ.

There have been other preparations alleged to kill this germ, stop falling hair and itching of the scalp. But Newbro's Herpicide really does these things. For this reason it has long been known as the original remedy and the only one that is genuine.

Don't be fooled by preparations which are trading upon the marvelous success of Herpicide. Remember you take no chances with Newbro's Herpicide. It is absolutely guaranteed.

For sale by all druggists.

Applications at good barber shops.

The Herpicide Company of Detroit, Mich., Dept. E., will send a sample bottle and booklet upon receipt of 10c. in postage.

SIR THOMAS TAIT NOT APPOINTED

Special to The Examiner:

MONTREAL, QUE., MAY 4—There is still no official notification here that Sir Thomas Tait has been appointed President of the Grand Trunk and Grand Trunk Pacific. Prominent officials of the railway think the report is absurd. They say nothing will be announced till Chairman of Directors Smithers arrives here next week.

FOLLOWING ROOSEVELT

COL. TAYLOR IS COMING

Will Give an Address in Salvation Army Temple on Monday

Colonel Taylor of International Headquarters, London, Eng., will visit Peterborough, and conduct a special meeting in the S. A., Temple, on Monday evening next, 6th inst. The Colonel is an officer of much prominence in Army circles, having seen long service in varied capacities, and his visit here will doubtless be of great interest to those who attend this meeting. All are invited.

OFFICERS ELECTED

On Thursday the Ladies' Aid of St. James Church held their annual election of officers, as follows:

Pres.—Mrs. A. Wilson (re-elected.)
Vice-Pres.—Mrs. Robinson.
Secy.—Mrs. L. Palmer (re-elected.)
Asst.-Secy.—Mrs. A. Frost.
Treas.—Mrs. Brown (re-elected.)
Organist—Mrs. F. Brown.

After the meeting refreshments were served and a social hour spent.

LAST COMMUNION IN OLD CHURCH

The communion service in the Murray street Baptist church to-morrow morning will be of especial interest, as it will be the last communion to be held in the old church that has served the congregation so long.

TO CHECK A COLD

It is easy to check a cold if you begin in time. Persons using Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine have the cough loosen, allay the inflammation, and so prevent it spreading to the bronchial tubes and lungs. Mrs. S. M. Moore, Shorncrest, B.C., writes: "I wish to state my gratitude for Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, for it cured a cold which I feared could soon put me in the grave."

BOARD OF MANAGEMENT ELECTED

The election of the Board of Management for the ensuing year of the Y.W.C.A., which took place at the annual meeting, held last night, resulted as follows: Mrs. A. W. Cressman, Mrs. A. WELCOME THE COMING.

"Welcome the coming, speed the going guest" has been good hospitality and good practice, since blind old Homer coined the phrase about three thousand years ago. In this spirit, the Examiner speeds the going president of the Canadian Club and welcomes the coming president. During his incumbency of the office of president of the Canadian Club, Mr. Goodwill has well deserved the name, good work—done with good will and good heart and good success. While he has not trumpetted his deeds loudly, he has done quiet, effective work, and shown the courtesy, consideration, and other qualities of grateful personal bearing that have earned for him the comprehensively terse and meaningful title, given by a member of the club, "a decent head.' While we "speed the going" Mr. Goodwill as president, we welcome the coming president, Mr. W. R. Morris, who, we are sure, will make a worthy successor, to whom, when the time comes for his laying down the baton at the end of his year, the same "well done good and faithful servant" that goes with Mr. Goodwill, will, be due. The king is dead, long live the king.

A BIG MAN.

The serious illness of Hon. J. P. Mabee, head of the Dominion Railway Commission, is a matter of more than common national concern. A fatal outcome of his illness would create an exceptional condition—render vacant a place that would be hard to fill. He possesses unusual qualifications for the position he occupies, strength of character, high sense of duty and high courage to give his convictions of duty effect. He is a fearless champion of public rights and holds the balance so firmly and withal, so fairly, between the naturally conflicting interests that come before him for adjudication, that he has won the confidence of all concerned in his impartiality and fearless discharge of duty. He has succeeded in giving effect to his evident desire to do justice without fear or favour. His capacity in rapidly analyzing questions that come within his official scope, give value to his judgments. He is as a contemporary remarks, one of Canada's really big men and his discharge of the duties of the chairmanship of the Dominion Railway Commission, has given character and unusual effectiveness for good, of the highest public usefulness, to that really great tribunal, which is held in an great respect as its great head. It is to be hoped that his illness may soon end in rapid recovery of health.

THE WHITE SCOURGE.

We haven't begun the fight against tuberculosis any too soon, and we are not waging it with any too mch vigour and success. The detailed official report of the prevalence and death rate of, and from, infectious diseases, in Ontario, show an alarming increase in the number of cases, as well as in mortality, from this preventable disease. In 1910 there were reported 110 cases, with 73 deaths. In 1911, the number has grown to 150 cases and 119 deaths—an increase in one year of 40 cases, and an increase in the same time of 46 deaths. Last year tuberculosis came within 14 of causing as many deaths as all the rest of the other seven infectious diseases put together. The total deaths from infectious diseases were 233, of which 119 were chargeable to tuberculosis. Of the latter the majority were adults, while of the other infectious diseases the victims were mainly children. It is unfortunate that we cannot get more popular interest aroused over tuberculosis. We cannot, however, be surprised at this apathy when responsible governing powers, which are supposed to have a more intelligent appreciation of the conditions, and greater responsibility in respect of taking action, are culpably indifferent. For instance, Sir James Whitney scoffs at "the fuss" made over tuberculosis: it is not go bad as represented, wholly deceptive as the other; what Sir James does not know thoroughly, is not a fit

ANOTHER POLICY "PASSED".

The appointment of a member of parliament to the bench is contrary to the announced policy of the Borden government; but that seems to be a small matter. It is no trouble to the Conservative party in power to perceive in power and in practice the beautiful theories of academic reform, advocated as a bid for the confidence of the people? The appointment of an active politician, an "offensive partisan" in the most extended application of the term, is not a good beginning of judicial independence. Mr. Haughton Lennox, who has been appointed a High Court judge, may be well qualified in the way of possession of legal knowledge, but it must be remembered that he has, up to the moment of appointment, been an active politician, and an extreme and bitter partisan at that. He may, or he may not, be able to put his partisanship on one side. If, however, he is as capable of disposing his partizanship as easily as his leader and his party have been able to "side track" the principles of policy and administrative action, upon which power was gained, he can easily accommodate himself to the independent and now partisan attitude, a judge is supposed to assume. The Mail and Empire says Mr. Lennox was a "strong party man," and, of course, in consonance with the spirit of the spoils policy that animates the Dominion Government, his preference even to the dignity and responsibility of the bench, is a natural action. Mr. Lennox may and, it is hoped, will, make an excellent judge; but that will not justify a departure from good policy represented by replacing the uniform of the caucus with the judicial ermine. Today we must, to avoid the penalties of contempt of court, speak of Mr. Justice Lennox with bated breath; yesterday, Mr. Lennox, M.P., could be "slang whanged" with good warrant, after the manner of political warfare.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Duke of Connaught reached the age of sixty-two years on May 1st. He must have got a permit from Dr. Osler to live two years beyond the limit.

The Western people are great. Everything out there is better than in the effete East. A Calgary crop press agent, speaks of a "warm" fall of snow. If snow had fallen in Ontario it would be cold.

The Durham Armoury is being converted into a public school. Is it possible this variant of turning the sword into a ploughshare forecasts the dawn of the illenium? Not while the dawn of the millenium? Not while so."

Toronto is playing the Pharisee. The Duke of Connaught is to visit the city, and the decree has gone forth that all the streets his Royal Highness will pass over must be repaired and cleaned — making "the outside of the cup and platter clean".

The Conservatives are riding for a fall when they seek to have all the local legislatures, as well as Federal parliament of one ruling political complexion. The only way to show the ineptitude of the party in the matter of giving acceptable government is to give it rope enough.

Practical navigators do not take seriously the proposal of Hon. Mr. Hazen, Minister of Marine, to extend the season of navigation on the upper lakes by the use of ice-breakers. Ice-breaking won't make navigation of these waters in November and December any less heart-breaking, and the profit would be problematical.

INVASION OF MODERNISM.

(Shelburne Free Press.)

Sunday School class yell is a novelty, but a town in New Jersey seems to think that if other organisations are to have their battle-cries a Sunday School class also should be permitted to make a comical noise at proper times and places. A boys' class has prepared the following:

What to do!
Say, my friend
Have you seen
Second Timothy
Two-fifteen?
First Thessalonians
Five-twenty-two,
Tells you exactly

We print this item not because we wish to encourage other Sunday schools to adopt a class yell, but because we know that curiosity will prompt a good many readers to look up the references, and that will do them no harm.

DISMISSAL PETERBORO POSTMASTER "TYRANNICAL AND INEXCUSABLE"

(Globe.)

Mr. A. K. Stratton had been Postmaster of the city of Peterborough for several years when he was recently dismissed by Postmaster-General Pelletier for "offensive partisanship." The circumstances attending his dismissal were exceptionally tyrannical and absolutely inexcusable. Mr. Stratton is a brother of Hon. J. R. Stratton, who was the Liberal candidate for re-election in West Peterborough at the late general election. Just because of this relationship he was particularly careful to refrain from taking any part in the contest. In his reply to a question from the Postmaster-General's office, whether he had been guilty of offensive partisanship, he explained that he had never visited a committee-room or attended a public or private political meeting, and that he had not canvassed any electors.

When Mr. Stratton, on receiving notice of his dismissal, asked for the reasons Mr. Pelletier promised to be was told by Mr. [illegible] that the dismissal had been made on the report of Mr. [illegible] the member-elect. He has [illegible] the position that nothing more than the word of a Conservative member is needed to warrant the dismissal of a civil servant, and he has many such removals to his credit. Mr. Borden has ever since the inside civil service was handed over to a Commission, been proclaiming as one plank of his platform his intention to bring the outside civil service under the same kind of administration. The whole country will under the circumstances hold him personally responsible for all of Mr. Pelletier's tyrannical acts in creating vacancies to be filled by friends of Conservative members.

SIR JAMES WHITNEY VIOLATES ESSENTIALLY BRITISH PRINCIPLE

Before the Ontario House rose the Government succeeded in getting its docile majority in the Legislature to appropriate five million dollars for the development of Northern Ontario. The vote is not excessive, considering the vastness of the region which is loosely comprised under that rather indefinite designation and how little has been done to promote settlement there, notwithstanding the fact that nearly everybody familiar with it bears ready testimony to the variety and richness of its resources. Indeed, a liberal and progressive legislature, without straining its conscience, might have voted a considerably larger sum. But the peculiar feature about this vote is that it violates the most elementary principle of British parliamentary practice—the principle that governs all the parliaments of the British Empire—in failing to state the specific purpose to which the money will be devoted. The Government insisted upon having a free hand in the matter and got it. There are many things to which the money might very properly be allocated, the laying out of roads, the creation of towns, the erection of buildings, required for public services, construction works of various kinds and agricultural experimentation in the clay belt. The Government insists, however, that it should have liberty to spend the money as it sees fit.

Never in its history did the greatly abused and vilified Ross Government go before the Legislature with such a request. Had Mr. Ross done so one can imagine with what indignant fury Sir James Whitney would have condemned so gross an abuse of authority, and what a picture of corruption he would have drawn. Probably the greatest danger in connection with expenditure of this character is that a large part of it may be wasted on impracticable objects or in sectional projects which may do good to the party in power and have little effect in drawing settlers, which should, of course, be the chief object of such expenditure. The principle is bad, whatever the results.

A SLILY ADVENTURE.

The Borden Government is tempted to plunge into the local election in Saskatchewan. The News, instead of warning its leader against the temptation, excuses the interference upon the ground that the Laurier Government set the example. Many a time and oft has the News shown the worthlessness of the plea which it now advances, the plea of "you're another."

In this case a little candid advice could have been better for the Dominion Government than a politician's stale excuse. Sir John Macdonald met with one of his few defeats when he undertook to interfere in the local affairs of Ontario. The last Conservative Government at Ottawa courted destruction by interfering in the local affairs of Manitoba. The present Dominion Government has a good many important problems to be solved, a good many tasks to be done. The silly ambition to play the dictator in the local politics of Quebec and Saskatchewan ought to be discouraged.—Toronto Star.

LIFE-SAVING AT SEA.

The Buffalo News, discussing the lifeboat question, recalls the fact that after the sinking of the Bourgoyne a life-barge was evolved as the result of a $20,000 prize offered as a memorial to Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Pollock of Washington, D.C., two of the victims of that disaster. The contest brought out no less than 3000 life-saving appliances, many of them of great value. The appliance which, in the judgment of the maritime experts, seemed best adapted to the purpose was a steel barge so arranged as to take the place of the ship's bridge in ordinary circumstances, and capable of being launched by two men in about three minutes. It is estimated that four of these bridge boats and a few steel lifeboats could have saved the lives of all on board the Titanic not only under the actual circumstances, but also if no help had been near or even if a serious storm ahd been raging. The Titanic, the largest and most luxurious steamer ever built carried nothing but a few old-fashioned boats, all of them destitute of supplies, all of them managed by oars and all of them so constructed that they had to be constantly bailed in order to keep them afloat. The News thinks it is important that the Titanic tragedy should have the result not only of increasing the lifeboat accommodation of all passenger ships, but of having it seen to that the life-saving apparatus provided is of an effective character.

SOME THINGS AND OTHERS

The "spoils system" has reached such a pass in this district, says the Windsor Record, that it is dangerous for an official to be seen walking down the street with a Liberal newspaper in his pocket.

The present aldermanic team would have seen charm in staying at home quietly and letting somebody else do the worrying, if they had foreseen the many ticklish and top-heavy civic problems that are giving them so much bother this year.

The second Sunday in May is Mother's Day; Father's Day is tomorrow, and he begins with the stovepipes, remarks the Ottawa Citizen.

The [illegible] of the carpet beater, the balmy breeze and the vacuum cleaner eats dirt.

The golf season is in full swing, and the season promises to be a grand one. The club boasts of a grounds man, who is a real man on the subject; he comes from a country where they play golf and call it "gowf."

The president's chair of the Canadian Club is glossy with the sedentary sartorial friction of an unbroken succession of worthy tenants. Witness the honour roll—Messrs. F. D. Kerr, H. R. H. Kenner, D. O'Connell, Dr. Cameron, Messrs. J. E. L. Goodwill and W. R. Morris. Who can pick a better half dozen?

The museum recently installed in the Public Library draws a large number of visitors. It is a credit to Peterborough. There are scores of persons who have objects of relic value, which have been gathering dust and serving as roosts for spiders in attics for years. Dig them out, present them to the museum and get your names in the papers and help add interest to the collection.

The city might present the museum the wooden sidewalk they are repairing on Water street, as a specimen of a fast disappearing relic of earlier days.

The Young Women's Association has the courage to acknowledge being of age—it held its 21st annual meeting yesterday. There is a good deal of moral courage in a woman confessing her age—not so much when she is 21 as when she is 31.

THE VALUE OF BANANAS AS AN ARTICLE OF FOOD THEY ARE VERY NUTRITIVE

Some Interesting Figures And Information About The Fruit---Cheap, Appetizing And Strengthening Says Medical Authorities.

Until within the last twenty-five years the fruit of the so-called banana tree has been looked upon by people of northern climes with something akin to reverence and awe. The feeling arose, perhaps, from the almost universal fancy that this was the forbidden fruit of the garden of Eden. The specific name M. paradisiaca, and the habitat of the fruit in tropical countries, helped foster this idea. But now with our improved facilities of transportation, this same fruit, the food of millions in the tropics for ages has been brought within easy access at all seasons to the housekeepers of the world. But, even yet, so recent is our acquaintance with this fruit that its possibilities as food have not been fully comprehended.

The banana as a fruit available to northern housekeepers, forms a class by itself; for it is the only sweet fruit that is found fresh in our markets.

Our intimate acquaintance with fruit is restricted to the acid, or sub-acid varieties. Of the sub-acid fruits, the apple and orange may stand as types. Such fruit is valuable to us, not as a standard article of food, but as a standard "relish." By the use of these fruits in combination with inexpensive foods, which lack in flavour, at small cost palatable dishes are evolved. But in the case of the banana the conditions are changed somewhat.

The test of the food value of any article of diet is found in the relative proportion of flesh forming principle it contains, viz., proteid, after this the amount of carbohydrate and fat is taken into consideration. The following analysis showing the composition of the apple, orange and banana is by Atwater:

	Water	Proteid	Fat	Carbohydrate	Ash
Apple	84.6	.4	.5	14.2	.3
Orange	86.9	.8	.2	11.6	.5
Banana	75.3	1.3	.6	22.0	.8

A glance at this analysis will make plain that the banana contains nearly four times as much proteid as the apple, twice as much carbohydrate and three times as much fat as the orange. In short, the composition of the banana raises it from the rank of a mere relish to that of a food; and it is in this fact that encouragement and hope for the housekeeper lies. For with steady increase in population and consequent increase in price of meat, fish, eggs and milk, products rich in flesh forming principle, the housekeeper who understands food values, is oftentimes sorely perplexed to know from what source she is to procure this most necessary food principle in a palatable form and with an outlay at all commensurate with the return she receives. Hoy and some of the English chemists have noted that the proportion of albuminates (protein) in bananas and in milk is almost identical. Hoy considers one pound of flour, made of dried bananas, equal to two pounds of wheat flour in nutritive value. In those countries where the banana is indigenous, the natives use the pulp, mixed with water, to feed infants that are deprived of the natural source of food. These facts all tend to show the high nutritive value of this fruit and give us hints as to its practical application in general dietetics.

Again the value of any food is measured by the ease with which it is digested. The banana when fully ripened, that is when the skin begins to darken and shrivel, is in a condition easy of digestion, and this condition may be hastened by cooking.

In no case should wine be used except with cooked bananas, and in all preparations of bananas this fact needs be kept in mind, for alcohol in connection with uncooked bananas, sometimes produces serious digestive disturbances.

The banana is deficient in pronounced flavour, but it absorbs flavours readily, and presents a good medium by which such flavours may be brought to notice, thus affording great diversity in the manner of its treatment. In cooked preparations, wine—sherry or maraschino preferred—is largely used, while in all preparations, cooked or uncooked, the juice or pulp of pineapples, oranges, peaches, apricots, currants, cherries, strawberries and lemons, singly or in combination, blend most happily with the banana; even the tomato, fruit or vegetable, whichever we may call it, celery, lettuce and cress are no longer considered as supplients for flavour in this connection, but in combination with the banana please us no less in taste than in appearance, with nuts, either in sweet dishes, or in salads.

HOW THE BANANA IS GATHERED.

bananas will always be in demand, but this combination, as well as that of olive oil and cream, with bananas, must be considered, hygienically, as an "embarrassment of riches," and especially so, if much other hearty food be injested at the same time.

On account of the absence of acid in composition—acid impedes the digestion of starchy food—the banana should be the popular breakfast fruit, and the extent of its consumption with the breakfast cereal at the present time is strong evidence that for this purpose it is already held high in general esteem.

We have already referred to the greater digestibility of the cooked over the raw fruit. Even a slight cooking is of advantage. Often thickening the pulp, taken from the darkening skin, into a hot dish and disposing the hot cereal above it affords all the cooking that is called for.

At the present time, when the possible physical deterioration of our race is occupying the attention of eminent men and others, the proper and careful feeding of children naturally takes a prominent place; and, therefore, any influence that can be brought to bear to educate the public mind on what is admittedly an important and healthful food for our children, will be without doubt, influence exerted in the right direction.

It is impossible to find anything else produced by nature which comes to the hand of the consumer as clean and sanitary as a banana wrapped in its own covering, which can be easily removed with the fingers. Can anyone recall a single fruit, nut, vegetable or grain grown anywhere in the world which is absolutely free from insect, pest, worm, knot or defect, except the banana, which is perfectly protected by its own skin from contamination? It may be noticed that the banana sometimes scarred or blackened. This is caused by handling, and has no effect upon the fruit within. As a matter of fact, the skin of a banana, when thoroughly ripe, is somewhat black or spotted.

A good deal of emphasis is given today in the discussion of the increasingly high cost of living, and much space is being devoted in the newspapers and magazines to the subject. The public, however, is not as interested in learning the names of those articles of food which have so increased in price as to make their purchase almost prohibitive, as they are to learn the names of those foods which are still within the reach of all. The banana is the cheapest and most nourishing of palatable foods, costing the consumer less per pound than common vegetables or cereals, thus making it the food for the millions. In the present era of advancing prices for food products, the banana occupies a unique position, as it is cheaper to-day than ever before, the retail price ranging from ten cents to twenty-five cents per dozen. As has been well said, the importer has conferred a lasting benefit to this country by supplying its population with an appetizing, nutritious food at a very low price. While the bananas can be prepared in various ways, it is surprising to find the vast number of people who are unused to learn that it can be served baked, fried or prepared in various other ways.

The people already realize the importance of this fruit as a highly nutritious and cheap food product within the reach of all, and are also beginning to appreciate its advantages and desirability as a cooked vegetable for daily consumption on the table of the rich and poor alike.

IF I HAD ECZEMA

I'd simply wash it way with that soothing liquid, D.D.D. Prescription. The very first drops instantly stop that awful itch. We have sold many other remedies for skin trouble, but none that we could personally recommend as we do the D.D.D. Prescription.

Better try a bottle at once on our personal advice. McDermaid and Jury and E. L. Payne, druggists.

THE TITANIC DISASTER.

A fleet of icebergs grandly sweeping
Southward in the night;
The mighty ocean softly sleeping
In their shimmering light;
The splendid liner swiftly speeding,
Warning Marconigrams unheeding;
A shock, a grinding noise, death's pall unfurled,
God's hand upon the tiller of the world.

"Lower the lifeboats," sternly spoken,
"Women and children first!"
"Be British," men, tho' hearts be broken,
Dishonour is the worst!
The orchestra is bravely playing,
The gallant Phillips calmly staying,
O Christ, there's room in Heaven for such men.
Open Thine arms and let them breathe again!

No rank nor wealth can save the stricken,
Unwritten law holds sway;
"The ship is sinking," strong men sicken,
But in their strength obey;
They think of loved ones soon despairing,
Of Him to Whom all souls are faring,
And then—humanity is glorified
Because those brave men nobly died.

J. W. GARVIN.

Toronto, April 22nd, 1912.

A WONDER WORKER

"It heals like magic," is a favorite expression when Dr. Chase's Ointment is used. It works quickly, stops all itching at once, often heals in a single night. For eczema, salt rheum, barbers' itch, skin irritations or eruptions, it is a most satisfactory treatment. Being antiseptic, it prevents blood poisoning.

TO MEMORIALIZE CHAMPLAIN'S VISIT

of concern to the Club was whether Empire Day should be celebrated on the birthday of King George, or as heretofore, on May 24th, Victoria Day. "I am strongly impressed that to change it would be to weaken one of the links that bind us to the Empire. Would it be right for the Canadian Club in Peterborough to give the lead, in that as Canadians and British subjects with every desire to properly observe the birthday of King George that we consider the traditions and memories of the 24th of May, too sacred and hallowed to be given up." Mr. Kerr pointed out that the celebration of Empire Day on the King's birthday brought that event too near Dominion Day, and thus detracted to a certain extent from the spirit of the Empire as manifested on May 24th, and from the spirit of Dominion Day.

Rev Canon Davidson's Address.

Rev. Canon Davidson considered Mr. Kerr's suggestion an excellent one. "We have had splendid addresses on national topics, and through them we are more conversant with great national questions before us. But the compliment of that work can be done. The public opinion of the people of this country can be collected and crystallized, and through the medium of the Canadian Clubs, brought before the Government of our country. The Government, I think, would be thankful to have a channel of this kind for finding out the opinions of the people. And what organization is there like the Canadian Clubs for this purpose? They are scattered through all the provinces in the Dominion, thinking out the problems of the country, and they could crystallize public opinion and bring it before the Government for action.

Celebrate Dominion Day.

Rev. Canon Davidson then passed from a consideration of the general opportunities of the Canadian Clubs to the concrete. "Our national day is celebrated in a half-hearted manner," he said. "The young manhood of our country is not thrown into the celebration of that day. As on May 24th the Empire come before us, so on the 1st of July Canada should be brought before every one of her sons and daughters and her mission, her ideals and what she stands for should be brought out before them. We should not lay this movement on the shelf."

Canon Davidson moved that the Executive of the Club take steps with the City Council to consider the proper celebration of Dominion Day, this year.

The Regiment would be in town this year, and would likely throw itself into the scheme of having a celebration of Dominion Day that would be worth while.

Mr. Vincent Eastwood seconded the motion, and said that he understood that it was possible that some other regiments may visit Peterborough this year, and they might be brought here on Dominion Day. He was in favour of Dr. Cameron's idea and suggested that the proposal be brooked to the Daughters of the Empire.

The question of the celebration of Dominion Day will be taken up the executive of the Canadian Club with the City Council and the officers of the 57th Regiment.

The meeting closed with the singing of the National Anthem.

The banquet provided by Coleman Bros. was thoroughly appreciated.

Putnam's Corn Extractor Cured Letter-carrier's Corns

Mr. J. McGuire, of the Kingston, Ont., Post Office, says: "I was almost crippled with corns. They made me so lame and sore I could scarcely walk. I used a number of remedies but got no relief. Fortunately I tried 'Putnam's Painless Corn and Wart Extractor.' It has completely cured my corns. I recommend 'Putnam's' to all sufferers." Sold by druggists.

RICHARD HALL & SON

Every temptation resisted, every noble aspiration encouraged, every sinful inclination repressed, every bitter word withheld adds its little item to the impetus of that great movement which is bearing us and all humanity onward toward a richer life, a higher character and a nobler destiny.

GRAND CONCERT HELD LAST EVENING AT THE COLLEGIATE

Annual Entertainment Under the Auspices of the Literary Society of That Institution was a Great Success—A Large Attendance.

The concert party which entertained a large audience at the annual concert under the auspices of the Literary Society of the Peterborough Collegiate Institute held last evening in the Assembly Hall, was one of exceptional merit, and each number was accorded the applause it richly deserved.

Mr. Harry Holgate, pianist, is an artiste of unquestionable ability. His playing is marked by expression and precision, and he possesses a style which is most commendable. He rendered Rachmannoff's beautiful prelude in C. sharp minor, making the very best of the sonorous chords which open the piece. In the second movement—the agitato — his talent was sharply defined and the diminuendo exercised at the close of the selection rendered it the more effective. He rendered also, other selections, including Cramer's "Le Desire."

Mrs. Kennedy possesses a sweet and well commanded soprano voice, wide in compass and extensive in its latitude. She rendered in a most captivating manner the "Ave Maria" from Bruch's "Das Feuer Koenig," and on being recalled, responded with a bird song in which she exercised the trills in a most polished manner. Another attractive item from the artiste was one of Reichardt's pretty little songs, entitled, "When the Roses Bloom." In this song, where much latitude is called for, the tone colour, she exercised was magnificent.

The baritone was Mr. Arthur Blight, who is also a vocalist of no mean calibre. He was especially good in the prologue to Leoncavallo's "Pagliacci." In this work, pathos and drama are intermingled and each were handled in an equally clever manner. He also rendered in masterly fashion, Adams' "Farewell in the Desert."

Miss Clarice Spencer rendered some excellent recitations, which formed a suitable diversion. Conspicuous amongst her contributions was the 'Quarrel Scene' from the School for Scandal. In this she performed the roles respectively, of Sir Richard and Lady Teasle to a nicety. Another selection of hers was James Whitcombe Riley's, "That Old Sweetheart of Mine."

Each of the artistes responded to enthusiastic applause.

FINGER-PRINT IDENTIFICATION METHOD AS EMPLOYED BY POLICE DEPARTMENT

Chief of Police Thompson Introduced the System Here One Year Ago—Former Prison Record of Joseph Cross Unearthed by This System.

OTHER CASES ESTABLISHED

During the four years that Joseph Cross spent languishing in a prison cell at Kingston penitentiary, there was perfected and introduced into Canada a system commonly known as the finger-print method of identifying criminals. When once applied, nothing short of the grave—amputation of the fingers and thumbs excepted—will eradicate it.

Cross whos was committed to the Kingston penitentiary for five years on a criminal charge, by His Honour Judge Huycke on Thursday morning last, had many times, as the numerous convictions against him proved, posed for a photograph, which eventually would find a place in the rogue's gallery. These, with measurements and other minor details which all prisoners committed for terms longer than thirty days, are compelled by law to submit too, were all commonplace to Cross. It was not until the expiration of his four year prison term, prior to the latest conviction, that he was formally introduced to an identification process that is eradicable, and which shows no change from childhood to extreme old age.

Denied Former Convictions.

It was mainly by this means that his previous prison record was conclusively proven beyond all doubht. This, after the prisoner had stoutly denied ever having been convicted before.

It merely remained for Chief Thompson, after Cross's apprehension in this city several weeks ago, to secure a finger-print impression of the prisoner's fingers and forward them to Ottawa. Here they were examined by the expert of the finger-print bureau, who had little difficulty in locating the duplicates with Cross's prison record attached. There were five convictions in all, ranging all the way from vagrancy to larceny, and in nearly all cases, the prisoner had given an assumed name.

Chief Thompson is firmly convinced that the name of Cross, under which he was convicted here, is an alias. However, that avails nothing. Cross, or whatever the name might be, has left behind him a means of identification that is universally accepted as evidence by the highest tribunal in the land.

Introduced Here One Year Ago.

The finger-print method of identifying criminals was first introduced by Chief of Police Thompson upon his return from the convention of Chief Constables at Ottawa one year ago. The system, which was freely discussed, so impressed Chief Thompson as a means of identifying criminals, that the successful adoption of the system here has had its result.

How it Originated.

The permanent character of the finger-print was first put forward scientifically in 1823 by J. E. Purkinje an eminent professor of physiology. He adduced nine standard types of impressions and advocated this system of identification which attracted considerable attention at that time.

The Bengal police under the administration of Sir Heming, after wards Chief Commissioner of the London Metropolitan Police, successfully adopted finger-prints for the detention of crime and the example followed in every public department in India. Documents when registered are attested by a thumb mark, so are advances made to labourers, on accounts of wages, or contracts signed under the emigration law, all tending to check frauds and impostures, which are constantly attempted.

Patterns Are Fixed.

The prints depend upon a peculiarity seen in the human hand and to some extent the foot. The persistence of the markings of the finger tips has been proven beyond all question and this universally accepted quality has been the basis of the present system of identification. The impressions when examined, show that the ridges appear in certain fixed patterns, from which a system of notations, or signs has been arrived at for convenience of record. These are known, or styled as "arches," "loops," "whorls" and "composites." All these classes are easily distinguishable by the expert.

Many police departments use this system extensively, even to the exclusion of the famous Bertillion system of identifiaction by measurements. As more strenuous and effective methods are being adopted from time to time for the pursuit of criinals, and more severe penalties are inflicted upon old offenders, a means of unquestionable identification have become essential to this various processes used to serve a desirable end.

Appliances Are Simple.

Very few and simple are the appliances required to take the print. A sheet of paper, a glass slab, some printers ink and a small rubber roller are the utensils used by Chief Thompson. Scars or malformation do not interfere with the results.

Inspector Foster, chief expert of the finger-print bureau at Ottawa in his address at the chief constables convention last year, declared that he would be willing to go into the witness box and swear to the identity of a person by the finger prints alone, should any doubt exist as to the identity.

The system, since its introduction by the police department of this city, has given highly satisfactory results. On two occasions in particular, where identification was incomplete, the finger-print showed the identity conclusively. The two cases referred to, were that of Cross and Frank Hughes. The latter, it will be remembered, was convicted of theft and sentenced to two years in Kingston penitentiary last August. He was apprehended in Lindsay by Detective Newhall and brought back to this city. When examined, he denied ever having been convicted before. The finger-print method of identification was brought into play and Hughes' long prison record revealed.

Cross took a similar course, but finger-print impressions made by the police department proved him to be a prevaricator in this respect.

Mixed Forestmen.

Impressions of the fingers and thumbs of both the right and left hand are transferred upon a specially prepared form, with a ruled square for the reception of each impression. In the case of Joseph Cross one of these squares was of a necessity, blank, and instead of the finger impression, the word "amputated" was substituted, which served as a grim reminder of the fact that Cross was minus a forefinger on his right hand. It also serves to illustrate one particular instance where the finger-print method is not applicable.

The police department is clothed with the authority to remand to gaol refractory prisoners who refuse to submit to the procedure. When the impressions are taken, a duplicate is forwarded to Ottawa and placed on file in the finger-print bureau, which is in charge of Inspector Foster. The apprehansion of a criminal is followed by a reference to this bureau and the prisoners record, if any exists, is by that means located.

BANISH PIMPLES AND ERUPTIONS

In the Spring Most People Need a Tonic Medicine

One of the surest signs that the blood is out of order is the pimples, unsightly eruptions and eczema that come frequently with the change from winter to spring. These prove that the long indoor life of winter has had its effect upon the blood, and that a tonic medicine is needed to put it right. Indeed there are few people who do not need a tonic at this season. Bad blood does not merely show itself in disfiguring eruptions. To this same condition is due attacks of rheumatism and lumbago; the sharp stabbing pains of sciatica and neuralgia; poor appetite and a desire to avoid exertion. You cannot cure these troubles by the use of purgative medicines — you need a tonic, and a tonic only, and among all medicines there is none can equal Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for their tonic, life-giving, nerve-restoring powers. Every dose of this medicine makes new, rich blood which drives out impurities, stimulates every organ and brings a feeling of new health and energy to weak, tired, ailing men, women and children. If you are out of sorts give this medicine a trial and see how quickly it will restore the appetite, revive drooping spirits, and fill your veins with new, health-giving blood.

You can get these pills from any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The following poem by Rev. H. F. Lyte seems a singularly appropriate epitaph to the memory of the captain, officers and crew of the Titanic who did their duty so nobly and died so bravely on the night of April 14th, 1912:

THE OFFICERS' GRAVE.

There is in the wide lone sea
A spot unmarked but holy,
For there the gallant and the free
In his ocean bed lies lowly.

Down, down within the deep
That oft to triumph bore him,
He sleeps a sound and pleasant sleep
With the salt waves dashing o'er him.

He sleeps serene and safe
From tempest and from billow,
Where storms that high above him chafe,
Scarce rock his lonely pillow.

The sea and him in death,
They did not dare to sever;
It was his home while he had breath
'Tis now his rest forever.

Sleep on thou mighty dead,
A glorious tomb they've found thee;
The broad blue sky above thee spread
The boundless waters round thee.

GREAT CHANGE IN A FEW DAYS

Dodd's Kidney Pills made Wm Gervais a new man.

His Muscles Cramped, He Was Very Irritable and He Had Headaches —Dodd's Kidney Pills Changed It All.

Hitchcock, Sask., May 3.—(Special.)—Mr. Wm. Gervais, well known and highly respected here, is telling his friends of an almost miraculous change Dodd's Kidney Pills have made in him. He is a man of few words, but he speaks straight to the point:

"My muscles would cramp," Mr. Gervais says: "My head ached and I was very irritable until I used Dodd's Kidney Pills. Two boxes made a new man of me."

A change in a few days from a nervous, irritable condition, with an aching head and a presentment that a serious illness was hovering over him, to rousing, energetic health was what Dodd's Kidney Pills did for Mr. Gervais. That's what they have done for thousands of others on the prairies. No matter where you go you will hear of cures they have made. If you don't know from your own experience, your neighbour will tell you they are the one sure cure for any form of Kidney Disease.

HOUSEHOLD NOTES

Beauty is a dangerous gift. It is even so. Like wealth, it has ruined its thousands. Thousands of the most beautiful women are destitute of commonsense and character. No gift from heaven is so general as the gift of beauty. In about nine cases in ten it makes fair silly, senseless, thoughtless, giddy, vain, proud, frivolous, ruthless, low, and mean. We think we have seen more girls spoiled by beauty than by any other one thing. "She is beautiful, and she knows it," is as much as to say she is spoiled.

* * * *

Let us stop to think of the aged. For us, too, the evening shadows will close at length, and we shall, perchance, be left at desolate hearthstones. We shall need to be remembered then.

* * * *

Marrying for money is no worse than marrying for poverty.

* * * *

He who can suppress a moment's anger may prevent a day of sorrow.

* * * *

A man will grant his wife any right more cheerfully than the right to be sick when he feels bad himself.

* * * *

Men frequently lose interest in their homes by their failure to make them interesting and pleasant.

Wanted—A Boy.

A jolly boy.
A boy full of vim.
A boy who scorns a lie.
A boy who will never smoke.
A boy with some "stick to it."
A boy who takes to the bath-tub.
A boy who is proud of his big sister
A boy who thinks hard work is no disgrace.
A boy who does chores without grumbling.
A boy who thinks that an education is worth while.
A boy that plays with all his might —during play hours.
A boy who listens not to unclean stories from one another.
A boy who thinks his mother above all mothers is the model.
A boy who does not know more than all the rest of the house.
A boy who does not think it inconsistent to mix praying and playing.
A boy who does not need to be called a second time in the morning.

Cheerfulness and Health.

People never break down in health so long as they keep a happy, joyous heart. It is the sad and despondent heart that tires, and whatever the load, we should always keep a cheerful spirit within. There are two ways of meeting a hard experience. One is to struggle and resist, refusing to yield. The result of this is the wounding of the soul and intensifying the hardness. The other is quietly to accept the circumstances or restraints and make the best of them by enduring all cheerfully. Those who live in the first way grow old in the middle of life. Those who take the other way keep a young and happy heart down to old age and often find the last days the best days and old age the happiest time of life.

* * * *

Sunshine in the face, sunshine in the heart and sunshine in our homes if we would be healthy and happy. Catch the sunshine in all the living rooms, roll up the shades and let the flowers and the children—those dearer human flowers—bask in the sunshine, the life of the world, that is now in the springtime calling the grass, the wild flowers and all vegetation from their damp, cold beds to answer to its greeting. The trailing arbutus, that sweetest bower of the Canadian springtime, is now peeping out from beneath its covering of green leaves to greet its warm smiles, the sweet song birds trill forth their sweetest melodies at sunrise. And in winter how we welcome the sunshiny days. It changes our gloom to gladness. Then let us gather in all we can, but when the dark days come we can still have its beams radiate our faces, purify our hearts and glorify our own lives and also the lives of others. Let us daily sing the bright song of sunshine.—Aunt Prue.

Indolence and Home

Indolence is an enemy to home. Some men are too lazy to provide decent conveniences at home. It is a crime against the happines of the home for a man to neglect to provide the little conveniences that will add to the beauty and comfort of the home. Say, brother, take out that old mildewed pillow and put in a pane of glass; it is too painful as it is. Climb up then and put the bricks on the chimney where the storm of last winter blew them off. Put a carpet on the floor and a few pictures on the shelves, and give your family a paper or two to read. Study to make yourself useful and to rob home of its bleakness by providing things that add to the comfort and brightness. Make the children feel that home is a Paradise in which the thrushes of love ever sing high up in the clear blue sky of the humble heart and you will have no fear of turning out thieves and harlots in years to come.

PETERBOROUGH,
May 3rd, 1912.

DEAR SIR:

If we expect to clothe you, we have to show you that our clothes are better for the same money than you can get elsewhere, haven't we?

We believe that we can prove to you that it will be decidedly to your interests to get your next suit here. But we cannot prove it to you by merely saying so—you must see the garments in order to see the beauty of our styles. You must try on a few of our Coats in order to realize the perfection in fit. You must wear one to really know the excellence of fabric and workmanship.

And so we would be grateful to you for an opportunity to show you some of the elegant Suits now in our store. We will not urge you to buy. We expect every man to buy what his best judgment dictates to be the best for his own particular needs. We know you will like yourself in some one, at least, of the many styles we have. We know the quality of fabric, the style and workmanship is there to appeal to you as a man of good judgment, and, what is more, we know that every garment is so overwhelm ngly good in every essential detail that goes to make a thoroughly satisfactory suit of clothes, that when you wear one, you are sure to come here for your next one.

Maybe you think that we claim too much for them, but we want to say right here that we have determined to make our Clothes absolutely unapproachable for the money, and we have done it. If this is a fact, you want to investigate them in justice to your own interests, don't you? Then come visiting and see for yourself. We'll leave it for you decide. We want to sell you your CLOTHING and FURNISHINGS this Spring. We know we will if you see our goods and learn our prices.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON QUESTIONS

MAY 5, 1912.

(Copyright, 1911, by Rev. T. S. Linscott, D.D.)

Poverty and Riches. Luke vi.: 20-26; xvi.: 19-31.

Golden Text—A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth. Luke xii.: 15.

(1) Verse 20—Wherein consists the blessedness of poverty?

(2) Did Jesus mean that it was blessed to be poor or in the fact that the poor were to be delivered from their poverty?

(3) Why should the poor be more entitled to the kingdom of God than the rich?

(4) Verse 21—When a good man is hungry or when he weeps, is he going through, for the time being, the best possible experience for him and is therefore blessed? Give your reasons.

(5) If hunger is necessary in order to getting and enjoying food; and if weeping is an essential preparation for laughter, why are not these experiences blessed?

(6) With the world and human nature constituted as at present, would it be a blessing or a curse, and why, if all hunger, weeping and other pain were impossible?

(7) Verses 22-23—Wherein consists the blessedness of being hated for Jesus' sake?

(8) Under painful circumstances, even when recognised as blessed, is it always possible to be joyful and happy? Why or why not?

(9) If, for example, we are now suffering great pain, which is to result by and by in infinite pleasure, why would not a realization of the truth make our hearts glad?

(10) Verse 24—What is the one great penalty of riches?

(11) What can you say for or against the statement that it is wicked to be rich and virtuous to be poor? (This is one of the questions which may be answered in writing by members of the club).

(12) Verse 25—What is the great woe to those that, having plenty of food and worldly amusement, have no desire for spiritual joys?

(13) Verse 26—Is it possible for a man who is well pleasing to God to have all men speak well of him?

(14) VXI.: 19-23—How is it that in all time some have been very rich and some very poor?

(15) Which, and why, tends most to goodness, great poverty or great riches?

(16) Why did the poor man go to heaven and the rich man to hell?

(17) Why is there no necessary vice or virtue in being either rich or poor?

(18) Verses 24-26—What does this story teach concerning any alleviation of the suffering of the lost?

(19) Verses 27-31—If Wesley and Knox were to come back to the earth and preach, would they win more people for Christ than they did when here before? Give your reasons.

STOMACH DISTRESS AND DYSPEPSIA GO

Diapepsin Makes Upset Stomachs Feel Fine in Five Minutes

As there is often someone in your family who suffers an attack of Indigestion or some form of Stomach trouble, why don't you keep some Diapepsin in the house handy

This harmless blessing will digest anything you can eat without the slightest discomfort, and overcome a sour gassy stomach five minutes after.

Tell your pharmacist to let you read the formula, plainly printed on these 50-cent cases of Pape's Diapepsin, then you will readily see why it makes Indigestion, Sour Stomach, Heartburn and other diseases go in five minutes and relieves at once such miseries as Belching of Gas, Eructations of sour, undigested food, Nausea, Headaches, Dizziness, Constipation and other Stomach disorders.

Some folks have tried so long to find relief from Indigestion and Dyspepsia or any out-of-order stomach with the common, everyday cures advertised that they have made up their minds that they have something else wrong, or believe theirs is a case of Nervousness, Gastritis, Catarrh of the Stomach or Cancer.

This no doubt, is a serious mistake. Your real trouble is, what you eat does not digest; instead, it ferments and sours, turns to acid, Gas and Stomach poison, which putrefy in the digestive tract and intestines, and besides, poison the breath with nauseous odors.

A hearty appetite, with thorough digestion, and without the slightest discomfort or misery of the Stomach, is waiting for you as soon as you decide to try Pape's Diapepsin.

The Peterboro Light & Power Company's show-room will be open on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings during May and June from 8 to 10 p. m. for the convenience of those wishing to secure gas appliances or to arrange for gas connections.

TWENTY FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF INAUGURATION OF YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION

The Association Concludes a Very Successful Year—Interesting Address by Miss Cullen Late of Paris France—Reception of Reports And Several Musical Numbers terminate an Excellent Programme.

The twenty-first anniversary of the inception of the Young Women's Christian Association movement in Peterborough, was justly and appropriately observed last evening. Never in the history of the local branch of this world-wide movement, has such encouraging progress been made, than that which concludes the 21st year of its work in this city. Many new features have been introduced, and many new laudable plans promulgated, all of which have contributed to the large measure of success.

The attendance, last evening, was large, and necessitated additional chairs being placed in the spacious gymnasium to accommodate the crowd. The outstanding feature of the programme was the excellent and stirring address by Miss Cullen, travelling secretary of the Y. W. C. A.

Miss Cullen has seen extensive service in Association work and her address, last night, was a tribute to the cause, for which she has faithfully laboured. Versatile and sympathetic is her manner, and possessing enviable oratorical ability, Miss Cullen touched the responsive chord of many of her hearers, and, in others, awakened a renewed feeling of interest towards the work of the Association.

The Work in Paris.

Miss Cullen, who recently returned from Paris, France, where she has laboured in the interests of the Association for the past six years, took for her subject the "Student Life in Paris."

"In Peterborough," said the speaker, "the same spirit pervades in the work, for which we strove so hard in the world that gathers so many students together as this gay city of France. During the past year we came in contact with over one thousand students, representing all nationalities. One-fourth of them found refuge in the historically famous Latin quarter. The many dangers that overshadow these young people's lives are varied. The dangers are intensified by the fact that the majority of the students are comparatively poor. Many of them go from America to Paris with enough funds, that with judicious economy would last them for eighteen months. They invariably spend it in twelve, and live the remaining six months on little or nothing, believing that at the end of this period, fortune will smile upon them by reason of the store of knowledge which they have acquired. This policy very often has the effect of leading them into evil ways, and not infrequently, bad company. It is for the salvation of those so unfortunately situated that we have established a branch of the Y.W.C.A. in the city. Here large and commodious quarters are provided, fully equipped with gymnasiums, baths, reading rooms, and practically all the comforts of a home.

Physical disability strongly manifests itself among the students. This is due to lack of sufficient exercise, and interest in athletic sports. This condition also accentuates immorality. To circumvent these evils we have formed a minature world student federation. We also have a system virtually, not in name, whereby every girl who belongs to the Association, promises to take charge of a younger sister, whether in the factory or school, and keep track of her, and assist her.

The association is known as the British American Y. W. C. A. Its purpose is to come in contact with these lovely young lives, bring them in, and impart to them the knowledge of all things that are spiritual, and bring them into intimate relationship with Jesus Christ.

Reports Submitted.

Miss M. Dickson, Vice-President of the Association, presented the President's address in the absence of Mrs. A. W. Cressman. The address dealt retrospectively with the history of the Association, from the time of its inauguration up to the present time. It dilated upon the success which has attended the industrial, and spiritual work during the year. Among those deserving of special mention is the new branch which was opened recently in the South end of the city for the accommodation of the factory girls of that district.

Miss McCalla submitted the Secretary-Treasurer's report. It also indicated progress and showed that the financial affairs of the institution were in a very satisfactory condition.

Miss Brock rendered a vocal selection in her usual good form, while a violin duet received a very effective rendering at the hands of Miss Choate and Mr. Nelson.

A hearty vote of thanks, tendered to Miss Cullen, terminated a very enjoyable programme, following which a pleasant half-hour was spent in social enjoyment, at which refreshments were served.

Financial Statement.

It affords me great pleasure to submit my third annual report, which shows a steady improvement in every department.

We have had ore young students than formerly and we are glad of this.

This spring we have beautified the first of bed rooms, the hall and lavatories, which add greatly to their appearance.

The kitchen has been renovated thoroughly and is as comfortable as possible now, with an excellent gas stove, electric fan, and awnings, which greatly facilitate the works there nd comfort ensured.

The stock of linen has been replenished. The coal bill has been greater than ever, but it is all paid for. A larger number of transients are coming each year, which shows we are giving satisfaction to the public. An increase each year is shown below.

From 1905 to 1906, the Board received $2,254.18; from 1906 to 1907, $7,530.69; fro 1907 to 1908, $7,117.67; from 1908 to 1909, $8,293.81; from 1909 to 1910, $7,297.51; from 1910 to 1911, $8,385.26; from 1911 to 1912, $8,286.47.

Following is a detailed account of expenditure from 1911 to 1912::

$3.50 Recipe Free, For Weak Kidneys

Relieves Urinary and Kidney Troubles, Backache, Straining, Swelling, Etc.

Stops Pain in the Bladder, Kidneys and Back

Wouldn't it be nice within a week or so to begin to say goodbye forever to the scalding, dribbling, straining, or too frequent passage of urine; the forehead and the back-of-the-head aches; the stitches and pains in the back; the growing muscle weakness; spots before the eyes; yellow skin; sluggish bowels; swollen eyelids; leg cramps; unnatural short breath; sleeplessness and the despondency?

I have a recipe for these troubles that you can depend on, and if you want to make a quick recovery, you ought to write and get a copy of it. Many a doctor would charge you $3.50 just for writing this prescription, but I have it and will be glad to send it to you entirely free. Just drop me a line like this: Dr. A. E. Robinson, K1610 Luck Building, Detroit Mich., and I will send it by return mail in a plain envelope. As you will see when you get it, this recipe contains only pure, harmless remedies, but it has great healing and pain-conquering power.

It will quickly show its power once you use it, so I think you had better see what it is without delay. I will send you a copy free—you can use it and cure yourself at home.

CONFUSION AT MARKET

No Regularity in Use of Stairs and Doors, With Consequent Crowding—Market Was Small.

SEED POTATOES ARE DEAR

There is not a great deal to be said about this morning's market. On the outside there was but little besides pigs and seed potatoes, and farmers vieing with one another in their efforts to get all that was going for potatoes.

And at the same time there was a heavy demand for the same potatoes but $2.00 a bushel and $2.50 and more a bag took the edge off the eagerness to buy.

To begin with the market was not largely attended. Farmers are out on the land these days. Probably they are already planting potatoes to get in early on the prices that may be ruling for the first of the new crop. At any rate, reports from the country state that there is general activity in the country fields these days, and that alarm clocks have been set back an hour earlier for the benefit of the hired hands.

There was an ordinary supply of butter and eggs, the former selling at from 28 to 30 cents and eggs from 19 to 22 cents. Prices were holding firmly up to 10.30, when the contingent of farmers that came up on the boats, helped to sag prices a little. There is some dissatisfaction heard in regard to the fact that retail dealers in the city have access to market at ten o'clock. A number of householders have remarked that 10.30 or 11 o'clock should be the limit for those who are buying produce to resell in the stores.

There is one matter that needs remedying on the market and that is the confusion that exists in the use of the stairs and doors leading to the market hall. Instead of there being order and regularity, conditions are quite the contrary. Women and men go up and down the same stairs. They have to pass one another although ample stair accommodation has been provided if it were only with used with some sort of system. The south stairs should be used for ascending and the south door for entering the market hall. The north door should be used as an exit and the north stairs for descending. If this is not satisfactory, some other arrangement should be made. The Property committee of the Council has discussed the matter and suggested the posting of signs to point out the way to people. The present would be a good time to begin educating the people, to prevent the crowding the doors and on the stairs that has been noticeable of late. Prices to-day were:—

Eggs, per doz.—19c. to 21c.
Butter, per lb.—28c. to 30c.
Seed potatoes, per bush.—$2.00; per bag, $2.50.
Potatoes, per bag—$2.00.
Pigs, per pair—$7.00.
Baled hay—$19.00.
Farmers' hides—8c.
Butchers' hides—10c.

In the Interests of Conservation

Mr. D. A. McLaughlin Will Secure Facts Regarding Water Supply

Mr. D. A. McLaughlin of the Department of Railways and Canals, met the members of the Central Water Conservation Association on Friday afternoon. Some time ago Mr. W. A. Bowden of the Department, was here in regard to the conservation of the waters in this district and has sent Mr. McLaughlin to secure any facts regarding whatever work may be done in the conservation of the waters in this district, while the present flood is subsiding. He will likely be in the Peterborough district during the next few weeks.

AN EXCELLENT REMEDY.

Baby's Own Tablets are an excellent remedy for little ones. They never fail to relieve baby of stomach and bowel complaints or the many other little ills that worry him. Besides this they are absolutely safe, being guaranteed by a government analyst to contain no opiates or other harmful drugs. Concerning them Mrs. Sam. Legros, Ste. Cecile, Que., writes:— "I have found Baby's Own Tablets an excellent remedy for my little one and would not be without them." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Odd Fishing Article.

Forest and Stream in "The Book of Health," published in 1883, discusses the no breakfast question at considerable length. "Touching breakfasting, whether or no they are to be used, it may be some question, because they are not mentioned in Galen and other ancient authors of Physicke, neither was their appointed by order of the Apostles, but only two meals of the day, noone, at which to dinner and supper. But the temperature of this our country is such that I think it good the Regimentes not to be long fasting. The noble may better bide without food at noone. Children and young men until they come to the age of thirty-five may not be long fasting without nourishment. Men of middle age—that is, from thirty-five to forty-five—may better beare it. Old men, being the decrepity—that is, from fifty to seventy—may best of all abide fasting, but after seventy years they are to be dieted as children."—London Telegraph.

The Scorpion's Fainting Fit.

The scorpion that is placed in the center of a ring of coals does not commit suicide by stinging himself to death as has been claimed. In lands where the scorpion abounds it is a regular pastime among countrymen to sting a scorpion with fire and watch him commit, as is believed, the happy dispatch. Nevertheless the scorpion has the last laugh and not the spectator. The scorpion, though an inhabitant of torrid regions, is so delicately organized that a very slight increase above the normal temperature produces a condition in him analogous to a fainting fit. Driven desperate by the heat, he lashes his tail wildly, giving the impression that he is plunging his sting into his own body. Then he falls, apoplexied. As a presumably dead scorpion has no further interest for the spectators, he is usually left where he has fallen, and after the fire has died down he recovers and crawls away.—Harper's.

A Novel Trap.

A short time ago a hunter found in a patch of woods in Connecticut eleven large blacksnakes tied up in hard knots and stone dead. Two telegraph wires ran through the woods overhead, and a few days before there had been a heavy blast set off in a quarry near by. This broke down the wires and started a colony of blacksnakes from their slumbers in a neighboring ledge. One of the wires was crossed in a distant city by a trolley wire, and hence the broken wires which lay near the snakes' den made a death trap. When the snakes came to the wires trailing on the ground one after another crossed over them, touching the ends of both wires at the same time. They thus "short circuited" them and received a shock which caused death. Immediately upon being shocked each snake curled up in a hard knot, thus opening the circuit and setting the trap again.

Life in Virginia in 1648.

In the old days in this country farming and manufacturing were carried on together to a very large extent. A letter written from Virginia in 1648 gives the following picture of life on the plantation of a certain Captain Matthews, a leading citizen of the colony: "He hath a fine house and all things answerable to it. He sows yearly store of hemp and flax and causes it to be spun. He keeps weavers and hath a tan house, causes leather to be dressed, hath eight shoemakers employed in their trade, hath forty negro servants and brings them up to trades in his house. He yearly sows abundance of wheat, barley, etc. The wheat he selleth at 4 shillings the bushel. He kills store of beeves and sells them to victual the ships when they come thither. He hath abundance of kine, a brave dairy, swine great store and poultry."

Insulting.

"Could you sing a ragtime song?" asked Mr. Lobrow.

"Why, sir," spluttered the musician who takes himself seriously, "s-s-confound your b-b-bone headed impudence!"

"That's a good start," was the complacent rejoinder. "You have a fine idea of the words. Now see if you can put a melody to them."—Washington Star.

Emotion and Locomotion.

Why do we say "hit" in pleasure, "cut" in surprise and "cut" in displeasure or pain? These words are the verbal representation of emotions. Every emotion has certain bodily expressions, some of which are exhibited in movements of the muscles of the face giving the facial expressions, as of fear, anger, pleasure, joy, etc., and some of the facial expressions are associated with other instinctive acts, as movement of the eyes, exclusion of sounds, raising the arms, clapping the hands, etc. In the exclusion of sounds the disgust, vociferates, the "hit" sound, is produced and modified by the action of the muscles of the lips, their action depending upon the facial expression of the emotion. Humanity almost instinctively and we withhold which sounds if we suspect the cause of the emotion. The uttering of pain is instinctive and in the nature of a calling of defense. It has a paralyzing effect on the enemy and, in fact, on every one who hears it. Nobody who has been startled by a woman's scream will forget the momentary paralyzation of muscles and mind which it caused.—New York American.

When The Food Ferments

Chronic dyspepsia is essentially a disease of the intestines rather than of the stomach. The trouble is caused by the food passing too slowly along the alimentary canal and fermenting instead of being digested.

It will be found that the liver is sluggish and the bowels constipated. The fermenting food gives rise to gas, which crowds the lungs and heart, gives rise to belching wind and to smothering sensations. The stomach gets sour, the food repeats and leaves sour taste in the mouth; you feel out of sorts and are unfit for work or pleasure.

By using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills you can get rid of this congested condition of the digestive organs in quick time. The liver is awakened at once, the bowels are regulated and the system is thoroughly rid of the poisonous waste matter which has been causing so much trouble.

A Bit of Railroad History.

"There is a grave in Greenwood cemetery," said an old time railroad man, "the stone at the head of which bears only the name of the man whose remains are buried there, the date of his birth and the date of his death. Yet that man, John Raymond, built the first mile of railroad for commercial use and designed for locomotive power ever put down on the American continent.

"That was in 1828, and that initial mile of railroad was the beginning of the Delaware and Hudson Canal company's railroad between the head of its canal at Honesdale, Pa., and its coal mines at Carbondale. And on that first mile of track the first locomotive to turn a wheel in America was run in August, 1829.

"John Raymond was a native of Walton, Delaware county, N. Y., and died in Scranton, Pa., in 1883. He ought to have a place in railroad history, seems to me."—New York Sun.

Supplanting Mr. Howells.

Professor Brander Matthews at a dinner in New York once said of literary criticism:

"A good deal of it, too, is biased. A good deal of it is like Mr. Walton's. Mr. Walton's daughter, a college girl, wrote, at the age of eighteen, a novel which her father brought out for her at his own expense. During the Christmas holidays Mr. Walton gave a party in his daughter's honor, and at this party the young girl read from an improvised platform chapters out of her book. Her fond old father was carried away by the reading. So tremendously indeed did his admiration for his daughter's talent enkindle him that as the girl read on the man could be heard muttering over and over:

"'Howells be hanged! Howells be hanged!'"—Exchange.

A BABEL OF TONGUES.

Half a Hundred Languages Perhaps in the Philippines.

The natives of the Philippines are known to have at least twenty-five languages, and some students of the ethnology of the islands have expressed the belief that there are more than double that number of distinct tongues. For purposes of study they are generally put in two groups.

First—The languages of the Negritos, supposedly descendants of the aboriginal population of the islands, who are distributed in scattered tribes in the interior of the larger islands.

Second.—The languages of the various Malay tribes which make up the bulk of the population—Christian, Mohammedan and pagan.

It cannot be said that the Philippine languages possess any very considerable literary value. The old native manuscripts inscribed on leaves or strips of cane have practically all been lost. American students of the islands have found the county native literature in religious writings, indifferent poetry and primitive newspapers. The natives themselves are profoundly ignorant for the most part as to their own literature.—New York Times.

A Good Word For Caviar.

Caviar receives a clean bill in the London Lancet, despite the fact that it is regarded by many medical men as "oily, indigestible and unwholesome." Numerous analyses have been made of this sturgeon roe delicacy, which, according to the writer, when averaged, appears to be as follows: Water, 50.93 per cent; protein, 27.92 per cent; fat, 13.59 per cent, and mineral salts, 7.57 per cent. It differs sharply from the flesh of fish by containing a much larger quantity of fat. Moreover, this fat contains the peculiar oily phosphorus compound known as lecithin, which is a stimulant to metabolism, affecting favorably the processes of nutrition. Caviar is, in fact, highly nutritive, and its digestibility has been determined, the time taken for its absorption being relatively short. If there is anything to be said unfavorably of caviar it is that its constituents err slightly on the side of richness.

Flogging.

The Jewish rabbis had a legend which carries corporal punishment back to the days of our first parents, which is quaintly reflected in that modern schoolboy's play upon names, "Adam Seth Eve Cain Abel."

Of course there is, too, the warning of Solomon, "He that spareth the rod hateth his son," or the old Egyptian proverb, "The back of a lad is made that he may hearken to him that beats it," but if we must go to history alone the earliest records belong to the Romans, who practiced flogging in several degrees of severity.

There were the furnis, a flat strip of leather, a comparatively mild persuader; the scutica, a harsher instrument of twisted parchment, and the flagellum, a cruel scourge of leather thongs.

The Barking Wolf.

The prairie wolf, the coyote of the Mexicans, is the American representative of the old world jackal. It is thirty-six to forty inches long, with a tail measuring sixteen to eighteen inches. Its color is usually a yellowish gray on the back and sides, with black cloudings. The under parts and inside of limbs are of a dirty white tint. The cry is a sort of snapping bark, and for this reason the animal is known as the barking wolf. It lives and breeds in burrows and has its young in April, often ten at a time. It hunts in packs and is very fleet.

Passing Counterfeits.

Johnny—Say, papa, passing counterfeit money is unlawful, isn't it? Papa—Yes. Johnny—Well, papa, if a man was walking along the street and saw a ten dollar counterfeit bill upon the sidewalk and did not pick it up wouldn't he be guilty of passing counterfeit money and couldn't he be arrested and put in jail? Papa—More likely the lunatic asylum. Now you may go to bed, my son.—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

Making It Personal.

"Did you ever long for death?" asked the soulful, dyspeptic young man of the practical young woman. It was the fourth long call he had made on her that week, and she was sleepy.

"Whose death do you mean?" she asked in a dry, discouraging tone.

The One Perfect Food

The whole wheat grain is the one perfect, complete food given to man. This is affirmed by dietetic experience. It contains all the chemical elements that are found in the human body and in about the same proportion. If it is a complete, perfect food, why mix it with other grains?

Nothing could be purer, more wholesome or more nutritious than

SHREDDED WHEAT

It is the whole wheat, nothing added, nothing taken away— no yeast, no baking powder, no grease and no chemicals of any kind—just pure whole wheat made digestible by steam cooking, shredding, and baking.

For breakfast, heat the Biscuit in the oven a few moments to restore crispness; then pour hot milk over it and salt or sweeten to suit the taste. It is delicious for any meal with stewed prunes, baked apples, sliced pineapple, berries or other fruits. At your grocer's.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

THE WARM WEATHER ALLOWED TWIRLERS TO CUT LOOSE

Manager Templin's Heaving Staff all Took Liberties With Their Salary Whips Yesterday and put Lots of Stuff on the Ball---Practice was the Best Yet.

The hot sun suited Manager Templin and his White Caps down to the ground yesterday and the workout at the Exhibition grounds in the afternoon was the best session yet. The warm weather put some "pep" into the squad and they loosened up all along the line. The pitchers especially felt the influence of the bright sun and took more liberties with their salary whips than in the other practises. They felt like putting something on the ball and Manager Templin told them to go to it if they felt right. Most of them took advantage of the opportunity to let loose some slants and as a result they had a little on the batters, most of whom had not faced a curve ball this season. Baver, Schaeffer, Davis and Bartlett took their turn on the mound and all of them opened up some. Baver had his curve ball working nicely and showed good control. Schaeffer had lots of stuff on his offerings and occasionally used a "cross-fire" that was puzzling. It is a good addition to any pitcher's repertoire. Davis and Bartlett employed some bewildering kinks and the latter slipped in some beautiful drops that broke nicely. Altogether the heavers had the better of the argument. The curves looked very funny to the batters and will do so until they get their eye on the breaks.

All the regular squad had their turn at the bat while all three catchers handled the offerings of the pitching department. Pitchers Quinlan, Cresswell and Scull spent the afternoon chasing flies with the outfielders.

A half hour's fielding practise wound up the afternoon. Catchers Trout and Mooney worked at the plate Dolan and Connolly had a turn at first, Templin and Ulmer cavorted around second, Tully was at short and Benzie and Hartman alternated at third. The squad shot the ball around the bases in lively fashion and ate up ground balls with remarkable accuracy considering the bad ground. The outfielders worked out at the same time, pulling off some pretty catches.

The weeding out process commenced this morning, when Connollly, the first base candidate from Newburgh, N.Y., was given his release. Dolan, the Wilmington boy, has displayed such form in covering the bag and at the bat, to say nothing of his experience and record ,that there was no room for Connolly and he was let go this morning.

However ,the size of the squad has not altered as Pitcher Johnnie Derr the good left-hander from the Haverhill Club arrived last night and was out in uniform to-day. Templin knows what Derr can do and is delighted to have this boy with the White aCps. He has been a battery mate of Brode's and the Tamaqua boy will probably handle his offerings this season.

R. A. CONNOLLY, candidate for the first base position on the White Caps, who was released by Manager Templin this morning. He hails from Newburgh, N.Y.

Manager Templin expects great things from Southpaw Derr who reported last night. He is in fine shape now, having been with the Haverhill team since April 8th and is therefore the most advanced of the White Cap gunning department.

There was another big crowd of fans on hand yesterday afternoon to see the workout. Nearly all the officers of the club were down and they, as well as the fans generally, seemed delighted with the way the boys stepped around.

When they get unto the Oval next week, the Templin crowd will show the talent some classy fielding if you can judge by the pretty stuff they are pulling off down at the lower grounds.

Sizing up the Petes from what they have shown so far they look as if they will be strong on the offensive. There are some sweet hitters in the bunch and with Templin, Schwartz, Beard and Dolan as the clean-up crew, some pitchers' hides will be nailed to the fence this season. And the rest of the outfit seem to be able to hit, too.

Don't mention ice cream to the squad if you don't want to get in wrong. Jimmy Beard is the reason. The outfielder invited the gang to have some ice cream last night and after leading them carefully past all the cream factories on George street, steered them as far as his boarding house on Sherbrooke street, and with a "good-night" vanished into the interior ,leaving a bunch of leg-weary and foot-sore ball players to walk back up town again. Bill Schaeffer has a blister on his heel and he is out after Beard with a club to-day.

The infield work this morning was marked by all kinds of sensational stunts, and Manager Templin was delighted with the way the inner works performed. "There won't be an infield in the league that will have anything on this bunch for a minute," he remarked to the Examiner after the practice.

First baseman Dolan is rapidly rounding into shape. The big fellow has to reduce some and he is working hard to get down to weight. He put a mile of track behind him yesterday and a few more climbs of that kind will have him down somewhere in PITHCER NED BARTLETT, the young Rochester, N.Y., twirler, who is trying for a place on Manager Templins heaving staff. Bartlett had a great record in the Rochester City League last year.

Junior Soccer Players To Get a Chance Will Form a District

During the past week it has become known that there are a number of junior players who are anxious to get into the game, but the opportunity has been lacking. In order to give the boys a chance to realise their ambition and to provide them with proper encouragement it has been decided to form a junior district in this city, in connection with the Midland Football League. In the junior series of this league a handsome silver trophy is competed for annually, and this fact alone serves as a stimulus which puts as much speed and snap into their games as in the senior department. With the large number of Association players who are under twenty-one years of age, and who have a deep interest in the game, there should be no difficulty in having a district of three or four teams right here in the city, where the expenses of each train would be very trifling.

The above remarks show that the initial step has been taken in the movement to train the juniors that they may become good seniors, and hence all the soccer teams in the city are very desirous for complete success of the undertaking.

The next step in the right direction will be made next Monday night at the Y.M.C.A., at eight o'clock, when all the junior players and any who are at all interested in them, will be assembled to form teams, and arrange a schedule of games. The Secretary of the Church League and the Secretary of the Midland League will be present, and will make every explanation necessary.

So now it is up to the boys to spread the glad news abroad that they are to have a district of their very own, and to bring their friends to the meeting. Junior football players, Y.M.C.A., Monday night, eight o'clock, sharp.

White Cap Notes

At the afternoon practice yesterday Templin gave his infielders a little more time at fielding and in spite of the bad ground, some snappy work was pulled off. Tully was again in the limelight with his spectacular stops and speedy throw and the rest of the bunch all cut loose for a while demonstrating that there will be a sweet infield when they get working smoothly.

Riverside Park is drying up nicely and Manager Templin will be able to commence skinning the base paths and putting the diamond in shape early next week. The players like the look of the grounds.

Manager Schaeffer and Coach Dolan of the White Caps basketball team had their squad up at the Y.M.C.A. last night getting a line on the Brownies-Nemo game. The ball tossers will meet a Y.M.C.A. quintette next week and there is keen competition for places on the team.

Scull was bothered with a slightly sore arm yesterday afternoon and did not take his turn on the slab, although he had a drilling in the morning, as did Cresswell, the local southpaw.

RIGHT NOW

What are the requirements of your Motor Boat for this summer? From tiller rope to engine make a careful overhaul.

How's the Engine? If it was not in first-class shape last fall, you don't want to start the season with it. A weak spot or break may mean a tie-up for the best part of the summer.

Why not equip your Motor Boat with a Fairbanks-Morse Engine—the acme of satisfaction?

DON'T BE BASHFUL

Ask your friend who owns one. Ask any one of the thousands of owners of Fairbanks-Morse Engines. We do not ask you to take our word for it.

After looking into the merits of the Fairbanks-Morse two-cycle Marine Engine we are confident you will purchase one—then your engine troubles will cease—for it is known to give absolute satisfaction.

It is an engine that is valued because it is dependable. Easy-running—lack of vibration—careful workmanship—are its strong characteristics.

NEWS FROM THE LEAGUE CIRCUIT

HAMILTON, MAY 3.—The Hamilton Canadian League squad was completed yesterday afternoon when Martin Killilea, the little Boston youngster, who made so good here last year reported. Marty had been detained at home by the illness of his mother, leaving only when Mrs. Killilea was on the road to recovery. The little fellow has taken on some weight since last fall, and is in prime shape, in fact, he expects to jump right in and show all his old form. His arrival completes the lot of players who will battle for positions on the local club, Manager Lee having decided to let go of all other players under contract with the exception of Chick Mueller, the former Berlin pitcher, purchased this spring from Saginaw. Mueller is a holdout and will likely be sent back to Saginaw as the terms of the sale stipulated that the deal would be called off if the player refused to report.

The local squad, rounded out by Killilea, now is as follows:

Catchers—Hess, Fisher.

Pitchers — Teed, Rose, Garlow, Lloyd, Mollineaux, Kehoe and Holtkamp.

First Base—Mangan.

Infielders—Keenan, Killilea, Martin, Maguire, Marshall.

Outfielders— Manager Lee, Corns, Farrell, Boyd, Purdy.

Utility—Murphy.

FLINT, MICH., MAY 2.—Although Flint outhit the Berlin champs in their exhibition game here this afternoon they were unable to connect safely when hits were needed, and the Canadians won by a score of 5 to 1. The visitors secured all their tallies off Volts, who occupied the hill during the first five innings.

Weeder, who succeeded him, held them hitless. Volts hit two men and issued three passes, and free transportation was invariably followed by hits. The Vehics filled the bases with two down in the fifth inning, but Dabria grabbed Kraft's smash to centre and the opportunity to score was lost. Brewer led in hitting with a double and two singles. Bullick, of the Berlin team, was second, with two singles.

BROWNIES CHAMPIONS

The Brownies captured the city intermediate basket ball championship last night when they defeated the Nemos in a good game by 25 points to 15. The checking was close and hard throughout and both teams showed good form, the shooting of Hanwell of the winners being a feature. Mr. J. J. Thompson refereed and the teams were as folows:

Brownies—Hanwell, Nicholls, forwards; Dounie, centre; Darling, Irwin, backs. Nemos—Hill, Long, forwards, Gilbert, centre, Rogers and Howden, backs.

RAILWAY NOTES

In speaking of all these occurrences as being the extension of the Clover Bar seam as far west as Morinville, it would perhaps be misleading. This seam might not extend very far; but another seam within a few feet either above or below would continue until replaced by another and so form the Clover Bay horizon. There may be localities where the seam thins out so as not to be recognised.

As the majority of the mines in the Edmonton district are on the Clover Bar seam, an attempt has been made to show the amount of cover that it has over a limited area. The topographical work of the Grand Trunk engineers has facilitated this very much.

A meeting of the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway is to be held in London, Eng., on April 18th, to authorize the directors to exercise the powers, involving the expenditure of $30,000,000 conferred by the legislation passed at the recent session of Parliament.

Mr. Briesette, representing the McLaren Company of Montreal, is in Transcona, Man., superintending the work of this Company's contract on the National Transcontinental shops.

The first test of the concrete pier which supports the centre of the new Grand Trunk bridge at the mouth of the Humber River, when the river broke up early last Saturday morning, was also an unusually severe one. A great accumulation of piles and debris around the structure, together with the angle at which the pier is placed in the stream, had caused some fears of a blockade at this point, especially as the ice has been exceptionally thick this season, but the bridge withstood the test with complete success.

ANNIVERSARY SERVICES AT ST. ANDREW'S

The seventy-ninth anniversary of the founding of Presbyterianism in Peterborough will be observed tomorrow, in St. Andrew's church, when Rev. James Ross, D.D., of London, will conduct the services. There will be special music by the choir under the leadership of Mr. Herbert C. Treneer. Rev. Dr. Ross is minister of the largest Presbyterian church in London, Ont. Dr. Ross is a Scottish Canadian, and ranks among the really strong men in the Presbyterian ministry. He is a excellent preacher and lecturer, and will be heard to advantage both to-morrow and on Monday evening, when he will deliver his lecture on "Scottish Life and Character." The Clans will no doubt foregather for a lecture on such a subject. The lecture will be followed by a social hour. It is like the Presbyterians to take some mental pabulum along with their social joys.

The present pastorate is the eighth in the history of St. Andrew's, Mr. Rollins' predecessors averaging 11 years each.

REGULAR MEETING OF THE P. F. A.

Railway Wreck Brings Disappointment—Local Orators Filled the Bill.

A meeting of the Protestant Federation Association was held last evening, the regular meeting night, the first Friday in the month. Alderman Johnston occupied the chair. A gentleman from Toronto was expected to address the meeting, but owing to the accident on the Canadian Pacific Railway, was not present, and considerable disappointment was felt by the large number in attendance. However, Mr. Burnham, M.P., who was on hand, attempted to hold the attention of the gathering by a talk on a number of questions, including the bilingual schools matter, and the Lancaster bill. Mr. Burnham finds considerable dissatisfaction amongst his followers over his attitude in the house and he took this opportunity to right himself so far as he could, in the eyes of the brethren. He condemned Mr. Whitney's attitude on bilingual schools.

Rev. Mr. Riddiford, perhaps in his capacity of spiritual adviser, advocated the incorporation of the association and other topics. However, Mr. Burnham, M.P., and Rev. Mr. Riddiford, kept the ball rolling until ten o'clock, when intelligence was received that the orator of the evening would not be present.

There is some talk of the local organization being incorporated; and a committee has been appointed for the investigation of alleged leakages of the proceedings of the star chamber.

LIFT LOCK WILL OPEN NEXT WEEK

Superintendent Meant May and Not June as Given Out

A few days ago the Examiner was informed that the Lift Lock would be opened on June 10th. Mr. McClennan stated to-day that he meant May 10th, and the mistake arose through looking at the June leaf of a calendar. The Lift Lock will be opened some time next week, possibly on Wednesday. Last year's opening was on May 7.

DR. BARCLAY OF MONTREAL IN ST. PAUL'S

The 77th anniversary of St. Paul's church will be observed to-morrow, when the Rev. Dr. Barclay of Montreal, will be the preacher. Dr. Barclay is a preacher of note and has occupied a large place in the educational and religious life of the Dominion since coming to Canada from Scotland, many years ago, where he had been minister of the famous St. Cuthbert's old Keill church in Edinburgh.

OBITUARY

MR. DAVID B. CROWLEY.

The death occurred at 8 o'clock this morning after a long illness of Mr. David B. Crowley of North Monaghan.

The deceased gentleman, who was seventy-one years of age, was well known in Peterborough and district, having carried on the farming industry in Otonabee for a great number of years. He has for the past few years lived a retired life in North Monaghan.

The late Mr. Crowley, who was a single man, is survived by one brother, who is at present residing in the States.

The funeral will take place from the residence of Mr. John Lynch, corner of Park and Braidwood avenue on Monday, May 6th at nine o'clock a.m. and proceed to the Sacred Heart church, and from thence to St. Peter's cemetery for interment.

PARKS OPEN TO PUBLIC MONDAY

City's Breathing Spots Have Undergone a Complete Renovation —A Tradition Recalled

For several weeks past the caretakers of the park reserves of the city have laboured assiduously in the work of preparing their respective areas of landscape and bringing them up to a condition that would warrant the reception of the public at an early date. To attain this desirable end, considerable labour was involved, and many obstacles had to be surmounted. The chief among these being the weather, and the predatory instincts of vandals, who, in spite of warning notices, persisted in bisecting the sward with an exclusive path of their own.

A Park Tradition.

At Victoria Park, Mr. McGuire, the caretaker, was forced to resurrect the old sign boards from under the bandstand. These were promiscuously displayed at stragetic points, and supplemented by the watchful eye of Mr. McGuire, had the desired effect of assuaging the cross-country methods employed by those possessing little or no respect for the beautifying aspects of the city parks.

An old tradition is recalled by the presence of the sign-boards, upon which hangs an old story concerning a lady residing in the vicinity of Victoria Park. When the sign-boards—warning would-be trespassers to keep off the grass—were first introduced, a few years ago, the party in question objected to their use, mainly upon the grounds that they were a beauty-destroying element. Finding that her verbal objections to the caretaker had failed to touch a responsive chord, it is alleged that she persuaded a couple of small boys, by means of a monetary consideration, to remove the objectionable signs from the trees, and destroy them, if possible. That this plan was partially successful was made plain to the caretaker when he returned to work next morning. A close scrutiny of the boards as they now exist will reveal the fact that they have been roughly used at one stage of their service. In all probability they will be removed voluntary as the season advances.

Parks Open to Public.

On Monday the parks will be thrown open to the general public. This even will be observed without ceremony of any kind, and will no doubt be the occasion for a large influx of people to the city's breathing spots.

It is only a matter of a few days until the tulip buds will burst forth into bloom. These will be seen to much better advantage in Victoria Park, probably than anywhere else. The shoots are already several inches high.

The park benches, the home of the nomadic gentry and the gushing young maiden in the twilight have been repaired and in some cases replaced. These, with numerous other improvements, and added features, will render the city's parks ore acceptable to the general public, as a place to while away a pleasant hour than they ever did before.

Cheese Factory Burned.

Brockville, May 6.—Willow Cheese Factory, at South Augusta, one of the oldest and best equipped in the Brockville section, caught fire Saturday by a spark from the chimney and was totally destroyed, entailing a loss of $7,000, with an insurance of $4,000. The maker, James Richardson, who lived in the building, in attempting to save his effects and the stock of cheese, was severely burned about the face and hands. Farmers of the locality saved St. George's Anglican Church, close by, which caught fire several times. The factory was owned by James Bissell & Sons of Brockville.

Cobourg Man Drowned.

Cobourg, May 6.—That Ira D. Mills was accidentally drowned was the verdict returned by a coroner's jury empanelled by Dr. Elliot to enquire into the cause of his death.

Mills' body was accidentally discovered in the water near the west pier Friday.

Mills, who was employed at the woollen mills, disappeared about five weeks ago. It is believed he leaves a wife and family in England.

Will Examine Ports.

Ottawa, May 6.—In the course of a month the Government steamer Minto will go on a trip to Hudson Bay and Straits, taking along an expedition to investigate as to the relative merits of Port Nelson and Fort Churchill as the terminus of the Hudson Bay Railway. Captains Anderson and Bartlett will be in command.

Launching at Kingston.

Kingston, May 6.—The new Government tug Bellechasse, now being built at the Kingston ship building yards, will be launched on Saturday.

TWO DEAD AND 15 INJURED WHEN FACTORY WALL FELL

Wall Buckled Under Heavy Pressure of Extra Flooring and Many Were Buried in the Debris.

POLICE TO THE RESCUE

Toronto, May 6.—Two lives were instantly crushed out and fifteen people were more or less seriously injured on Saturday morning when the south wall of the Wm. Neilson Co.'s factory on Gladstone avenue, south of College street, collapsed, and carried timbers, lumber and human beings with it.

The casualty list is as follows:

Dead.

Mrs. Eva Anderson, aged 20, 1,328A Dufferin street.

Luego Scenza, aged 19, Italian, derrickman, 749 Brock avenue.

Injured.

(In Western Hospital.)

Mrs. Annie Thompson, aged 45, 607 Dufferin street, badly bruised head, body and limbs, suffering from shock.

Miss Emily Watson, aged 18, 166 Sunset avenue, gashed scalp and nose, injuries to breast and back, suffering from shock.

Miss Lottie Carey, aged 27, 39 De Grassi street, cuts about head and face.

Miss Susan Burns, 115 Summerhill avenue, aged 22, scalp wound and bruises about head and legs, semi-conscious until 4 p.m. yesterday.

Miss Mabel Bowman, aged 23, 771 Gladstone avenue, suffering from shock.

William Lammy, aged 28, carpenter, 12 Borden street, broken legs.

Michele (Joe) Terraigni, builders' laborer, 15 Arthur street, aged 51, slight bruises.

Charles Ferguson, aged 22, carpenter, 5 Kimberley avenue, eyes injured, cut and bruised about head and face.

(Taken Home.)

Miss Alma Ryan, 51 Bellevue avenue, aged 19, suffering from shock.

Miss Emily Woosley, 47 Wyndham street.

Miss Pearl Allan, 17 Beaconsfield avenue.

Mrs. Smale, of the paper box department, slightly injured by a falling beam while trying to aid in the rescue.

Miss Irene Lawson, 110 Bellewoods avenue.

The piling on Friday of what is estimated as ninety tons of hardwood flooring upon the top floors of the building is believed by the city's building inspector to have caused the collapse. Mr. Neilson, sr., would not make a statement.

The wall broke first at its eastern end and pitched down toward the west where it came met by the wreckage from that section. A score of employes were caught in the avalanche and carried into the basement, where the crumbled mass closed over them.

Screams and groans followed the collapse. Great clouds of mortar-dust surrounded the place and shut off the view of the havoc wrought by the disaster.

P. C. Collins was standing at the corner of Brock and Dundas streets, when he heard a crash like thunder and turning saw the wall tumbling to the ground. He promptly turned in an alarm to the fire department and then rushed to a nearby house and called for the police ambulances.

Mrs. Eva Anderson, a newly-married young woman, was the first to be taken out. She was dead. Louis Shime, an Italian, was also dead when the men reached him, but fifteen others owe their lives to the valient efforts of firemen, police and workmen on the building.

William Lammy, a carpenter, who was working on the fifth storey, noticed the wall start to bulge and jumped three storeys at the back of the building to a two-storey annex. Both of his legs were broken, but if he had remained on the roof where he was he would have been quite safe.

Several of the workers fainted in the pit but were revived with water and whisky and went back to the task with renewed vigor. The men tore frantically at the wreckage as feeble groans issued from the bottom of the black hole. Chief Thompson encouraged the men to greater efforts and had great difficulty in preventing other willing people from throwing bricks on the workers. Motor and horse ambulances from every quarter of the city rushed the patients to the Western Hospital where H. C. Tomlin, superintendent, had a large staff of doctors and nurses waiting to treat them.

Last night the Western Hospital, where all the maimed victims of the disaster were taken, said all were doing as well as could be expected.

Dr. J. E. Elliott opened an inquest at the morgue at 10 a.m. this morning, but will adjourn for a week so that full evidence of all the circumstances surrounding the disaster may be secured.

A great many points will have to be gone into thoroughly and many varying theories fully considered before any conclusions as to the cause of the disaster can be made by the city authorities.

Mutinous Seamen Discharged.

Portsmouth, Eng., May 6.—The seamen of the White Star liner Olympic who quit that vessel after the strike of the firemen, were allowed to go on Saturday by the magistrates sitting in the police court here, where the men were tried on a charge of mutiny. The magistrates decided that the charges were proved against the 34 mutineers, but expressed the opinion that it would be inexpedient to imprison or fine the defendants under the circumstances which had arisen prior to their refusal to obey orders.

PLEADS SELF DEFENCE.

Arthur Ellis Confident That He Will Be Acquitted.

Minden, May 6.—Arthur Ellis is confident that his plea of self-defence will be accepted when he is arraigned before Magistrate Fielding at Lindsay on Thursday or Friday for the murder of Lewis Porter. The inquest will be concluded here on Monday night, and at its conclusion Ellis will be taken to Lindsay by Constable Welch. Provincial Detective Reburn will remain for the inquest and will be at the preliminary hearing before the magistrate.

Ellis stated in his cell at the lockup here yesterday that he had faith in his plea of self-defence. He denied that the shooting was a result of a family feud, and also denied that he had said to anyone that he expected to be hanged for the crime.

Five shots were fired, he says, of which he fired three after Porter had fired at him twice. He was sure that Porter had gone out on the day of the murder with the intention of getting a shot at himself. He said he did not know why he carried the body so far from the road after he had killed Porter, as he could have taken it and sunk it in Gull Lake, nearby. He admitted that he and Porter had had several arguments, but stated that he and his victim were on speaking terms till the last.

Several witnesses have been subpoenaed for the inquest to-night and Dr. T. A. White will give the result of the post mortem examination. Charles Wood also has been summoned to tell at what time he heard five shots fired.

Left Over Ten Millions.

New York, May 6.—The will of Benjamin Guggenheim, who perished in the Titanic disaster, was filed yesterday in the Surrogate Court. The amount of property is not stated, except as being more than $10,000,000. After disposing of more than $10,000,000 to various charities, the will disposes of the residue—one-third to his widow, Mrs. Flora Guggenheim, and the other two-thirds equally divided among his children. His widow and two brothers, Simon and William, are named as executors. The will was executed Dec. 3, 1908.

In Hope of Finding Further "Titanic" Victims

RABBI GOT WRONG BODIES

Halifax, May 6.—The search for Titanic bodies is to be continued and the Government steamship Montmagny will sail to-day, relieving the Minia, which is expected to arrive with less than twenty bodies to-day. The White Star officials tried to get another steamship, but failed. The two cable ships are required for their regular work, the French cable requiring the Mackay-Bennett, while the Minia is also needed elsewhere.

Efforts were made to obtain the steamship Seal, which has wireless equipment, but these proved futile. As a last recourse an application was made to the Dominion Government for the Montmagny, which has been lying here for some time undergoing repairs. This work was about concluded. At first the officials refused to allow the Montmagny, but a request was made direct to Hon. R. L. Borden and through him to the Minister of Marine, and the steamship was ordered to get ready. Barges have been alongside all day at the dockyard coaling the Montmagny and she will be ready to sail this afternoon.

The Montmagny is about four knots faster than either of the cable ships and is well adapted for the job she will have in hand. Ten days' supply of provisions will be taken along. The Government steamer in prosecuting her search will cruise along the edge of the gulf stream, and it is expected that the bodies will be found in cold water as far north perhaps as 100 miles from the place where the Titanic went down.

The Mackay-Bennett reported them drifting northeasterly and the Montmagny's cruise will be in that direction. A conference was held yesterday with the captain of the Mackay-Bennett so that the commander of the Montmagny will be possessed of all the information at that officer's disposal. Captain Peter Johnson, in charge of the lighthouse service on this coast, an experienced navigator, will be on board the Montmagny.

Rabbi Got Wrong Bodies.

Halifax, May 6.—A new development has transpired regarding the bodies taken from the Fairview Cemetery by Hebrews while the bodies were there awaiting interment.

The Hebrews were required by the authorities to return them to the morgue. This was done. It now appears that the bodies taken were not all Hebrews. Since the order for interment some of them have been identified and it is held that they are not those of Hebrews.

The Attorney-General, it is understood, will take steps to secure payment for damages to the coffins in the changes to which they have been subjected. The matter will come up again to-day.

Big Soap Merger.

St. Stephen, N.B., May 6.—A big commercial deal was completed here last week when the St. Croix Soap Manufacturing Co. at St. Stephen amalgamated with John Tayler & Co. of Toronto. The new corporation will be known as the Canadian Soaps, Limited, and is capitalized at $2,000,000, a majority of the stock being held in St. Stephen. None of the stock will be placed on the market.

J. E. Ganong of St. Stephen is president, and the directors are: C. W. Young and G. W. Ganong, St. Stephen; Henry Wright, A. W. Tayler, M. J. Taylor and A. C. Taylor of Toronto. Each establishment will be run under its present management. The Ontario and western business will be handled from Toronto and the Quebec, Maritime Provinces and West India trade from St. Stephen.

Gomez is Rebel President.

El Paso, Texas, May 6.—Emilio Vasques Gomez was declared Provisional President of Mexico shortly after noon Saturday, and established his provisional capital in the customs house in Juarez, where Francisco Madero established his provisional capital May 10 last year.

He appointed Col. Pasqual Orozco, father of the generalissimo of the rebels, Minister of War, and Lic Moreno, Canton of Yucatan, Minister of Foreign Relations.

The rest of the Cabinet will be named to-day.

Gomez came here Friday night from San Antonio, in response to a telegram dated May 4 from Pasqual Orozco. He went to Juarez shortly before noon Saturday. A telegram from Gen. Orozco congratulating him on assuming his duties was received by Gomez shortly after reaching Juarez.

B. C. Scared Still.

Nelson, B.C., May 6.—Considerable alarm has followed a statement by William Cockley of the Kootenay, an entomologist that wood ticks, which abound in British Columbia, carry germs which caused spinal meningitis and beri-beri, and that the bite of the insects is frequently fatal.

Lesson of the Titanic.

The Hague, May 6.—The Government bill providing for an increase of life-saving appliances on vessels, which the Minister of Commerce will shortly introduce, will apply, not only to Dutch ships, but to all foreign vessels embarking passengers at Dutch ports.

SUFFRAGETTES ON PARADE

20,000 of Them in Remarkable Procession Along Fifth Avenue

MARCHED TILL DARK

New York, May 6.—With more than twenty thousand women and several thousand men in line the Woman Suffrage parade which started up Fifth avenue at a late hour Saturday afternoon was not finished when darkness fell. At the last moment the parade, which was expected to have about 15,000 marchers, was found to be growing rapidly all along the line.

Preparations had been made for the assignment of additional marchers, but not for the number who joined the movement in the last hour of the formations of the various divisions.

There were suffragettes — militant and non-militant—active workers in the campaign and those who were merely sympathetic who marched to combat the idea that "only a handful of women want the ballot."

The line of march from Washington square to Carnegie Hall was packed. From the windows of Fifth avenue there flew flags in honor of the occasion, and every window that gave a view of the avenue was a grandstand that applauded as the women passed in review.

The personnel of the parade, aside from the various shades of suffrage belief represented, presented a perfect democracy embracing women from almost every walk of life.

Women from the farming districts marched side by side with women whose names are widely known, are representative of great wealth and proud social distinction, under the banner of sympathetic interest of the New York State Suffrage Association, headed by Miss Harriet May Mills, president, and Miss May Morrison, acting as grand marshal.

Women who represent the riches and the old Knickerbocker aristocracy of New York City marched with the same degree of enthusiasm as the long line of working women and the hosts from the east side.

Delegations from the six suffrage states and good sized bodies from ten other states where women are asking for the vote, lent to the parade a holiday aspect.

From the time the big suffrage army moved from under the arch at Washington square at 5 o'clock until nearly 8.30, when the army reached Carnegie Hall, after its two and a half mile walk, Fifth avenue presented a moving picture of brilliant color.

Landed at Last.

To Look Into Merger.

Ottawa, May 6.—The Minister of Finance has not been officially notified of the proposed merger of the Royal Bank of Canada and of the Traders' Bank of Canada, which has been decided upon by the directors of both institutions.

While the proposal will have to be finally passed upon by the Minister of Finance and the Treasury Board, it is not likely to come before the Government for a month or more. At least 30 days must elapse before the shareholders of the two institutions will have ratified the merger, and the formal application to the Minister for approval can only be made after the shareholders' meeting.

Hon. W. T. White will, it is understood, insist upon a very thorough explanation of all the circumstances and investigation of the condition of the two banks before he issues his certificate to allow the absorption of the Traders' Bank by the Royal.

Judge Mabee's Condition.

Toronto, May 6.—At midnight Dr. Bruce and Dr. Elliott made the following statement:

"At midnight Judge Mabee's condition is somewhat improved, and the outlook is slightly more hopeful."

Dr. W. F. Caven, with Dr. J. E. Elliott and Dr. Herbert Bruce, issued the following bulletin at 4 o'clock yesterday:

"Judge Mabee has held his own for the last 24 hours. His condition is still critical."

Convicted of Manslaughter.

Port Huron, Mich., May 6.—George Eason of Petrolea, Ont., convicted of manslaughter in connection with the death last winter of Thomas Major, a local yachtsman, was on Saturday sentenced to from four to fifteen years in the State Reformatory at Ionia, with a recommendation that the maximum period be five years.

Nervousness And Dyspepsia Cured By "Fruit-a-tives"

WARKWORTH, Ont., MAY 9TH 1911

"My trouble was extreme Nervousness, brought on by Indigestion or Dyspepsia, from which I suffered in the worst form.

I asked Mr. Hunter, my druggist, about "Fruit-a-tives" and he advised me to try them.

I took several boxes and am pleased to say I am now enjoying fine health.

I honestly believe I owe my health to "Fruit-a-tives" and strongly advise anyone suffering from Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Nervousness, or Sleeplessness, to commence using "Fruit-a-tives" and continue this remedy until a cure is accomplished".

KEITH OF THE BORDER

A TALE OF THE PLAINS

Copyright, 1911, by McClure & Co. 1912

Hope was not the only woman on board, yet a glance at the others was sufficient to decide their status, even had their freedom of manner and loud talking not made it equally obvious. Fearful lest she might be mistaken for one of the same class, she remained in silence, her veil merely lifted enough to enable her to peer out through the grimy window at the barren view slipping slowly past. This consisted of the bare prairie, brown and desolate, occasionally intersected by small watercourse, the low hills rising and falling like waves to the far horizon. Few incidents broke the dead monotony; occasionally a herd of antelope appeared in the distance silhouetted against the sky-line, and once they fairly crept for an hour through a mass of buffalo; grazing so close that a fusilade of guns sounded from the front of the train. A little farther along she caught a glimpse of a troop of wild horses dashing recklessly down into a sheltering ravine. Yet principally all that met her straining eyes was sterile desolation. Here and there a great ugly water tank reared its hideous shape beside the track, the engine always pausing for a fresh supply. Beside it was invariably a pile of coal, a few construction cars, a hut half buried under earth, loop-holed and barricaded, with several rough men loafing about, heavily armed and inquisitive. A few of these points had once been terminal, the surrounding scenery evidencing past glories by piles of tin cans, and all manner of debris, with occasionally a vacant shack, left deserted and forlorn.

Wearied and heartsick, Hope turned away from this outside dreariness to contemplate more closely her neighbours on board, but found them scarcely more interesting. Several were playing cards, others moodily staring out of the windows, while a few were laughing and talking with the girls, their conversation inane and puctuated with profanity. One man was figuring on a scratch pad, and Hope decided he must be an engineer employed on the line; others she classed as small merchants, saloon-keepers, and frontier riff-raff. They would glance curiously at her as they marched up and down the narow aisle, but her veil, and averted face, prevented even the boldest from speaking. Once she addressed the conductor, and the man who was figuring turned and looked back at her, evidently attracted by the soft note of her voice. But he made no effort at advances, returning immediately to his pad, oblivious to all else.

It was growing dusk, the outside world, now consisting of level plains, fading into darkness, with a few great stars burning overhead. Trainsmen lit the few smoking oil lamps screwed against the sides of the car, and its occupants became little more than dim shadows. All by this time were fatigued into silence, and several were asleep, finding such small comfort as was possible on the cramped seats. Hope glanced toward the heretofore noisy group at the rear—the girl nearest her rested with unconscious head pillowed upon the shoulder of her man friend, and both were sleeping. How haggard and ghastly the woman's powdered face looked, with the light just above it, and all semblance of joy gone. It was as though a mask had been taken off. Out in the darkness the engine whistled sharply and then came to a bumping stop at some desert station. Through the black window a few lanterns could be seen flickering about, and there arose the sound of gruff voices speaking. The sleepers inside, aroused by the sharp stop, rolled over and swore, seeking easier postures. Then the front door opened, and slammed shut, and a new passenger entered. He came down the aisle, glancing carelessly, sank into the seat directly opposite Hope. He was a broad-shouldered man, his coat buttoned to the throat, with strong face showing clearly beneath the broad hat brim, and lighted up with a pair of shrewd, kindly eyes. The conductor came through, nodded at him, and passed on. Hope thought he must be some official of the road, and ventured to break the prolonged silence with a question:

"Could you tell me how long it will be before we reach Sheridan?"

She had partly pushed aside her veil in order to speak more clearly, and the man, turning at sound of her voice, took off his hat, his searching eyes quizzical.

"Well, no, I can't, madam," the words coming with a jerk. "For I'm not at all sure we'll keep the track. Ought to make it in an hour, however, if everything goes right."

She shook her head, uncertain how frankly to answer.

"No loss to you—worst place to live in on earth—no exceptions—I know—been there myself three months—got friends there likely?"

"I hardly know," she acknowledged doubtfully. "I think so, but I shall have to hunt some place in which to stay to-night. Can you tell me of some—some respectable hotel, or boarding house"

The man wheeled about, until he could look at her more clearly.

"That's a pretty hard commission, Miss," he returned easily. "There may be such a place in Sheridan, but I have never found it. Old Mother Shattuck keeps roomers, but she won't have a woman in the house. I reckon you'll have to try it at the hotel—I'll get you in there if I have to mesmerize the clerk—you'll find it a bit noisy though."

"Oh, I thank you so much. I don't mind the noise, so it is respectable."

He laughed, good humoredly.

"Well, I don't propose to vouch for that—the proprietor ain't out there for his health—but I reckon you won't have no serious trouble—the boys mostly know a good woman when they see one—which isn't often—anyhow, they're liable to be decent enough as long as I vouch for you."

"But you know nothing of me."

"Don't need to—your face is enough—I'll get you the room all right."

She hesitated, then asked:

"Are you—are you connected with the railroad?"

"In a way, yes—I'm the contract surgeon—had to dig a bullet out of a water-tank tender back yonder—fellow howled as though I was killing him—no nerve—mighty poor stuff most of the riff-raff out here—ball wasn't in much below the skin—Indian must have plugged him from the top of the bluff—blame good shot, too—ragged looking slug—like to see it?"

She shook her head energetically.

"Don't blame you—nothing very uncommon—get a dozen cases like it a day sometimes—stay in Sheridan, show you something worth while—very pretty surgical operation to-morrow—come round and get you if you care to see it—got to open the stomach—don't know what I'll find—like to go?"

"Oh, no! I'm sure you mean it all kindly, but—but I would rather not."

"Hardly supposed you would—only knew one woman who cared for that sort of thing much—she was nursing for me during the war—had a hare-lip and an eye like a dagger—good nurse though—rather have your kind round me—ever nurse any? Could get you a dozen jobs in Sheridan—new prospects every night—fifty dollars a week—what do you say,"

"But I'm not seeking work, Doctor," smiling in spite of her bewilderment. "I have money enough with me."

"Well, I didn't know—thought maybe you wanted a job, and didn't like to ask for it—have known 'em like that—no harm done—if you ever do want anything like that, just come to me—my name's Fairbain—everybody knows me here—operated on most of 'em—rest expect to be—D—— that engineer! don't believe he knows whether he's going ahead or backing up." He peered out of the window, pressing his face hard against the glass. "I reckon that's Sheridan he's whistling for now—don't be nervous—I'll see you make the hotel all right."

CHAPTER XXI.

THE MARSHAL OF SHERIDAN.

It was called a depot merely through courtesy, consisting of a layer of cinders, scattered promiscuously so as to partially conceal the underlying mud, and a dismantled box car, in which presided ticket agent and telegrapher. A hundred yards below was the big shack where the railroad officials lodged. Across the tracks blazed invitingly the "First Chance" saloon. All intervening space was crowded with men, surging aimlessly about in the glare of a locomotive head light, and greeting the alighting passengers with free and easy badinage. Stranger or acquaintance made no difference, the welcome to Sheridan was noisily extended, while rough play and hoarse laughter characterised the mass.

Hope paused on the step, even as Dr. Fairbain grasped her hand, dinned by the medley of discordant sounds, and confused by the vociferous jam of humanity. A band came tooting down the street in a hack, a fellow, with a voice like a foghorn, howling on the front seat. The fellows at the side of the car surged aside to get a glimpse of this new attraction, and Fairbain, taking quick advantage of the opportunity thus presented, swung his charge to the cinders below. Bending before her, and butting his great shoulders into the surging crowd, he succeeded in pushing a passage through, then disengaging her forth to the edge of the street.

"Hey there, he said shortly, grabbing a well-dressed individual by the arm, "Where's Charlie"

The fellow looked at him wonderingly.

"Charlie? Oh, you mean the 'Kid'? Well, he ain't here to-night, had a weddin', an' is totin' the bridal couple 'round."

Fairbain swore discreetly under his breath, and cast an uncertain glance at the slender figure standing beside him. The streets of Sheridan were not over-pleasant at night.

"Only hack in town is somewhere else, Miss," he explained briefly. "I reckon you and I will have to hoof it."

He felt the grip of her fingers on his sleeve.

"The boys are a little noisy, but it's just their way—don't mean anything—you hang on to me, an' keep the veil down—we'll be there in the shake of a dog's tail."

He helped her over the muddy crossing, and as they reached a stretch of broad walk, began expatiating on the various places lining the way.

"That's the 'Mammoth' over there—dance hall back of it—biggest thing west of the Missouri—three men killed there last week—what for? Oh, they got too fresh—that's the 'Casino,' and the one beyond is 'Pony Joe's Place'—cut his leg off since I've been here—fight over a girl. Ain't there any stores?—sure; they're farther back—you see the saloons got in first—that's 'Sheeny Mike's' gambling joint you're looking at—like to go over and see 'em play? All right, just thought I'd ask you—it's early anyhow, and things wouldn't be goin' very lively yet. Say, there, you red head, what are you trying to do?"

The fellow had lurched out of the crowd in such a manner as to brush partially aside the girl's veil, permitting the glare of "Sheeny Mike's" lights to fall full upon her revealed face. It was accomplished so openly as to appear planned, but before he could reel away again, Fairbain struck out and the man went down. With an oath he was on his feet, and Hope cowered back against her protector. Each man had weapons drawn, the crowd scurrying madly to keep out of the line of fire, when, with a stride, a new figure stepped quietly in between them. Straight as an arrow, broad-shouldered, yet small waisted as a woman, his hair hanging low over his coat-collar, his face smooth shaven except for a long moustache, and emotionless, the revolvers in his belt untouched, he simply looked at the two, and then struck the revolver out of the drunken man's hand. It fell harmless to the ground.

"And don't you pick it up until I tell you, Scott," he said quietly. "If you do you've got to fight me."

Without apparently giving the fellow another thought, he wheeled and faced the others.

"Oh, it's you, Doctor? The drunken fool won't make any more trouble. Where were you taking the lady?"

"To the hotel, Bill."

"I'll walk along with you. I reckon the boys will give us plenty of room." He glanced over the crowd, and then more directly at Scott.

"Pick up your gun!" the brief words snapping out. "This is the second time I've caught you hunting trouble. The next time you are going to find it. I saw you run into the lady—what did you do it for?"

"I only wanted to see who she was, Bill."

"You needn't call me Bill. I don't trot in your class. My name is Hickcok to you. Was it any of your affair who she was?"

WAS A CONFIRMED DYSPEPTIC

How Finds It a Pleasure to Enjoy Meals

Here is a case which seemed as bad and as hopeless as yours can possibly be. This is the experience of Mr. H. J. Brown, 384 Bathurst St., Toronto, in his own words:

"Gentlemen—I have much pleasure in mentioning to you the benefits received from your Na-Dru-Co Dyspepsia Tablets and can cheerfully recommend them. I simply had confirmed dyspepsia with all its wretched symptoms, and tried almost all the advertised cures with no success. You have in Na-Dru-Co Dyspepsia Tablets the best curative agent I could find. It is now such a pleasure to enjoy meals with their consequent nourishment that I want to mention this for the benefit of others."

The fact that a lot of prescriptions or so-called "cures" have failed to help you is no sign that you have got to go on suffering. Try Na-Dru-Co Dyspepsia Tablets and see how quickly this sterling remedy will give you relief and start your stomach working properly. If it doesn't help you, you get your money back. 50c a box at your druggist's. Compounded by the National Drug and Chemical Co. of Canada, Limited, Montreal. 141

NO CASCARET USER EVER HAS HEADACHE

A 10-cent box will keep your liver, stomach and bowels clean, pure and fresh for months.

Sick headache, biliousness, dizziness, coated tongue, foul taste and foul breath—always trace them to torpid liver, delayed fermenting food in the bowels or sour, gassy stomach.

Poisonous matter clogged in the intestines, instead of being cast out of the system is re-absorbed into the delicate brain tissue it causes congestion and that dull, throbbing, sickening headache.

Salts, cathartic pills, oil and purgative waters force a passageway for a day or two—yes—but they don't take the poisons out and have no effect upon the liver or stomach.

Cascarets immediately cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour, undigested and fermenting food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver, and carry out of the system all the decomposed waste matter and poisons in the intestines and bowels.

A Cascaret to-night will surely straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist means inside cleanliness and a clear head for months. Ask any of the millions of Cascaret users if they ever have headache

Redistribution Bill Before Provincial House

Proposed New Constituency to be Formed With Biggar as Seat

The Provincial Parliament now have the new Distribution Bill framed up into working shape, and this will erect 15 new seats and make 54 seats for the whole province.

One of these new seats is allotted to our own town of Biggar, with a district extending thirty miles from east to west and from sixty to ninety miles from north to south, the deflection being caused by the North Saskatchewan River.

As laid out, the new constituency of Biggar consists of all that land shown on the map as follows:

Starting from a point on the line between ranges 11 and 12 on the top of township 30, and proceeding straight north along this line to the North Saskatchewan river in township 46; then along the line of the river till reaching the line between ranges 17 and 18 in township 44, and proceeding south along this line to the N. E. corner of township 39 in range 18, and from there straight east to the starting point.

This gives the Biggar constituency an area of somewhere about 2,409 square miles, and includes the towns of Biggar, South Battleford, Naseby, Traynor, Harris, Zealandia, Herschel, Palo, Oban, Mead, Vance, Neola, and a lot of other smaller places inside the area mentioned above.

STARTING THE GARDEN

NOW IS THE TIME TO GET SEEDS INTO THE FRAMES.

Some Hints For the Amateur Who Is Looking Forward to the Day When Early Flowers and Vegetables Will Gladden the Eyes — Germinate From Seed—Study the Catalogues —Enriching the Soil.

The one invariable rule of the experienced gardener is to order his seeds for the season's planting as early in the year as seeds are obtainable.

It must be remembered, too, that for the best results seeds of some flowers, annuals and perennials, and of some vegetables must be planted indoors, nursed into sturdy growth before the season is come for outdoor planting and "grown on," as the gardener expresses it, so that they may be set in the open ground as soon as the spring is sufficiently advanced to make the transplanting safe.

For planting seeds indoors it is best to make use of shallow boxes some three or four inches deep. The florists call these "flats," and a visit to any florist's shop will supply the beginner with an idea of their construction. Avoid making them too wide or too long, for when filled with earth they are heavier than you would imagine. In the bottom of the boxes drill quarter inch holes and over these set bits of broken flowerpots. Fill in first with coarse earth, to which sand or ashes may be added to insure good drainage. Toward the top add finer earth until the surface layer, half an inch deep is of soil that is finely pulverized. For very small seed fill the "flat" to within a quarter of an inch of the top of the box, sow the seeds lightly, making sure of as uniform distribution as possible, and press these in place with a board. Water carefully with a fine spray and set the box in a warm, light situation.

Larger seed are covered to varying depths, depending upon the size of the seed. A safe rule is to bury the seed to a depth four times its own size. It is apparent, of course, that flats for these coarser seed are not filled so full of earth. It is generally advisable to fill the boxes partially to the point where the seeds are to be planted, then to place the seeds on this surface at the required distance apart and finally to sift the pulverized earth on top until the boxes are filled to within a quarter inch of the top.

Perennials for the garden are easily raised from seed by the amateur, provided, of course, the professional gardener himself adopts that means of propagation. Some perennials, however, are best propagated by root division. Not a few may be grown from seed provided one has the time and patience to expend on them, but there is little to be gained with these when there is, comparatively speaking, a large group that responds readily to this sort of treatment.

The perennials easiest raised from the seed are the following: Adonis, aquilegia, Alyssum saxatile, Bellis perennis, geum, iberis, myosotis, phlox, campanula, delphinium, dianthus, gaillardia, Geranium sanguineum, digitalis, achillea, heuchera, asters and lychnis. This list by no means exhausts the possibilities. There are other varieties that the gardener as he becomes more expert will add to his collection.

A word of advice may be permissible in regard to the purchase of seeds. It is a matter of economy to buy of standard firms, whose seed may be depended upon to be true to name, good in quality and most likely to germinate, even if the price seems a little higher than that demanded by other firms. The gardener must remember that he is seeking to gain time, to grow sturdy stock, and that he offsets both if he uses weak seed. The plant can be no better than its source, and it is well to see to it that only reliable seeds are sown. Study the catalogues thoroughly, proceed cautiously in the selection of varieties, either in flowers or vegetables; rely on established sorts rather than upon "novelties" and, as it was suggested in the beginning, lose no time in ordering the seeds required.

If the soil of your garden is in good mechanical condition—that is, if it contains the proper amount of decayed vegetable matter—excellent results in the way of fertilising may be obtained without the inconvenience of handling ordinary manure. Sheep manure may be bought in sacks and is excellent. It gives immediate results. Strewn over and dug into the vegetable garden or placed directly in drills or hills, it promotes a rapid, steady growth until maturity. It makes rich and safe liquid manure, one pound in five gallons of water producing a mixture which can be used safely daily if necessary.

Bonemeal is good, but is not a complete fertilizer. Wood ashes should be used with caution, as the large amount of dye they contain may do mischief.

The best chemical fertiliser is what is known as a complete fertiliser, which is supplied under various names. Ask when you buy it how to use it and be sure to use no more than the directions permit. A very light sprinkling over the soil after spading or plowing, then raked in, is best. Chemical fertilisers are very strong and will kill or injure plants if used to excess.

If the soil of your garden is not in good mechanical condition it must be properly enriched before you can hope to have success. Dig in fresh horse manure and leave the ground rough and let the manure rot. When it is rotted spade up the ground again and perhaps planting may be done. Never dig fresh manure into the ground, however, just before planting.

WORTH WHILE TIP.

How to Aid Boy In Choosing a Profession.

The bent of a boy's mind with reference to what he would like to be when he grows to manhood can best be determined by the process of elimination. Little boys nearly always hope to be soldiers, sailors, policemen, conductors or motormen. Uniforms, brass buttons and firearms attract them. They like to think of being heroic figures, and even motormen are heroes in the eyes of little urchins.

Later on in life the boy dreams of being a man of power. Money appeals to him more and more. This is the time to begin the process of elimination. Put down on paper a list of fifty or more occupations covering the widest possible field and arranged alphabetically. Under A, for instance, would be placed actor, animal trainer, artist, author; under B would be found butcher and baker, and C would carry chemist, carpenter, carriage maker, etc.

Take one character of occupation from the list under A and provide the boy with prime material about it—first the actor. Under that head would come the study required, the opportunity for employment, the hours of labor the necessity for traveling, the earning capacity of the average player, etc. Go over it all with the boy. Let him weigh these things in the business that are pleasing against those that are not. Give him three days to think it over. At the end of that time the boy will be prepared to say finally that it is an occupation which doesn't appeal to him or that he might like it.

Don't force him to eliminate. Before the end of the list is reached and serious thought has been given to all the occupations he will have satisfied himself that four out of every five appeal to him not at all. They may be stricken from the list.

The occupations remaining should then be taken up as a new list and considered again even more seriously. If ten remain a week's time could well be given to the consideration of each one. Further eliminations would result. Finally only two or three would remain. Out of this number a youth will make a selection to his liking.

Cook Island Laws.

There are some strange laws in the Cook Islands, in the eastern Pacific. The population is Maori, and each island legislates for itself. The island council of Manihiki, one of the group, has in force an ordinance to regulate village life within the island. It begins by re-enacting "the ancient law of Manihiki as to dogs" and sentencing to death any dogs on the island. Pigs are not to wander at large, and any person going about after 9 p.m. may be arrested and taken to the courthouse to explain his reason for being abroad. No debt incurred by a native inhabitant is to be recoverable in any court. Selling or giving intoxicating liquor to any native is punishable with a $50 fine.

Hill of the Poison Plant.

Close to the frontier of Nepal is the mountain of Sandook-Phu, which means in the Tibetan language "the hill of the poison plant," or aconite. This plant is so abundant and so deadly in its effects that all sheep and cattle passing over the mountain are muzzled by their drivers. An English traveler saw at its foot great heaps of discarded bamboo muzzles. Curiously enough, only those cattle that are newly imported from the plains are fatally affected. The natives believe that the sheep of the district learn to shun the youngest leaves, which are the most virulent. A more likely explanation is that they grow habituated to the drug by taking it in small quantities.

Dry Cleaning.

An excellent way to clean delicate lace or other articles at home, where washing is prohibited for fear of fading, is to take as much gasoline as will be thought necessary and mix into it all the cornmeal it will absorb. Place the articles to be cleaned in a tight cloth bag, pour in the meal and gasoline and fasten the opening securely. Shake rub, pat and knead the bag thoroughly. Then fold up in a paper covering or tight box and let stand overnight. In the morning brush off the meal and hang in a shaded spot until the gasoline odor is gone. This method is simple, but very effective.

Sunday Card Playing Laws.

There was a time when people in England were forbidden by law to play at cards, even in their own houses, on Sunday. In the royal proclamation against vice, profaneness and immorality, read at every session of court, is the following passage: "And we do hereby strictly enjoin and prohibit all our loving subjects, of what degree or quality soever, from playing on the Lord's day at dice, cards or any other game whatsoever, either in public or private houses or other places whatsoever."

A Witty Reply.

Dr. Reid, the celebrated medical writer, was requested by a lady of literary eminence to call at her house. "Be sure you recollect the address," she said as she quitted the room—"No. 1 Chesterfield street."

"Madam," said the doctor, "I am too great an admirer of politeness not to remember Chesterfield and, I fear, too selfish ever to forget No. 1."

DYSPEPTIC

Food Does You No Good

Half the time you're afraid to eat; your tongue is coated, mouth tastes bad, stomach is bloated. If you want to get well, stop using dyspepsia tablets, and go to the source of the trouble before it is too late. Strengthen your stomach, cast out the bile, regulate the bowels—do this, and dyspepsia will be no more.

For your condition the best prescription is Dr. Hamilton's Pills, which are made specially for the stomach, kidneys and liver. No better remedy will be devised, for Dr. Hamilton's Pills are perfect.

DR. HAMILTON'S PILLS A SURE CURE

"No one could realise my sufferings from stomach trouble and indigestion. For five years I have not been well. My food did me no good, because I couldn't digest or assimilate. My doctor said constipation was at the root of my trouble, so I got Dr. Hamilton's Pills. My appetite improved, pain after eating ceased, and my food digested quickly. I am delighted with the thorough cure I derived from Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

ESSENCE OF MUMMY.

Queer Medicine That Was Used Not So Long Ago In Persia.

In former times strange products were used as medicines. Among them was essence of mummy, which held a place in the pharmacopoeia even during the last century.

Two sorts of mummies were used for the production of the extract—the true and the artificial. True mummies were disinterred from the valley of the Nile and forwarded to Europe and Asia by the Arabs. Their therapeutic virtues were attributed to substances used by their embalmers. The saving or curative principles of those substances were supposed to have been preserved and held intact by the swathing bands used with secret and peculiar art to wrap the dead. Essence of mummy was recommended in cases of convulsions, as a cure for boils, in epilepsy, colds, etc.

In Persia embalming was once the rule. The shahs offered mummies, or portions of mummies, as gifts to the monarchs whose friendship they respected, and chroniclers record the fact as worthy of historical note that Louis XIV. and Catherine of Russia received, among numerous gifts of various sorts, golden chests containing mummified human members. In 1809, when Princess Charlotte of England was sick, her doctors administered "essence of mummy."

A manuscript recently found, the production of the persian poet Nizam, gives the formula for producing the synthetic mummy. According to that prescription, the man selected was of tender flesh and fine, thin skin—a man whose chief nourishment had been fruit. At the age of thirty years his throat was cut and his body, while still warm with life, was placed in a stone urn filled, save for the space required for it, with honey and with balsamic substances. The full urn was sealed and set away to ripen. At the close of a period varying from fifty to a hundred years the body, completely mummified, was taken out and the extraction of the "essence" was made.

The Golf Ball's Story.

Evolution has played a great part in the history of the golf ball. The first balls mentioned in the chronicles of the game were made from leather and feathers. A double handful of feathers was steamed and packed into a small case of leather. The case was then sewed up and painted white, and the feathers in drying expanded and gave the ball resiliency. The next ball was composed of solid gutta percha, but it was heavy, unreliable and was for a time abandoned. One day, however, a player noticed a caddie putting up a creditable game with one of these balls and on closer inspection found that it was very much cut about. Realizing that these cuts and scars probably accounted for the better flight of the ball, he commenced hammering gutta percha, and this was the origin of the hand hammered ball. After a time molds were constructed, and balls were produced with the square marking. Then came the ball with the rubber core, which gives elasticity, and this type still remains.

LONDON STORES.

When Customers Enter They Are Almost Compelled to Buy.

First and foremost the English excel in salesmanship. Once having got a possible purchaser inside the door, they reason he should be made profitable to them. The floor manager does not assume that attitude of royal indifference as with us. He watches the struggle between salesperson and customer. If the latter shows signs of escaping into the open with his purse intact another clerk is brought forward as a re-enforcement. Some establishments still lay fines on clerks who do not effect sales, but the system of inciting the sales force to its utmost efforts by giving percentages is now coming into vogue.

The method that London stores have of letting a cash girl conduct a customer who has finished his purchases to a central cash desk and wrapping counter, where he stands in line keeping an anxious eye on his goods till they are parcelled, seems to us awkward and cumbersome. An Oxford street merchant, however, reasons differently.

"When a patron has finished his purchases he is better out of the way of new customers. English men and women prefer privacy when they are making purchases, which would be impossible were customers allowed to sit at the counter, awaiting their packages. Then the wrapping force works more rapidly when the patron watches and urges haste."

I did not see how that particular force could work any more slowly, but his other argument might have some merit.—Business.

Street Names From Dickens.

Although Dickens is commemorated in street names abroad, there is no street named after him in London. But there is a near approach to it in Copperfield road, Stepney, not far from the People's Palace, and to prove that this was inspired by "David Copperfield" we find a Dora street and an Agnes street in close proximity.—London Chronicle.

Jamaica.

Jamaica, discovered in 1494 by Columbus, was originally called Xaymaca (land of wood and water).

THE CASE-BOOK OF A PRIVATE DETECTIVE

Inside History of the Methods Employed in Criminal Investigation, Embracing True Narratives of Interesting Cases by a Former Operative of the William J. Burns Detective Agency.

BY DAVID CORNELL

4 — The Popham Center Murder

The Clearing Up of a Puzzling Case

(Copyright, 1912, by International Press Bureau.)

(Editor's Note:—In order that no annoyance may accrue through the publication of these narratives to persons involved therein, other names and places have in many instances been substituted for the real ones.)

If you have been reading the daily papers at all in the last two years you already know something of the Popham Center murder case. You know—for the reporters spent oceans of words in telling you—that Herman Bauder, the twelve year old son of a millionaire florist at Popham Center, Pennsylvania, was found dead on his father's lawn one July evening with his toy air rifle by his side, and absolutely no trace of why or how he met his death or who was responsible for the dastardly deed. Later it was discovered that the boy had died from suffocation, which further complicated the mystery; for how he could have succumbed in this fashion out there on the open lawn on a summer evening was inexplicable. More investigation showed that he had been choked. You know also how his father, frantic with grief, had raged, placed his fortune at the disposal of anyone who could clear up the mystery, and how for weeks the press rang with stories of one of the most sensational man hunts in the history of detective annals in this country.

All this and more you know if you were reading the papers at the time. What you do not know, and what I propose to tell, is how the mystery was cleared up in almost as startling a manner as that in which the crime had been committed. Startling to the layman, that is, for to Cluffer and myself, as operatives in the Burns Detective Agency, it came merely as part of the day's work, and to us in no way differed from scores of cases which we were assigned to clear up in order to earn our weekly salaries.

The Popham Center murder occurred on a Monday evening, and Tuesday morning the papers were playing up "The Popham Center Mystery." By this name the case became known. On the Thursday following the office manager of our agency sent word for me to go in and see the Chief. Cluffer, another operative, a short, bowlegged and good humored little Englishman, already was in conference with Burns. Cluffer was an old man in the office; I had been a detective only a few months.

"Cornell," said the Chief, "we've been retained to clear up that Popham Center case over in Pennsylvania. The sheriff and the police and the county detectives over there are all up in the air. They've already arrested three negroes for doing the job. It isn't likely that they've got the right man. There is a reward of five thousand dollars offered by the boy's father. In addition to that, the father's lawyer has retained us by wire. Now, you and Cluffer go over to Popham Center and clear that thing up."

I have been reading the newspaper accounts of the murder and had been impressed by the apparently insurmountable difficulties that lay in a solution of the case. It seemed mighty cool of the Chief to order us to run over and clear it up, but that is the way the modern high class detective agency works. Crime and the discovery of its perpetrators are only matters of business, and the high class agency handles them exactly as another kind of busines. office handles an order for goods.

"Have you any theory you want us to work on?" I asked.

"Yes," said the Chief. "It's a robbery crime, sure. The kid must have got hold of some money or valuables, and somebody must have put him out o' the way to get them. That's the way these crimes most always shape up. I've listed two hundred of them, and petty robbery has been the motive in 190 cases. I don't know the situation over there, but that's the idea I want you to base your work on—until you find that I'm wrong, if I am wrong. If the thing looks very involved after you've been there three or four days, let me know by wire."

That was all. Cluffer and I cashed an order for expense money, packed our grips, and within two hours were whirling over New Jersey toward Pennsylvania bound for what afterwards proved to be one of the most exciting experiences of our lives.

We reached Popham Center late at night. It was a small, but exceedingly prosperous town in the foothills of the mountains, and Cluffer and I repaired to its single hotel. Naturally the place was buzzing with talk of the crime that for the moment had made it a place of national importance. The rooms at the hotel were all taken by reporters, photographers and artists from Philadelphia and New York, and Cluffer and I were lucky to find two cots available in one end of the hall. That night we met the sheriff of the county and were amazed to find that he considered the case already settled. He had given up work on it.

"I've got the right man," he said boastfully, "got him the first crack. We don't need you wise guys from the Big City to come over here and show us how to catch crooks—not over here. I knew these three niggers had been hanging around town for a couple of days, and just as soon as I heard that Herman Bauder's kid had been murdered I knew who'd done the job, and threw these fellers into jail. Oh, we don't need you over here."

"Have these negroes confessed?" I asked.

"No, but they will after a few days of what we're giving 'em," laughed the sheriff. "Oh, we'll get 'em all right."

He readily agreed to let us talk with the prisoners. To us they told the same story they had told at the time of their arrest: at the time the murder must have been committed they were busily engaged in shooting craps in a colored poolroom in the poorer part of the town.

"Where did you get the money to shoot with?" asked Cluffer, suddenly.

"We'd been wuhkin' for Mr. Brooks who runs the brickyard, wheelin' bricks all day," was the instant answer, "He done paid us off and we goes over to dis place and shoots a little craps all evenin'. We got folks can swear to dat."

"Where were you between the time you quit work and the time you were arrested?" I shot at them.

"We went straight to dis poolroom," they answered. "We was dere all doh time."

Next morning we investigated their story quietly. We found Brooks at his brickyard, and he substantiated the negroes' story about being paid off. They had left the brickyard at five minutes after five, and at the poolroom it was said they had arrived at 6:15, and had remained until late at night when they were arrested.

"Cross off the coons," said Cluffer. "They never had a finger in this pie. I knew it the minute I saw 'em; coons always try to look foxy when they're lying. Those coons were just plain scared. Let's go look at the situation."

The Bauder home we found to be exceptionally striking even in that town of prosperous homes. Bauder was a florist who had become a millionaire by investments in oil, but he still conducted, in the fields, immediately back of his house, the florist establishment that had given him his start. In front of the house was the great, well kept lawn upon which the 12 year old son had been foully done to death.

"Mr. Bauder," I said, "did your little boy have any possessions on his person or elsewhere that might tempt a robber?"

"Him? That little fellow?" burst out the old man. "No, he didn't have a thing—not a thing. O, hold on." He stopped as if something had come forcibly to his mind. "Well, now," he said, "I never thought of that. He had a savings bank with $50 in it, and I haven't seen it since he—since we found him on the lawn."

A hurried and thorough search of the house was made for the bank. It could not be found. It was not in its accustomed place in the child's room, or elsewhere. It could not be found.

"There," said Cluffer as we left the place, "is your motive. Let's get away and smoke and think it over."

We went back to the hotel, and proceeded to lay out our theory. Having established the fact that the child's bank with $50 in it had disappeared on the same night as his murder it was apparent that the two were connected: the boy had been killed for the bank, slain by some miscreant who valued that paltry sum beyond a child's life. But how was this connection to be established in a way to further our work? The boy had been put to death out on the lawn. The bank usually was in his room. There had been no burglary of the house. No one had entered it to take the bank. How could the person or persons, who killed the boy, get the bank? Did they get it before they committed their savage crime, or afterwards? Was the murder the main crime, or merely an incident to a robbery? Or was the robbery a mere incident to the murder?

The chief had said that we probably would find robbery to be the motive. If this was so, then the person or persons who killed the boy did so because he stood between them and the bank. They had to get him out of the way to get that fifty dollars. They wouldn't have killed him otherwise. But the bank was—or usually was—up in the boy's room in the house, where no intruder had entered. Why should they kill a boy out on the lawn to get fifty dollars in case of the upper rooms of the house?

"Either," said I, "the boy had caught them taking the bank—or he had the bank with him."

Cluffer sat up rigidly.

"Wow!" he said. "That's some hunch. Either someone had taken the bank, and he knew who it was and was going to tell on them, and they killed him to keep him quiet—or he had it with him. I believe we are beginning to see toward the right."

Being in charge of the case I said: "Cluffer, I suggest that you go to work in the Bauder home and get acquainted with the servants. I will get a job in the flower houses. I've got a hunch that points that way."

Next day the Bauder home had a new man around the house to do odd jobs, and there were a new hand in the flower houses, learning the florist's trade. Bauder put us both to work upon our request, and we had the run of both house and flower houses and intercourse with the servants and employes without being under suspicion as detectives. Then, having decided whither our theory pointed, Cluffer and I began our task of clearing up the Popham Center mystery.

All the circumstances attendant on the case suggested to my mind that the guilty party was someone who was extremely familiar with the Bauder household, and with the Bauder boy. The more I dwelt on the odd feature of the case—the slaying of the boy on the lawn and the disappearing of the bank in the house—the more I became convinced that no outsider had done this crime. It looked more and more like the work of someone who had been friendly with the boy. I told Cluffer to work in the house with a view to finding the servant or servants who were most intimate with the child, and to the Bauder florist establishment I bent my efforts along the same line.

Three days of this work and we saw that our task was to be more complicated even than we had feared. Practically every one of the five servants in the house, and all the six employes in the flower houses, had been chummy with the little fellow. He was a strange child and had sought his playmates, not among other children of his own years in the village, but among the men and women employed in various capacities by his father. Seldom if ever did he stray away from the florists or servants. If he was not to be found in the home, a search of the flower houses would reveal him busily engaged in conversation with one of the florists, and if he was not with the florists he was sure to be found with the servants. Thus there were eleven people, 8 men and 3 women, who were his chums. To eliminate the innocent ones, and fasten upon the guilty one—if indeed the guilty one were among them—was the task that lay before Cluffer and myself.

At the end of two weeks' work we were exactly where we had started. Not one of the eleven people on the Bauer payroll had shown a sign whereby we might suspect their connection with the crime; not one of them but seemed heart-broken and enraged over the fate of their erstwhile playmate.

"I'm afraid you had the wrong hunch," said Cluffer at the end of the two weeks.

"It begins to look that way," I said. "But I'm not willing to believe so. The more I go over the ground the more I am convinced that our quarry is one of the eleven right on this place. Cluffer, did you ever take much stock in the theory that a murderer is inclined to revisit the scene of his crime?"

"Not much," said Cluffer. "But they have been known to do it."

"Then to take no chances of missing anything, from now on we are going to keep a watch on the lawn where the boy's body was found. We've got to play all chances, because this looks like a hard, long chase."

Cluffer didn't have much faith in this theory, but he good naturedly agreed to watch the lawn with me at night.

It was four days later that we had our first reward. It was about eleven at night—a dark, moonless night—when Cluffer and I were lying hidden in a hedge, that a man, clothed in a long mackintosh and wearing a cap well down over his eyes, came sneaking out on the lawn, looking hurriedly around the spot where the boy had been found, and hurried away into the darkness before Cluffer or I could make a move.

I looked at Cluffer and Cluffer looked at me. Without a word my partner began to roll a cigarette.

"Well," he said, at last, "I guess you win. Now the question is to find who that guy was who just inspected the scene of the murder."

Luck favored us the next morning, for in the soft walks of the lawn we found the imprint of a peculiar, square-toed shoe. By night I had that pair of shoes spotted and they were on the feet of a young German, named Hunemann, employed with me in Bauder's flower houses!

It was a shock. Hunemann had been the little Bauder boy's best friend. Among all the employes he had been the one to whom the little fellow had taken the biggest liking, and it was with Hunemann that he was most often to be found. And Hunemann had grieved constantly over the little fellow's fate. Was it possible—or had the poor fellow only gone to the scene of murder to grieve in silence, as one might go to a beloved one's grave?

A few days later it rained.

"Hunemann," I said to my workfellow, "I've got to go down town. Do you happen to have a mackintosh you could let me wear for an hour or so?"

Hunemann started and looked at me in a way I had not seen him look before.

"Why did you ask me that?" he demanded.

"Because I don't want to get wet," I said, laughing. "Have you got a mackintosh?"

"Who told you I had a mackintosh?" he persisted.

"Nobody," I replied. "But have you got one?"

"No," he said, "I haven't. I never had one."

"Well, that's all right, then," I said. "I just asked you. You needn't get sore."

But it was obvious that Hunemann was sore. After that he began to treat me with suspicion. He refused to be drawn into conversation with me; refused to be with me at all.

"Cluffer," I said that night when we met to confer. "I want you to keep an eye on Hunemann. He's getting restless and I'm afraid he's going to duck out. If he does, you follow him and wire me where you go. He hasn't seen you around here, so you can get in right with him."

My fears were justified and my directions to Cluffer were just in time. Next morning Hunemann had disappeared. So had Cluffer. I went on with my work in the flower houses as if nothing had happened, impatiently waiting word from my partner.

I had to wait ten days. Then came this message from Jersey City: "The bird and I are living in the same cage. Got in with him in Philadelphia and beat it up here with him. We are pals. Made him believe I was a crook. Come to Grogan's saloon near the Scandinavia-American piers at 6 any evening. I'll make connections with you. "Cluffer."

I blessed Cluffer for his ability to make people trust him, and took the first train for Jersey City.

Grogan's saloon was a typical water front place for the entertainment of sailors and longshoremen. I strolled in promptly at six, and called for a glass of beer. Looking in the mirror I saw Cluffer enter, and without more than a look at me pass behind me into a back room. I drank my beer slowly and followed him.

"I've got him trusting me to the limit," he said, when we were alone; "but I'll be darned if I believe he's our man. I've played the crook and bragged about the jobs I've done and so on, but he hasn't said a word about the Bauder kid."

"Well," said I, "we'll find out soon enough if he's guilty. Are you strong with him?"

"Strong?" laughed Cluffer. "Say, he thinks I'm the only friend he's got in the world. He's broke, you know—"

"Then he must have hidden the bank," I interrupted.

"He's broke," continued Cluffer, "and I'm his meal ticket. He wouldn't leave me for a farm."

"Good! We've got to fake a murder by you. Here it is: You fix it to hold me up. You have to shoot me, because I resist. Then you hurry away. After that you get afraid of Hunemann. You tell him that you're afraid to stay with him because he knows you're guilty of this crime and may give you away. Then, if you are strong with him, and he wants to stay with you, he'll—"

"Tell me he's as bad as I am," said Cluffer. "Right-O. Meet me here tomorrow night at the same time."

The next night we met in the same back room and Cluffer said: "We will hold you up at ten o'clock tonight up by the Jersey Beat Club's slips. It's for a hold-up. I've told Hunemann I'd a dark, lonesome place, an ideal place laid for victims there before, and he agreed to go along and help. He'd do anything for me."

That night was one of the shivery times of my life. I kept my appointment promptly. Cluffer had described the locality properly; it was an ideal spot for a hold-up. I was strolling along, apparently at ease, when suddenly Cluffer, with a handkerchief over his eyes, stepped out from behind a building, shoved a revolver into my face, and hissed: "Hands up!" Hunemann was behind him. I had a good look at the latter's face, and now I saw that the apparently soft-hearted German was in reality of a vicious criminal type. Engaged, as he thought, in an actual crime, his face had taken on a malevolent expression. He was ready to kill, and I felt sure at last that my theory was right.

"Hands up nothing," I cried, and struck at Cluffer.

"Cut that out or I'll plug you," he said. I followed him.

"Shoot him!" cried Hunemann, his face contorted in a frenzy. "Shoot him like a dog."

Bang! went Cluffer's revolver. He was so close that I felt the wad of the blank cartridge whizz past my head. I staggered, but kept after him. Bang! went the second shot. I stopped, stood up stiff, and collapsed. Cluffer said afterwards that I did it so well that for a second he was frightened.

He stepped forward, took a hurried look at me and, grabbing Hunemann by the arm, dragged him away, saying: "Killed him dead. Right between the eyes. Let's get away from this before the coppers come."

They ran away into the dark. I lay still for five minutes. Then I picked myself up, brushed my clothes and went back to my hotel.

Cluffer and Hunemann ran straight down to the Jersey Central freight yards and caught a through freight for Philadelphia. It was three days later that I heard from my partner. His communication was by telegram, and it read: "I've got the bird caged. Rutger's lodging house, corner Penn and Biddle streets. Get stenographers with dictagraph from office. "Cluffer."

One fine morning a few days later found myself with two stenographers from the office in Rutger's cheap lodging house in Philadelphia, occupying rooms in each side of the one occupied by Cluffer and Hunemann. Our dictagraphs enabled us to hear every word that was being said by the pair. Here is the salient part of the dictagraph testimony as it now appears in the records of our agency:

Cluffer—"Yes, I've got to quit you. I'm afraid to stay with you any longer. You've got too much on me. You've got me. You might squeal about that job up in Jersey City. I'm going to quit you."

Hunemann—"Don't. I'm a good pal, ain't I?"

Cluffer—"You're no pal at all. You let me do the job—and you could turn me over to the police any time you want to and go clear yourself, because there isn't anything against you."

Hunemann—"How do you know?"

Cluffer—"You've got a hold on me, and I've got no hold on you. Good bye."

Hunemann—"Wait a minute, pal. I done a job once, too. You know that Bauder case? I bumped that kid off. Honest, I did. I asked him to let me see his bank. He showed me the fifty dollars in it. I needed fifty to give a girl I was stuck on. I put my hand on his mouth so he couldn't holler, and then I grabbed him by the throat, and pretty soon he was dead. Honest."

Cluffer (Laughing)—"Oh, you dub! D'you think you can bunk me? You haven't got nerve enough to kill a flea."

Hunemann—"I'll show you. Here; I'll take you and show you where I hid the bank. Now will you believe I'm in as deep as you are? Now am I a good pal? Will you stick with me now?"

Cluffer—"You show me the bank and we'll see about it."

I arrested both Cluffer and Hunemann a few evenings later when Hunemann was proudly showing his "pal" where he had hidden the Bauder boy's bank in the soft black dirt behind Bauder's flower houses.

Cluffer was, of course, released just as soon as Hunemann was in jail. You have read, if you read the papers, how Hunemann broke down and confessed of his own volition to the district attorney, how he was sent to the electric chair, and how the autopsy showed his brain to belong to the lowest criminal type of degenerates. Cluffer and I were back in New York working on another case long before the trial came to an end.

"I'm glad we didn't have to go on the witness stand," said Cluffer. "He was a dog all right, but—he certainly did believe that I was his friend."

And I said, "Next time you shoot me, don't you aim so blame close to my head. I can hear those wads whizzing past my head in my sleep."

SHIP GETS STRANGE ORDER

Obeys Mysterious Message on Slate and Rescues People From Sinking Vessel.

Robert Dale Owen is our authority for the following story:

"The mate of a bark which was sailing southwestwards across the banks of Newfoundland was in the cabin working out the vessel's course when he noticed a man sitting at the other end of the table busy writing on a slate. Thinking it was the captain, he paid no further attention, but presently, looking up from his calculation, he saw the man suddenly disappear.

"Startled, he went across, picked up the slate, and found written on it, 'Steer to the northwest.'

"He called the captain. The writing was certainly not that of any of the crew, and eventually it was decided to obey the strange order. The vessel was put in a nor-westerly course and a man stationed at the masthead to keep a sharp lookout.

"In a few hours they sighted ice, and amongst it, in an almost sinking condition, a big ship. They reached her just in time to save her people. Among them was a passenger whom the mate recognized as the stranger who had written on the slate.

According to the other passengers, this man had been in a deep sleep or trance at the hour at which the incident had taken place."

"Where is the Isle of Man, pa?"

"I'm not sure, my son, but I know that the aisle of woman is the one by which she drags a man up to the altar."

Congressional Library.

The Congressional library at Washington contains 1,891,739 books. There are in the great building 118,165 maps and charts and 334,940 prints and engravings. The library building is said to be the finest in the United States, and from the architectural standpoint it is pronounced by many to be very near perfection. In addition to the mighty array of books, maps, charts and designs, the library contains files of most of the important daily newspapers in the country.

PEOPLE'S PULPIT.

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

KEY OF KNOWLEDGE LOST BY PHARISEES

Lord's Blessings Hidden—Jewish Words as Applied by Pastor Russell.

Brooklyn, N.Y., May 4.—The Academy of Music was crowded to-day to hear Pastor Russell's discourse on "The Lost Key of Knowledge." Taking his text from Luke xi, 52, he said:

In the New Testament the word lawyer has a very different meaning from our general usage. It applied to those religious teachers of the Jews who made special professions of sanctity of heart and earnest desire to know God's will, as expressed in the Mosaic Law, and to teach the same to the people. The corresponding class of to-day are designated Doctors of Divinity. Our text, therefore, with this correction reads, "Woe unto you, Doctors of Divinity, for ye have taken away the Key of Knowledge; you entered not in yourselves, and them that were entering ye hindered."

It was the custom amongst the Jews that lessons from the Law and the Prophets should be read every day in their synagogues. The people were thus familiar with the letter of the Divine Law and promises. The majority of them, of course, were illiterate, for educational facilities were not what they are now. As a result only a few claimed to have an understanding of the spiritual part of the Law and the Prophets. These were chiefly of the literary and wealthy classes. To these the common people looked for guidance respecting the Divine will and plan.

As an illustration. When the common people heard Jesus gladly they were unwilling to trust their own judgments, but inquired, "Have any of the Scribes and Pharisees believed on Him?" Have the Doctors of the Law, the Doctors of Divinity, endorsed Him? They have made a study of these things and we would rely more upon their judgment than upon our own. But none of the Scribes and Pharisees endorsed Him, and hence comparatively few of the people believed Him and became His disciples.

The common people were hungry for the Message which Jesus brought. It is recorded that they said of Jesus' teachings, "Never man spake like this Man." The nation would have gone over promptly to Jesus had the Scribes and Pharisees, the Doctors of the Law, set the example and given the word. Moreover, the teachings of Jesus harmonized the message of the Law and the Prophets over which the Scribes and the Pharisees and the Sadducees had long wrangled and disputed. Had the Doctors of the Law been as hungry for the Truth as were the people, undoubtedly all of their differences of interpretation of the Old Testament Scriptures would have speedily been solved in the light of the then present Truth and knowledge of God, which was shining upon the Bible through the Holy Spirit, Jesus and the Apostles being Jehovah's mouthpieces.

In our text Jesus charged the Jewish Doctors of Divinity with the responsibility of having taken away the Key of Knowledge, refusing to use it themselves to enter into the great appreciation of the blessings then due, and hiding it from the common people who trusted them so implicitly. We charge that the same thing is true to-day. Not only were the Jewish people typical of spiritual Israel, and their Age typical of this Age, and their Harvest typical of the Harvest or closing time of this Age, but additionally, now as then, "God's people perish for lack of knowledge." (Hosea iv, 6.) Now, as then, the Doctors of Divinity will not use the Key of Knowledge themselves, to enter heartily into the wonderful privileges and blessings now due, and additionally they have buried the Key of Knowledge, hiding it from the people under a mass of forms and ceremonies.

In our Lord's day the Jewish Doctors of Divinity, or Rabbis, contented themselves with telling the people what they should do and what they should not do, but they did not teach the people—they did not help them to any understanding of the deep meaning of the Law and the Prophets. In our text Jesus said to the "D.D.'s."

"Ye [the many] heavy burdens on the people, grievous to be borne," but you do not attempt to carry those burdens yourselves.

It is so to this day with the Jewish Rabbis, as well as with other Ministers; for instance, a minister stands as a representative and mouthpiece of the church creed, which in roundabout terms declares that whoever does not live a saintly life will suffer an eternity of torment. Is not this a grievous burden to put upon any conscientious soul? Has it not caused untellable anguish to many of God's true people? And has it not repulsed and driven many from God and the Bible, thousands of the most intelligent minds in the world?

As the Jewish Doctors of Divinity carried no such burdens, neither do the Doctors of Divinity of Christendom. In private they acknowledge that they carry no such burdens. In public they give the inference that they do—not so much by positive terms as by implication, tone and inflection of voice, and by the general fact that they stand for and as representatives of the creeds which so teach. It does not excuse these influential teachers for them to claim that in their official capacity they lose their personal responsibility and shift it upon those who made the creeds and those who adopted them. The people are no longer trusting the creeds. They realize that the creeds contain many inconsistencies, and that greater light is to-day shining from one page of the Bible upon another, than shone in the days when those creeds were formulated.

The common people trust the Bible—Jesus, the Apostles and the Prophets. They know that all of the creeds of Christendom claim to be built upon the inspired Record. They understand the Scribes and Pharisees of to-day, the Doctors of Divinity of Christendom, to give assurances that those creeds properly present the teachings of the Bible. The creedal chains would become ropes of sand if all the prominent Doctors of Divinity of Christendom came forward and publicly renounced them, as they nearly all do in private conversation.

It is this matter of misleading the people, deceiving them, that constituted the basis of Jesus' charge against the Doctors of Divinity of old, and we believe that His judgment is very similar to-day respecting the Doctors of Divinity of Christendom—"Ye have taken away [ye have hidden] the Key of Knowledge. Ye have not entered in yourselves, and them that were entering ye hindered."

Christian people to-day are so disgusted with the creeds which have separated them and their forefathers into six hundred different denominations that they are quite ready to discard them all, and to come together as one Church of the Living God to study the Bible in its own light.

The Scribes and Pharisees of our day are proving themselves to be the antitypes of those addressed by Jesus in our text, and have a substitute for knowledge. Taking away the Key of Knowledge, they say to the common people, Do not bother your head about doctrines; leave doctrines to the clergy; let the clergy endorse all the creeds, however conflicting they be. We do this in order to lull you to sleep. There is nothing so calculated to disturb the Christian's rest as the discussion of the doctrines of Christ. If there be in any congregation those who cannot feel satisfied without some kind of Bible study, let them have it, but get them rather to discussing the geography of Palestine and the habits and customs of the people, etc., rather than the prophecies of old or the interpretations of them, as given by Jesus and the Apostles. We ministers will keep aloof from such Bible study; we will not let on but that we understand these prophecies thoroughly, but we will keep a watch upon the Bible classes, and interfere only if we find some brother therein who is inclined to delve after the doctrines of Christ and the Apostles.

One minister, voicing this opposition to Bible study, especially along the lines of differences where it would be of special value, said, "The Church is like a great Hospital. Everything like doctrinal discussion must be banished and excluded, just as in a hospital all noise is forbidden, that the patients may sleep, or just as in a nursery noise is excluded that children may sleep."

Alas! it is too true that the nominal church of Christ is like a Hospital, many of whose patients are blind and deaf and asleep and mentally confused. But the trouble is: These got into this condition because of a lack of healthful exercise; and keeping them quiet will but turn the present hospital into a Cemetery.

What the churches of all the denominations need is the Word of God—as presented in the words of Jesus and the Apostles: "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." The sin-sick and lame, the blind and deaf and mentally perplexed need to hear the voice of Truth—"Wonderful Words of Life"—otherwise they will become more sick and will perish as Christians, but to become alive perhaps as "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God."

An Episcopal minister in our hearing urged his congregation to simply rest, not to bother themselves about their own future or that of others. The Holy Catholic Church, he said, resembled a ship, in which the members should come as passengers to be carried to the heavenly destination. They need not examine the compass, nor the chart, nor the machinery. All they need to do is to sit down and enjoy the journey, trusting that their baptism and the Holy Spirit have given them a free ticket to a proper destination.

Knowledge of God, the Bible declares, is indispensable for the attaining of the Great Prize of our High Calling. Thus Jesus said, "This is life eternal, that they may know Thee, the Only True God, and Jesus Christ, whom Thou hast sent." (John xvii, 3.) We are not to understand this to signify that anyone who has merely been made acquainted with the fact that there is one Creator, and that Jesus is His Son, is on account of this knowledge to be granted everlasting life. Some think to be able to make void the various Scriptures which tell us of the necessity of making our "calling and election sure," by so running as to obtain the prize." (I. Corinthians ix, 24.)

Our Lord's words do not refer to a knowledge about God, but to a knowledge of or personal acquaintance with God and His Son. And such an intimate acquaintance is not obtained merely by an introduction, but by companionship; it signifies an intimacy of acquaintanceship, a familiarity. Everything in the Divine Word encourages those who accept the Divine invitation to draw near to God, to come into fellowship with Him.

But this knowledge of God which will bring a saintly few to salvation on the highest plane stands related to God's Word—the teachings of the Bible—for thus God exalted His Word, by making it the channel for spiritual refreshment and personal acquaintanceship with Himself.

Thus Jesus prayed for us, His followers, "Sanctify them through Thy Truth. Thy Word is Truth." Any who neglect the Divine Word will fail of the sanctifying power and thus fail of the ultimate acquaintanceship with God which alone will guarantee everlasting life. The reason why the Lord has thus arranged the matter and made knowledge of the Scriptures essential, doubtless is that thus His faithful people may be benefitted; and they alone receive the instruction which will profit them alone, but would more or less injure others. Thus it is written, "Ye shall know the Truth, and the Truth shall make you free."

To this class our Lord says to-day, as He said to His Jewish followers eighteen centuries ago, "To you it is given to know the Mysteries of the Kingdom of God, but to all outside these things are spoken in parables and dark sayings, that hearing they might not perceive." To the outsiders—the Doctors of Divinity—is not permitted the Key of Knowledge. "Even so, Father, for so it seemeth good in Thy sight."—Matthew xi, 25, 26.

The Key of Knowledge consists of the faithful study of God's Word, with an honest purpose to know the things that are freely given unto us of God. This implies a consecration of heart, for none others would really desire that they might do the Divine will. And this implies also a faith in our Lord's promise that He that doeth "the will of My Father shall know of the doctrine." (John vii, 17.) It is this consecrated, conscientious Bible study that is lacking to-day—that is being discouraged to-day by the great teachers and Doctors of Divinity.

Everything calculated to help Bible study, to get rid of the darkness of the creeds and superstitions of the past, is opposed—but not openly. The Doctors of Divinity of our day, like those of Jesus' day, are wise and act as though they do know, but they do not know; they oppose real Bible study—not openly, but secretly, "for fear of the people." (Mark xi, 12.) The great religious leaders of the Jews were marked by our Lord as being less conscientious, less honest, than the masses of the people. Concerning the people we read that "Jesus was moved with compassion when He beheld the multitude, that they were like sheep without a shepherd."

And is it not so to-day also? Are not many of God's people hungering and thirsting for the Truth, and greatly perplexed and discouraged because, going time after time to the religious leaders, they have received instead of bread "a stone," instead of a fish "a serpent"—a false doctrine, a devilish misrepresentation of the Almighty's character and Plan in respect to humanity? These devilish doctrines of the Dark Ages St. Paul calls "doctrines of demons," because the demons, the fallen angels, evidently have propagated them. They are to be found amongst all of the heathens, but nowhere in any worse form nor as bad as amongst Christians of all denominations. Is there not therefore a great responsibility resting upon every conscientious minister of the Gospel, that he should step out from amongst the mass of the Doctors of Divinity, who are hiding the Key of Knowledge and

THOUGHTS ON TITANIC WRECK.

An Acrostic.
J. B. R.

To God our Father we must turn
In anguish and in pain,
To see what lesson we may learn
And mend the broken chain.
No man is perfect in himself,
In God his trust should rest.
"Come unto Me" the call is given,
"To Me" and you'll find rest.
In pleasures round and business strife
Titanic pleased the world,
Alas! the day she sailed away
No thought she'd not return.
In dead of night there came a crash,
Can anything be wrong?
To our strong ship we put our trust,
It cannot suffer long.
The second call, the call to arms,
All hands upon the deck;
No thought of aught but human life
In this Atlantic wreck.
Can anyone conceive the thoughts
That pass through any soul
In standing on the "deck" of life
To wait and pay death's toll?
And as they stand and wait their fate,
"Nearer my God to Thee,"
In accents full of hope and love
Come floating o'er the sea.

Oh save us all from a wreck like this
In the midnight and the cold,
And bring each one that sank that night
Into Thy wondrous fold.

A View of Jefferson Davis.

Very straight and tall, this, with a clear cut, clean shaven, distinguished face, with a look half military man, half student, with a demeanor to all of perfect if somewhat chilling courtesy; by temperament a theorist, able with the ability of the field marshal or the scholar in the study, not with that of the reader and master of men, the hardest of workers, devoted, honorable, single minded, a figure on which a fierce light has beaten; a man not perfect nor always just, bound in the toils of his own personality, but yet an able man, who suffered and gave all, believed in himself and in his cause and to the height of his power labored for it day and night. Such a man was Jefferson Davis.—Mary Johnston in "The Long Roll."

Conquered.

"No," snapped the hard featured woman, opening the kitchen door about six inches, "and, to be perfectly plain with you"—

"You couldn't, marm," gallantly interposed Tuffold Knutt, lifting his tattered remnant of a hat—"you couldn't be otherwise than perfickly harnsome with me!"

"I was going to say," she rejoined, visibly softening, "that, to be plain with you, there is nothing in the house but cold victuals, but if you care to try a plate of warmed over hash you can come in."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Didn't Tire Him.

He had taken pains when he applied for work to assure the farmer that he never got tired. When his new employer went to the field where he had put the man at work he found him lolling on his back under a tree.

"What does this mean?" asked the farmer. "I thought you were a man who never got tired."

"I don't," said the hired man calmly. "This doesn't tire me."—Exchange.

Liquid Ones.

They were waiting for dinner, and the virtuoso, who was to play afterward at the musicale, was whiling away the time at the piano. "How would you like a sonata before dinner?" he asked.

"Hardly," returned the host. "I had four on the way home."

A Happy Ending.

"Has your new novel a happy ending?"

"Very. The judge awards my heroine $50,000 a year alimony in the closing chapter."—Detroit Free Press.

BOSSES HATE HIM.

Roosevelt Says Party Heelers Are All Against Him.

Cumberland, May 6.—"Bosses" in the Democratic party and in the Republican party, Col Roosevelt charged on Saturday, have combined to defeat him. He asserted that Democratic "bosses" saw their own downfall if he should win. It was the last day of his Maryland campaign, the final shot of which was fired here Saturday night. The colonel made a number of speeches as he traveled across the state and in Cumberland he spoke his last appeal for support in the primaries on Monday. From Cumberland he started back for Oyster Bay for a week's rest.

"The Democrats are almost as much concerned in the outcome as we are," he said in his speech at Hagerstown. "If we overthrow our own bosses, the example will be catching. That's why the Democratic bosses are furtively aiding the bosses in our own party to defeat us. When one boss is thrown down the other bosses shake on their feet. If we shake down our own bosses, the others are not going to stand very long.

"In Baltimore our political opponents, the Democrats, are aiding the federal officeholders because they think that if they beat the plain people in the Republican party, the party will be easier to defeat," he said.

The colonel made speeches at Westminister, Frederick, Hagerstown, Hancock and Cumberland. The people of Frederick and Cumberland took a holiday and made a great event of it. In both cities there was parades through crowded streets, with bands and escorts of mounted men and men afoot.

Run Over by Wagon.

Brampton, May 6.—Edward Groves, a driver for the Bell Telephone Co., was injured rather severely at Meadowvale Saturday afternoon. Mr. Groves' team started and he made a jump to catch them, but in some way slipped and the wagon, with a load of poles, ran over his hip. He was brought to Brampton and his injuries attended to by Dr. Heggie.

Italians Seize Rhodes.

Rome, May 6.—Premier Giolitti announced in the Chamber of Deputies yesterday afternoon that the Italian squadron had seized and occupied the Island of Rhodes without opposition. A large body of troops disembarked from the transports.

TELEGRAPHIC BRIEFS.

Nearly fifty persons were injured, more or less seriously, when a trolley car at Guildford, Conn., jumped the track.

Count Robillard Cosnac was killed while make a flight at Nice Saturday. A strong wind broke the wings of his monoplane, which fell 300 feet.

The Minia with about twenty bodies of Titanic victims, including that of the late C. M. Hays on board, arrived at Halifax about 2 a.m. this morning.

The Red Star liner Lapland started from Antwerp yesterday for New York yesterday with 2,500 person aboard. There were lifeboat accommodations for all.

The Swiss Chamber of Commerce has taken the initiative with respect to world-wide penny postage, which it will advocate at the coming international congress of Chambers of Commerce.

L. K. Jones, I.S.O., secretary of railways and canals, was on Saterday notified of his appointment by order-in-council to the position of Assistant Deputy Minister of the Department, dating from April 1.

The Rt. Rev. Charles W. Stubbs, Bishop of Truro since 1906, died yesterday. He was born in Liverpool in 1845. From 1881 to 1895 he was select preacher at Cambridge; at Oxford in 1883 and 1898-99.

A large wooden trestle bridge between Dane and Kruegersdorf on the T. & N. O. Railway, 250 miles north of North Bay, caught fire Saturday and was damaged to such an extent as to be unfit for traffic.

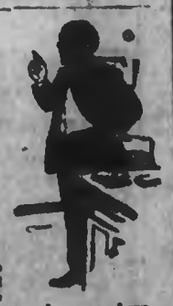
Blood poisoning, caused by the nick of a barber's razor while he was being shaved early last week, caused the death last night at Annapolis, U. S. naval academy, of Midshipman Julian Bishop of New York City.

A Berlin druggist named Scharmach, who secured and prepared the deadly spirits which killed 80 slum dwellers some time ago, was sentenced to five years' imprisonment Saturday. Two salesmen named Zastrow and Meyen were each sentenced to two months in jail.

No Successor Chosen.

London, May 6.—A. W. Smithers said yesterday that no successor to the late C. M. Hays, president of the Grand Trunk, will be appointed until after he arrived in Montreal. Mr. Smithers will leave here for that city next week.

Strong Healthy Women



If a woman is strong and healthy in a womanly way, motherhood means to her but little suffering. The trouble lies in the fact that the many women suffer from weakness and disease of the distinctly feminine organism and are unfitted for motherhood. This can be remedied.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription

Cures the weaknesses and disorders of women. It acts directly on the delicate and important organs concerned in motherhood, making them healthy, strong, vigorous, virile and elastic.

"Favorite Prescription" banishes the indispositions of the period of expectancy and makes baby's advent easy and almost painless. It quickens and vitalizes the feminine organs, and insures a healthy and robust baby. Thousands of women have testified to its marvelous merits.

"It Makes Weak Women Strong. It Makes Sick Women Well."

Honest druggists do not offer substitutes, and urge them upon you as "just as good." Accept no secret nostrum in place of this non-secret remedy. It contains not a drop of alcohol and not a grain of habit-forming or injurious drugs. It is a pure glycerole extract of healing, native American roots.

Motor Gasoline and Oils

Owners of motor cars will find our gasoline service the most convenient and prompt in the city. Highest grade gasoline pumped directly into the cans through a Bowsen filter. No delay.

Smokeless Coal Oil

INSPECTOR MUST GO.

Hon. Mr. Harris Will Remove Official at Guelph.

Toronto, May 6.—William Patterson, chairman of the Centre Huron Board of License Commissioners, and Albert Asquith, the license inspector, are to be removed from office as a result of the investigation into the charges before Commissioner Emlo Saunders, of the License Department. This was made known by Hon. W. J. Hanna on Saturday.

"While not handing out a copy of Mr. Saunders' report," said the Minister, "I may say that the report of the evidence leaves me no alternative but to change the chairman of the commission as well as the inspector. Apart entirely from the inspector's instructions in the matter, facts brought out, make it clear that his usefulness as an inspector is gone."

Patterson's resignation is already in the hands of the Minister, and will therefore be accepted. The dismissal of Asquith, the inspector, is a result of his own evidence before Mr. Saunders, in which he admitted that he had been offered a bribe by the hotelkeeper, yet had not reported the fact to the board, and had later recommended that the hotelkeeper, who offered the bribe, be given a license. For this he was sharply criticised by Mr. Saunders, and the commissioner followed it up by advising his dismissal.

Should Keep Pictures at Home.

London, May 6.—At the annual banquet of the Royal Academy last night, the president, Sir Edward J. Poynter, paid a warm tribute to the late Edwin A. Abbey. Referring to H. C. Frick's purchase of a Rembrandt from Lord Feversham for $250,000, Sir Edward recommended the passage of a law requiring owners to give the Government an option on valuable art works before selling to outsiders.

Premier Asquith and Winston Churchill also spoke, while the American ambassador, Whitelaw Reid, and John Hays Hammond were among the guests. Premier Asquith said that the country could not view with equanimity the sale of great paintings abroad, but at the same time could not expect the British taxpayer, on whose shoulders rested so many heavy burdens, to enter into competition with the millionaires of the world.

Would Make Hole In Court.

Wytheville, Va., May 6.—The alleged conspiracy feature of the case against the Allens of Hillsville was again taken up at the trial here on Saturday of Floyd Allen, charged specifically with the murder of Prosecuting Attorney Foster of Carroll County.

Newton J. Bevil, the first witness of the day, told of threats he had made to Floyd Allen during the progress of his trial at Hillsville. "I'll stand for anything," Bevil said Allen declared, "but before they try to send me to the 'pen' I'll make the biggest hole in that court any man ever did."

The witness asserted that he also heard Floyd Allen threaten to kill his own counsel, Judge Bolen, if he was not ably defended.

Down the Scale.

A Knoxville bride is very much in love with her husband and very willing to admit it. She likes to sound his praises to her mother and to her girl friends, which is quite as it should be. She has a number of original expressions. When her husband is good she says he is "chocolate cake three layers deep." When he is very good he is "chocolate cake four layers deep," and so on up the scale.

Occasionally, however, things take a turn. The bride's mother dropped in the other day. The bride was a trifle peeviah, but her mother pretended not to notice this.

"And how is George today?" was her inquiry. "Chocolate cake four layers deep?"

"No."

"Three layers deep?"

"No."

"Two layers deep?"

"No." This with a pout.

"Then what is he?"

"Dog biscuit!"—Pittsburgh Post.

Gambetta's Table.

There is a curious story told of the table at which Gambetta wrote. A previous owner, General Lahitte, minister for foreign affairs in 1849, dismissed his confidential servant because he believed he had stolen a large sum of money in 1,000 franc banknotes. Years afterward, when the table had to be repaired, the joiner employed for the work found the missing bundle of banknotes between the mahogany board of the table and the drawers below. They had lain there unnoticed for fourteen years. Unfortunately the story does not go on to say that the poor servant and his mistaken master were alive at the time of the discovery and that the one's character was cleared and the other's confidence restored.

The Japanese Hades.

The Japanese language has no equivalent for our word "hell," but has the word "Jigoku" instead. Jigoku consists of, first, eight immense hot hells, ranging one beneath the other in tiers. Each of these hells has sixteen additional hells outside its gates, like so many antechambers, so that there are in all 136 hot hells. Second, there are eight large cold hells, each with its sixteen ante-hells, making the same number of cold that there are of hot hells. Besides these 272 hot and cold hells for offenders of the common sort, the wily Japs have twenty mammoth "hells of utter darkness," into which will be consigned the spirits of children who take the name of Dai Butsu, or Great Buddha, in vain.

As to Pape's Wealth.

"Mamma, what is papa worth?"

"I don't know, dear, but it must be a great deal. I heard him say once that he had put $100,000 into a mining company's stock."

"What's the name of the mining company?"

"Wildcat, I think he said. I presume they named it that because it's in some unsettled country away out on the frontier."—Chicago Tribune.

MARKET REPORTS.

Liverpool and Chicago Wheat Futures Close Higher—Live Stock—Latest Quotations.

CHICAGO, May 4.—Statements from reports that crops had deteriorated greatly in the Northwestern Kansas had traders feeling quite a little movement to buy. There was also fear that the government report next Tuesday would show hard weather the cause. The market closed steady at a net advance of 7¼c to 7½c. All other leading staples, too, showed a gain. Corn to 1c net, oats ¼c to ½c, and provisions 25c to 17½c.

The Liverpool wheat market closed ½d to 9d higher than on Friday; corn unchanged to ½d lower. Antwerp wheat closed ½c higher, Berlin ¼c higher, and Budapest ½c lower.

The Spires of Line.

Many men build as cathedrals were built—the part nearest the ground finished, but that part which soars toward heaven, the turrets and the spires, forever incomplete. — Henry Ward Beecher.

Precarious Enterprise.

"What happens to a man who carries water on both shoulders?" asked the youth who is learning politics.

"Well," replied his preceptor, "I hate to use slang; but, as a rule, he gets soaked."

The Tea Taster.

Those who have never seen a tender can imagine a fir cone or "evening cocktail" set all over with little stiff hooks. It is the bud or tassel or flower head or thistle top of the plant Camellia. However familiar to people who live in lands where the tassel is extensively grown, the fact may be that the prickly heads of that plant are universally used to raise the nap on cloth. A multitude of persons in this country probably never heard of it and would be astonished to learn to what enormous quantities the plant is cultivated. In France alone many thousands of acres of land are exclusively devoted to the cultivation of the teasel. Enough manufactures use enormous numbers of the prickly heads, and from Mexico there are exported many millions of them. They are also raised in Austria, England, Belgium, Poland and the Crimea. The prickles of the teasel have a small knob at the end, and this, mounted on an elastic stem and set with great precision on the central spindle, affords a little brush such as the utmost mechanical skill has never been able to rival, at all events at the same price.—Harper's Weekly.

Tea Testers in Formosa.

In the Formosan tea trade the most important man is the chemist, or taster. He inspects and tests samples of all teas offered to his firm, and his judgment determines the price to be paid. In a room admitting light only from the north the chemist does his work. He first examines the leaf, then its fusion in hot water and lastly its odor and taste. Practically all the faculties are exercised in making this test. It requires the services of an expert, and the tea taster receives a good salary, though relatively not so large as obtaining twenty years ago. A tea taster never uses any perfume which would destroy the tea odor. He must not allow the acuteness of his taste to become dull. Constant tea tasting, it is said, will injure the health. In Formosa the tea tasters are Americans or Englishmen.

Black and White.

For many years a large department store has spent thousands of dollars on placards with which almost every article of merchandise is ticketed throughout the store, and only within a short time did they realise the amount of money that was wasted in using the white cardboard with black lettering. These white cards soon become soiled and shop worn if allowed to remain in place any length of time. The cards which are handled by customers in bins, trays, etc., are even more so. By substituting the black cardboard with white lettering this store has overcome this difficulty to a very great extent. The show cards are always clean, fresh and bright looking and they last many times as long, saving the firm several hundred dollars in the course of a year.—Business.

Wesley's "Narrow Neck of Land."

The actual first and last house in England is a shed where a woman sells specimens of rock. Just below this, as one goes down the zigzag path between the rocks, on the neck of the peninsular is a flat stone about two feet square and rising six inches above the ground. This, tradition asserts, is that upon which John Wesley sat when he composed the hymn—

Lo, on a narrow neck of land
'Twixt two unbounded seas I stand
Secure, insensible!

It is also stated that Wesley wrote other hymns there. Apparently he had at this time (July 30, 1743) experienced a bad spell of weather at Land's End, for he writes, "I saw a strange sight—the sun shining in Cornwall."—English Illustrated Magazine.

Pulling an Elephant's Tooth.

Perhaps the greatest dental operation on record was performed upon an elephant in the City of Mexico. The aching tooth was twelve inches long and measured fourteen inches round the root. After the animal had been securely fasten with chains his mouth was pried open and a quantity of cocaine applied to deaden the pain. When this was done a hole was bored through the tooth and an iron bar inserted. Then a rope was twisted around the bar, and four horses were attached thereto to drag the offending molar out.—London Tit-Bits.

He—This isn't like the kind of bread mother used to make.

She (angrily)—Oh, I suppose not!

He—Your bread is so much better, dear.—Baltimore American.

Deathly Cramps, Stomach was Bloated

A Bad Case That Proves Cramps and Stomach Disorders are Cured Fast by Nerviline.

"The distress I suffered from cramps last summer was so severe I thought it meant death," writes P. R. Emerson of Guys Hill, P. O. "I was doubled up with pain and in such bad shape couldn't walk a hundred feet. I remembered having Nerviline on hand and took half a teaspoonful in sweetened water. In five minutes I was well and my stomach derangements disappeared entirely."

NERVILINE

AN INSTANT RELIEF

For cramps, flatulence, diarrhoea and disorders of the stomach and bowels Nerviline knows no equal—one million bottles used every year—fifty years in the market, that's proof enough of its merit. Large bottles, 50c., trial size, 25c. All dealers or The Catarrhozone Company, Kingston, Ont.

REAL ESTATE IS ACTIVE IN THE SOUTH END OF CITY

Big Demand for Lots Suitable For Home Building—Increased Frontage is Demanded by Purchasers

HOUSES ARE SCARCE

That the real estate situation in Peterborough continues on an eminently healthy plane is the consensus of opinion among the realty firms of the city. Prospects look exceptionally good for another season of booming values, said one prominent real estate dealer to the Examiner this morning.

Mr. J. T. O'Connell states that the activity is more pronounced towards the south end of the city. Just why the movement is so active and prices so much enhanced, no one with authority can be proud to speak. A number of subdivisions are on the market at the present time, and it looks as if some of this property is in for a rapid rise in value. Lots that are within easy reach of factory sites will prove good investments for either the home builder or the man who wants to put his savings where they will be safe, and be accumulating at the same time.

HOUSES ARE SCARCE.

Moderate-priced houses are scarce, and the demand for land immediately or presently available for home sites is the crying need of to-day. Of the latter, no dearth exists. There is an unlimited supply of land to choose from, and a large number of wage-earners are investing their savings in that portion of the city where the ideal home life will sooner or later be located.

The relief of what might be termed the congestion, if any exists in the city, must be found in the suburbs, and can be found there in the shape of land at reasonable prices. The result of the general prosperity that exists is shown in a marked degree by the desire of the artisan for increased frontage. This feature brings to mind the development of the south end of the city along the lines of a high-class residential district.

CHANCE TO OBTAIN REAL DICTIONARY

Readers of The Examiner May Obtain Valuable Book With Coupon and Little Money

Richer by several thousands of new words, is our English-American speech to-day than a few years ago. To profit by them in good measure you must know what they are, and what they mean. Mainly they have been born of scientific progress and the development in art and science. About 3,000 of them are in the new 1911 Funk & Wagnalls Comprehensive Dictionary, offered by The Examiner for six consecutive coupons and only 98 cents. Look at this superb volume and you will surely get it. If you call before the premium edition samples at The Examiner has been exhausted.

The Chances Against You

"Oh, I will be all right in a few days," says the person who is tired out and has to drag himself to his daily work because the nervous system is exhausted.

Unfortunately nervous diseases do not right themselves, and the wasting process which has brought you to this condition keeps right on until there is a complete breakdown.

You must get the building-up process started, so that, instead of being a little weaker at the end of each day, you will find the balance on the other side and know that you are gradually getting strong and well.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food will help you wonderfully if you only give it a reasonable chance. As the system is built up you will find such symptoms as headache, sleeplessness and indigestion leaving you. You will find the old energy coming back. The mind and body will better serve you and you will see a new pleasure in life.

POLICE DEPT. WILL VACATE OLD QUARTERS

Have Secured Premises Adjacent to Bank of Montreal

Within the next few days the Central Police Station and judicial chamber will be subjected to the tender mercies of the contractors, who have the work of reconstructing the building in hand. They will have three months' grace in which to reconstruct the present quarters and build the extension.

While this is in progress, the work of the police department will be carried on in the vacant premises opposite the city clerk's office, and adjacent to the Bank of Montreal. A number of improvisional "cages" will be placed in the temporary quarters, for the confinement of prisoners, and, to all intents and purposes, the work of the department will not be interfered with.

As there is no front entrance, access to the building will be by the door off Water street. Confining prisoners within bank premises might be considered bad practice by some. Under sane conditions it would. Some one has suggested the placing of refractory prisoners in one of the vaults. This would put the integrity of the prisoners to a crucial test, and is a practice that would probably be discounted by the bank officials. However, it goes without saying that it will be a matter of great convenience for depositors, who are unfortunate enough to be mulcted of some of their savings in the Police Court, to pass over a cheque to their bankers and have their fines paid.

The Peterboro Light & Power Company's show-room will be open on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings during May, and June from 8 to 10 p. m. for the convenience of those wishing to secure gas appliances or to arrange for gas connections.

MONAGHAN RESIDENTS HOT UNDER THE COLLAR

At the Mention of Becoming Part of the City

Mention annexation to residents of North Monaghan, whom the city would like to take under its wing, and prepare to listen to verbal fireworks. The mere suggestion that the city, or that some of the aldermen would like to add a strip of the township to Peterborough is a red rag, as it were, before some of the residents. The fact of the matter is that three-quarters of the ratepayers in the section under consideration, have to signify their willingness to join with the city before any action can be taken. Some of those who have been spoken to of late are heartily opposed to the matter. Some even boil over at the mere mention of the proposal. Looking at it from their standpoint it would seem that chances are slim to bring this section into the city.

FURS AS LIFE-SAVERS

The title of this article might be treated incredulously, by many, yet a fourteen-bundle consignment of Lech's furs were, on Friday evening last, responsible for the lives of two individuals. A representative of that firm told the Examiner this morning that two of the three men who occupied the mail car of the wrecked train at Burkton, claim that when the car rolled over the embankment, it was only the yielding nature of the bundles that prevented their being battered to atoms.

BRITISH HOUSE'S PROLONGED SESSION!

Judge Mabee Died This Afternoon

A RECORD SITTING

British House of Commons Will Have a Session That Promises to Last Until the End of the Year

IMPORTANT BUSINESS

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, ENG., MAY 6. — The House of Commons is now in the midst of a session that promises to exceed in length and interest even the three preceding ones, which were in many ways record breakers for the British parliament. According to the present plans and calculations the session will last until the end of the year with only two or three weeks' break at Whitsuntide. The committee stage of the home rule bill, it is expected, will be reached about June 24th. The report and third reading stages will occupy another month and will be well into October before the bill reaches the House of Lords. The Welsh disestablishment bill will reach the upper house soon afterwards. Both will be refused a hearing and will, therefore, under parliamentary rules, have to be introduced again in the sessions of 1913 and 1914 to overcome the power still remaining to Lords to postpone the final passage of the bill. The government has no intention of going out of office voluntarily until these two measures have received the Royal assent and become the law of the land. The only danger with which the government is likely to be threatened so far as can at present be foreseen, is that of a big industrial upheaval which would necessitate the calling out of troops, an action which would compel the Labourites and many radicals to go against the cabinet. Then, as has happened before, the Unionists might find it necessary to vote with the government.

COMPLIED WITH INSPECTOR'S REQUEST

Mrs. Telford of Smith Left Butter Fork For Tasting, at Home.

At least one woman, at the market Saturday, complied with the instructions of Sanitary Inspector Spence, and left the butter fork at home. Mrs. Telford of Smith, was complimented by Mr. Spence for providing individual pieces of wood, practically tooth-picks, as substitutes for the old-time fork, which everybody used. The Inspector instructed a number of other women, who were selling butter, that the forks must not be used in future. Mrs. Tedford's method is simple, cleanly, and will appeal to the women who buy butter from her.

MR. JOHN BELL'S PERTINENT POINTER

Peterborough, May 6th, 1912.

Dear Editor,—It seems not long since I advocated the opening out of Aylmer and George streets and the building of King Edward school south of Romaine street, and since that, the Council and School Board were good enough to carry my ideas out. And now, as there is some discussion in regard to Exhibition grounds for Peterborough, I feel prompted to say a few words on the matter. In my mind, an ideal show ground should be somewhat isolated, with steamboat, railway and street car service. And as I know of 30 acres convenient, with all these essentials, which can be bought for $4,600, seems to me would be good all round. George and Aylmer streets should extend through the present show ground, so that houses and factories could be built thereon. If not it would become a great drawback and eye-sore to the progress and beauty of our good city.

Yours truly,
JOHN BELL.

THE SECOND MORGUE SHIP ARRIVES

"Minia" Reaches Halifax With the Body of Chas. M. Hays and Fourteen Others on Board

SPECIAL TRAIN READY

Special to The Examiner:

HALIFAX, N.S., MAY 6.—With the body of C. M. Hayes and fourteen other victims of the Titanic disaster aboard, the cable ship Minia, docked this morning and immediately proceeded with the mournful work of discharging her cargo in hearses and ambulances, to be conveyed to a temporary morgue. There were a number of relatives here to meet the bodies and attempt to identify them. Captain Decartinet, of the Minia, doesn't think any more bodies will be found. The body of C. M. Haye was immediately taken in a creped special train to Montreal for private funeral to-morrow.

Chance For Judge Maybee

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, MAY 6.—There was a message of strong hope from St. Michael's Hospital this morning regarding Chairman Maybee's condition. The bulletin said that the operation had resulted in relief of the paralysis of the bowel, and, although the patient was critically ill, the surgeons now feel hopeful of his recovery.

Output Of Canoes Will Be Large

As far as can be ascertained at so early a date in the season, Peterborough's output of canoes will be more than usually large this summer. All the factories are very busy at present and both the Canadian and Dominion Express Companies report that a goodly number have already left for various points. Up to the present, the majority have been consigned to Northern Ontario, Algonquin Park, Mathieson, etc. The Peterborough Canoe Co. are busy on a consignment for the Hudson Bay Co.

As an added attraction for to-night's meeting Dr. Marsh has a dozen new slides, made from the Lick telescope, showing the newest astronomical discoveries, which should be of special interest.

RESPONSE IS SLOW

"Titanic" Fund Appeal is Not Meeting With the Hearty Support That Should Be Forthcoming From Citizens

LISTS ARE OPEN

Citizens of Peterborough are reminded of the fact that the local fund to assist the families of those who perished in the Titanic disaster has been opened and that subscription lists have been placed in the banks and newspaper offices, where donations may be left. The Mayor, Ald. Gordon and City Treasurer Adams are a committee to look after the fund and see that it reaches the proper hands. So far the movement has not been given the hearty support that was looked for, but it is hoped that when the matter is brought squarely before the people of Peterborough these will be a ready response to assist in creating a fund for the benefit of the unfortunate persons who have suffered the loss of the supporting members of their respective families.

Is Charged With Forgery

Special to The Examiner:

ORANGEVILLE, ONT., MAY 6.—Ex-Public School Inspector Nathaniel Gordon, against whom five charges of forgery, in connection with the purchase of postage stamps were laid, has been committed to trial by Police Magistrate Pattullo. The evidence was taken here, over a month ago, and the Attorney General, who was specially represented, filed requisition requiring the case to be tried before a jury, but the County Judge will now try the case at the request of the County Council.

Marriage Case Will Be Delayed

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, ONT., MAY 6.—There was very little likelihood that the marriage reference will proceed before the Supreme Court to-morrow. The Judges are ready to proceed and so is the Deputy-Minister of Justice, but the counsel for the Provinces will ask for delay. The counsel for the Province of Quebec have filed a factum with the Judges of the Supreme Court, questioning the jurisdiction of their Lordships to hear upon these references.

Drowned In Flood

Special to The Examiner:

NEW ROADS, ALABAMA, MAY 6.—Refugees arriving here from the swamp countries to the west, report the drowning of dozens of people in the unexpected floodings of this district last night. A large fleet of motor boats and rowboats are now on the scene trying to pick up survivors and bodies. The situation is getting worse.

LAID TO REST

The funeral of Mr. John Irwin, the well-known farmer of Omemee, took place at 2.30 yesterday at the Omemee Cemetery, under the auspices of the Orange Order.

The funeral was attended by friends and relatives from every point in the vicinity, and the gorgeous display of floral tributes were symbolical of the high esteem in which the deceased gentleman was held. The pall-bearers were composed of six members of the Order, and the service was conducted by the Rev. Mr. Earl.

Including the visitors were Mr. P. Deacon and Mr. and Mrs. E. Hickey, of Peterborough.

SMALL FIRE.

The Brigade were called out to a small fire in a shed adjacent to the residence of Mr. F. Deakin of 601 Stewart street, this afternoon. Upon the arrival of the brigade it was discovered that the fire was almost subdued by some children. The men soon placed things in order and no damage will result.

BRYCE IS DEFENDED BY ASQUITH

Premier Says Ambassador Had Preserved a Strictly Diplomatic Attitude in Matter

DISCUSSED IN HOUSE

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, ENG., MAY 6.—In the House of Commons, this afternoon, Premier Asquith made a stout defence of Ambassador Bryce, in connection with the reciprocity negotiations. The discussion began by the Unionist members describing Bryce's part in the negotiations between the United States and Canada, as traitorous. Premier Asquith warmly resented this. He pointed out that Bryce had preserved a strictly diplomatic attitude. He took no part in the discussions except to introduce the Canadian tariff negotiators. The Unionist members demanded to know why Bryce had not interfered in these negotiations and prevented such a situation as Taft's letter had indicated, to which Asquith replied that such interference would have been resented by Canada.

JUDGE MABEE IS DEAD

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, MAY 6.—Judge Mabee, the chairman of the Dominion Railway Commission, died this afternoon at 3.15 o'clock. This morning his condition was reported critical, but hopes were entertained for his recovery. Early this afternoon, however, he suffered a replase and death ensued shortly after 3 o'clock.

Examiner Representative Secures an Interview With the Prisoner at Minden, Who Says He Was Born Under an Unlucky Star—Ellis' Story of the Shooting With Porter.

BAD FEELING HAD EXISTED

Special to The Examiner:

MINDEN, ONT. 6.—Arthur A. Ellis, the self-confessed slayer of Lewis Porter, jr., interviewed by the Examiner's reporter in the jail here on Saturday night, stated that Porter had spent his only two shots when Ellis fired. The prisoner says he did not known until after he had killed Porter, that the latter's rifle was empty.

About 9.15 last night, The Examiner, accompanied Constable Welch to the jail, where Arthur A. Ellis is confined, pending the adjourned jury trial, which will take place on Monday evening. The jail building is also the town hall, the lower floor being divided into a council room and part fitted up with two cells and sleeping room for a guard.

"How many children have you?" Ellis was asked.

"Three; two boys and a girl. Boys aged 8 and 6, and the girl 4. You see since my wife died four years ago, the children have been living with their grandfather and grandmother, but my folks will take good care of them. They farm and live about three miles from Norland. I should have lived with father and mother, as they are both getting old, but I was a little in debt and wanted to pay up what I owed. It would look bad to go away and not do so. I had made up my mind to sell the place or rent it, and if this thing had only held off for a couple of weeks I would have been all right. I have four horses and two head of cattle and all kinds of farm implements. Guess the neighbours will look after things until father comes, but there are not many neighbours near me—Mr. Hounsell on the south side, and my father-in-law, Louis Porter, Sr., who is not very friendly with me, about 40 rods distant.

"How do you think your chances are for getting clear?" we asked.

"My statement may not clear me, for I know I have a lot of enemies."

"Would it not have been best to have given yourself up at the time?"

"Yes, I think it would. I think so now."

"Were you excited at the time you removed the body of Porter to where it was found?"

Never Had a Lucky Star.

"Yes. I hardly knew what was best to do. I was always an unlucky kid. If anything went wrong, I was sure to be the one. I feel very sorry now for Porter's wife and little family. You see, one would have to be a "wizzard" to forstall these mistakes we make. Can't do it. Never had a lucky star. So far as to my being good, I must say I always tried, but in this case it was different."

"What kind of friends were you and Porter?"

"I was always on speaking terms with him, but I heard he blamed me for some horse shooting, and I always kept a guard on him."

"Were you always armed when you went out?"

Always Carried a Gun.

"I always carried a gun with me when I went out in the evening, but you see the spring on my 22 was broke and I had sent for a new one, but on that evening I took along my big one—an Enfield 577, D.C.C.

Stole My Things.

For about two years after my wife died (which was four years ago February), I could not keep a thing around that would not be stolen. They carried away part of my waggon and lots of other stuff, and that was enough to make a man carry a gun. I keep a diary, and put down every night all the things I do and business. Could tell anything for years past."

"When Porter passed your house that night, had you any idea of shooting him?"

The First Shot.

"It never crossed my mind when Porter passed, that there would be any shooting. I did not expect to see him again that evening, but when I went out to look for my cattle, in the opposite direction Porter was going, I had no gun, but on coming back again by the house I went in and got my gun and dog. Unexpectedly, I met him in a [illegible] on the road north of my place, shortly after, and you bet I was surprised at seeing him coming back. When near me, I said: "Low, did you see any of my cattle?" He said, "no; I thought it was me you were looking for." I said: "No, Low, it is you now, I could have found you long ago." Then he swore at me, and [illegible] at the same time, fired, and [illegible] I said: "Hold, [illegible] I fired. Then I said: "Hold, [illegible] I fired. [illegible] I advanced [illegible] my gun [illegible] I [illegible] but now I am [illegible] cased."

Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unparalleled.

MONDAY, MAY 6, 1912

FLOOD DESTRUCTION.

In the race for precedence of destructive power between the two elements, fire and water, water has put on a great "spurt" and scored a big lead this spring. The Titanic catastrophe came in one tremendous act; and there has been great destruction from floods along the valley of the Mississippi. The dykes that hold in the river have been crevassed or breached, and vast areas have been flooded, millions of acres of inhabited area have been submerged by many feet of water, many lives lost, millions of property destroyed, and untold suffering present and prospective, caused by the rush of spring water. These dykes were built before the age of concrete, and it seems that concrete will have to be used before the country is safe from such catastrophes as have happened this spring and often before.

PERMANENT PAVEMENTS.

Peterborough has been thinking, and even has got to the point of talking, about permanent pavements; but it has unfortunately not got to the stage of action. Even Kingston, which is regarded, in some quarters, as an urban back number, has made a beginning. The Kingston Standard makes the following reference to Kingston's experience with paving:

> Now that Spring is here, the snow finally gone, and the newly-paved streets exposed to view, dry and clean, the citizens have an opportunity to pass judgment anew upon these pavements and to express an opinion of their merits or demerits. The Standard has been at pains to ascertain what this opinion is and we are glad to say that it is practically unanimous in its approval of these pavements and of permanent pavements generally. Not only are the paved streets clean and attractive, but it is seen that it will not be necessary to expend a dollar upon them for repair work and that permanency is in fact permanency, and therefore in the end much less costly than patched-up streets that have to be renewed each year, at a final cost much greater than the permanent roadway, and necessarily giving much less satisfactory service.
>
> We find also more than that; we find that sentiment is very strong that this work of permanent pavements shall be continued and extended to the end that in time the principal business streets of the city may all be paved and the city put in line, in this respect, with other up-to-date and progressive cities. Of course a few timid souls may object that we are going too fast, and that permanent pavements cost money; but the answer to this is that in the end they cost a good deal less money than mud roads, are much more sightly and are much more satisfactory.
>
> Good roads, like good goods, are the least expensive in the end, and The Standard, speaking not alone for itself, but for what it believes to be the preponderating—we may say, the overwhelming — sentiment in Kingston can assure the Board of Works and the City Council that if they will proceed this year with additional permanent pavements they will be heartily and unreservedly supported.

The point of the Standard's remarks is in the last paragraph—that permanency is the object to aim at in the doing of street work. Peterborough has adopted that in regard to cement sidewalks, and everybody will acknowledge that the money involved in making good, permanent sidewalks has been well spent, and that they will be the cheaper in the end.

One of the chief reasons for the extraordinary waste in our street expenditure is that we spend large sums of money in pretending to make streets that are not permanent. We —and we have been doing the same thing for two generations—put mud on the streets one year and scrape it off the next. In this way, in the past sixty years we have spent—and to a large extent, wasted, $600,000—at the rate of $10,000 a year—enough to build 120 miles of good ,permanent macadam streets, and we have not a single yard of permanent, properly-built streets. Otherwise we have miles and miles of permanent walk

BEHIND THE TIMES.

The Colonist Free Press is waging a crusade, under the slogan "down with the poles"; that is the unsightly obstructive poles that line the streets of Ottawa as well as of Peterborough. Now that legislation has been passed that will compel pole companies to underground their wires if cities provide the conduits, is it not about time that a campaign for the removal of the ghastly forest of poles that disfigure and obstruct our streets should be inaugurated, especially on George street? We can't think of paving George and Charlotte streets till the poles are removed. The presence of the poles has been suggested as a reason for deferring the beginning of permanent pavement building. If it takes two or three years to get the poles out of the way, and as many more to get at work on building pavement, we shall muddle along in the same old way for some time to come.

We can, by virtue of laws passed by the Ontario Legislature at its past session, get rid of the poles. It will cost something in the beginning to do this, but that will be only a temporary expenditure. The city will have to raise money by debentures to build conduits for undergrounding wires, but the law practically provides that the interest and sinking fund will have to be paid, by way of rental, by the companies using the conduits. Here are the sections of the act referring to this matter:

> Where the commission if of opinion that it is necessary or expedient for the protection of life or property, or for the convenience of the public, that the use of overhead wires upon any highway or public communication or part thereof in a city or town, including the wires of telegraph, telephone, electric light, heat or power companies, should be discontinued, the commission may so direct and upon such terms and subject to such conditions as it may prescribe may require that such wires be placed and carried in underground conduits to be constructed and maintained in accordance with the directions, and to the satisfaction of the commission, and may abrogate any right to carry lines on poles in such city or town which may have been given by any act or by any municipal by-law, license, or agreement.
>
> Where the corporation of a city or town is willing to undertake the construction of a tunnel or conduits or other system for carrying lines underground in any highway or public communication or part thereof, the commission upon such terms and subject to such conditions as it may prescribe, may require all companies and persons whose lines are carried overhead upon any such highway or public communication to make use of such tunnel or conduits or other system for the purpose of carrying their lines, and to pay to the corporation such compensation for the use thereof as may be agreed upon or as the commission may determine, and such compensation may be for a lump sum or a sum to be paid annually or periodically as the commission may determine and direct.
>
> Before this legislation was enacted, the companies could defy the corporation a hold out in order to be bought off, bribed to bury their wires. Now the city has the power to effect one of the greatest improvements, a removal of one of the greatest evils to the city.

We can't have permanent pavements till we remove the poles; we can now remove the poles.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

It seems that the chief objection to bank mergers is that, if there is a crash it will be a big one—in proportion to the aggregate of capital and operations.

The provincial general elections of Quebec will be held May 15. It is probable that Sir Lomer Gouin will be retained in power by an undiminished majority.

There is a good deal of Browning talk these days. There are persons who will talk glibly about Browning, who could no more understand Browning than they could understand a chapter of Locke, or Kant, written in cuneiform characters.

The increase of Canada's commerce is pleasantly shown by the fact that the customs revenue in nine years—from 1903 to 1913—has grown nearly three-fold. In 1903 the duty collected was $34,844,839; in 1913 it was $84,549,994.

It appears that Judge Sir Louis Davies has, in an ex-banco address, been singing the requiem of reciprocity, and, according to some sensitively virtuous Conservative journals, has been talking politics—guilty of offensive partisanship. Sir Louis' head should come off. Isn't an excuse that will behead a lockmaster good enough to wipe out a judge?

THEY REFUSE TO DANCE TO THE SHRILL OF THE ULSTER FIFE

After the Solemn and vote elections, and vital crises, the inevitable reign of the dreary and the ordinary sets in. Parliament was prorogued, the Governor-General, the ministers, the members, the officials, the journalists, are resigned with good grace to the mercy of Ulster. Home rule is back in the commonplace. Observers "with very extensive outside interests" have got to be a one-day sensation, a fireworks show for the Empire, with Bonnets eloquent to lead the applause. But excitement or alarm, bless you, no. The British public which has run the whole gamut of sensation, watches Carson's little melodrama as a gallery connoisseur, not to be frightened with false fire.

It is clear that Britain, like Macbeth, has almost forget the taste of fears. The time hath been her senses would have cooled to hear the night-shriek of the home rule banshee. So dismal a treatise as Walter Long and Castlereagh still chant would have roused and stirred Britannia's fell of hair. But she now has supped full with more real horrors, and the paper flag of rebellion. "the blind hysterics of the Celt," are viewed as a boy's wild west show in a barn. Considering all that has happened of late, Belfast should feel it unreasonable to expect everybody to dance to the Orange fife.

When the home rule question comes up again, it will be in an entirely different atmosphere. It will be in the midst of the most tide years by years contemporary world present in view. Relaxation of excitement is itself a dangerous thing to a Radical Government. People generally show their gratitude to the redressers of grievances by turning them out of office. Witness the case of Gladstone in 1874, after one of the most memorable periods of reform in British history. All the forces of inertia work for the people's enemies. They, at any rate, are always active for their own interest, while the mass, unless thoroughly roused, tends to submit in a wise or unwise passiveness. A Radical Government needs a strong public emotion on which to flourish.

Even if home rule should not go through in this Parliament, the Liberal party will still keep up the battle for it. For Britain now looks calmly at this question, and is disposed to settle it in a reasonable way. One party or the other must yet bring home rule to pass.—London Advertiser.

If Ambassador Bryce is to be chilled for interference or meddling in the reciprocity negotiations, it is Canada, not a few obscure and rabid Unionist papers in London, that should do the chiding. Canada is mistress in her own house, and when she feels like resenting "butting in" it would consider these Unionist journals as impertinent as Mr. Bryce could be, but was not.

JERRY BUILDING.

The Nelson factory that fell in Toronto, killing two or three and maiming a score, was a fine example of jerry-building—joists not tied to brick work, which was laid without mortar. The man who built such a structure is morally, if not actually, guilty of murder. A building of size, built in this way, occupied by hundreds and shaken by vibrating machinery is a death-trap' "Jerry" building is not a dictionary word, so that its etymology is not given. But the Examiner ventures a plausible and expressive derivation of the word. The City of Jericho fell at the blast of rams' horns; therefore, some reflective man called a building so flimsily put together that it would fall almost spontaneously, a Jericho building and, naturally, the word, shortened into "jerry" became a fitting term of nomenclature.

THE EARTH'S UNUSED STORES.

Montreal Herald.

People who seriously inquire into the causes of the increasing cost of living are finding that there are more causes than one. For instance, the director of the American mint, who might be supposed to make full allowance for the influence of the increased production of gold, points out that in the first ten years of this century there was an actual falling off in the American production of wheat, corn, potatoes and rice, the principle foodstuffs, to the extent of two and a half per cent., whereas the population increased by twenty-one per cent. When a hundred and twenty-one persons have to take dinner off what formerly fed eighty-seven, prices must go up. Some may even go hungry. The production of cattle, sheep and hogs barely held its own in this period. That is a good enough reason for meat to be dear.

Similarly, there are hints of lowered agricultural production in the older provinces of Canada. The Weekly Sun, a farmers' paper, claims that on the showing of the census at least twenty-five thousand people a year have left the farms of Ontario in the last ten years. Many have gone to the West. More have gone to the towns. Just now the farmers of Kent County, whose winter wheat fields have to be ploughed and replanted, complain that the help cannot be had to enable them to carry on the work of production. The country-side is stripped bare. Ordinarily, we in the cities would not concern ourselves about that. But if we have to pay the price, what then?

SOME THINGS AND OTHERS

The house-cleaning invasion is universal. There is a house-cleaning to be made at the old police quarters. Meantime, cages are to be erected for the "birds" — for most of them are "birds"—of crime, in the building on Simcoe street, next the bank of Montreal. If the cages keep the birds as safe and close as the bank keeps its money, they won't be chequed out without proper authority.

Now that the Bastile is being demolished—the old police cells—a history of them and the noted criminals they have sheltered, might employ the leisure hours of Mr. P. C. McGinty, the oldest member of the force.

Some men are mightily afraid of ghosts; but they have no dread of spirits.

The Toronto Sunday world has some Peterborough pitcures included in its last issue—"Mr. C. H. Pennefather leaving the office of the Union Bank"—a picture exceptional among newspaper photographs—the likeness is recognisable—"Emergency waggon, Peterborough Fire Department" and "Chief Howard and Alderman Johnston"—in action.

A ratepayer posed this conundrum: Why does the Street Cleaning Department rake the surface of the streets nicely and remove the rubbish and afterwards send men to clean the leaves and rubbish out of the crossing gratings and creat other piles of refuse to be carted away, or not carted away, as the case may be? Why make two bites of a cherry? Is there any trouble in spending the money appropriated to street work?

Members of the Horticultural Society who have not received the plants or shrubs they selected, (except, of course, bedding plants), are requested to notify the secretary, Mr. C. H. Williams, 203 King street, or the Examiner office, and the matter of delay will be looked into. The parcels have arrived and as some of them may be delivered to wrong addresses, the non-receipt should be reported.

Next Wednesday night, a meeting of the directors of the Industrial Exhibition will be held in the Bank of Montreal chambers, at eight o'clock. Be on hand; every meeting is important at "this stage of the game."

Persons wishing to subscribe to the fund for the relief of those families robbed of their bread winners by the wreck of the Titanic, will find lists at the banks and newspapers. The rush to subscribe has so far, not been anythink like a rush for the life boats.

RAILWAY NOTES

It has been decided that the new Union Station of the Grand Trunk Pacific and the C. N. R. at Edmonton will be between First and Second streets. The purchase of trackage rights and property has been effected and the anticipated growth of the city has been provided for in the dimensions of the new depot which will be, it is promised, one of the finest on the prairies, west of Winnipeg.

Mr. D. W.Hayes, freight agent of the Grand Trunk Railway at Guelph, has been appointed to the same position in London, Ont., to succeed Mr. L. H. Harold, recently promoted to the position of travelling freight agent. Mr. R. Wright, who has been relieving, will return to Toronto.

Until the bridges carried away by the recent floods are repaired, Canadian Pacific trains will run over the tracks of the Grand Trunk Railway between Toronto and North Bay. This will probably mean a period of at least three weeks. At Bolkwood, Ont., the flood has done a good deal of damage and the G. T. R. will get the Fergus and Elora business for the next month.

On the location line of the National Transcontinental Railway, ¼ mile east of the Lois river in Quebec, and crossing the rock, is an altered diabase, which contains veins of quartz from ¼ inch to a food wide. Some of these veins contain chalcopyrite, which has coloured the rock green, but as far as can be seen on the surface, the quantity of copper ore is small. Four miles east of the Natagagan river, on the railway line, where a hole was dug to get water, clay has been found that would be suitable for the manufacture of bricks,

Gingery Infield Work Featured The Practice

Big Crowd Saw Manager Templin's Bunch Perform in Jig-Time at the Exhibition Grounds Saturday

Favoured by perfect weather, Manager Templin drove his White Caps through two hard drills on Saturday and the squad is already beginning to round into shape. The afternoon workout was pronounced by the gingery little leader as one of the best he had seen in years, and the performance certainly pleased the half thousand fans who were on hand. In spite of the fact that the annual Spring Stallion Show was being held at the Exhibition grounds, and the Exhibition management were charging an admission fee to the grounds, there was no stopping the bugs. Some of them paid the 15c., but the majority came in by the over-the-fence route. They did not care anything about the live stock exhibit at the other end of the grounds—all they wanted was a glimpse of the Canadian Leaguers.

A Gingery Workout.

For the benefit of the big crowd, Manager Templin cut short the batting practice and gave the infield a longer workout than usual to allow the fans a chance to see the inner defence perform. There was ginger to burn in the bunch and for over half an hour they tore along at top speed, pulling off all kinds of pretty plays. Every man was up on his toes and in the game all the way, and the manner in which they scooped up grounders and shot the ball all around the bases tickled the crowd. They banged the sphere into Dolan's mit so hard that the big fellow's hand was badly swollen when Temp. gave the word to quit. Mooney and Trout, two of the catching staff, worked at the plate, and the manner in which they whipped the ball to second and third showed that the Ty Cobbs of the Canadian League will not have much chance of fattening their base-running averages when working against the White Caps back stop department. All three catchers have whips of steel. Dolan covered the first station in finished fashion. Wide throws have no terrors for the big left-hander, who was grabbing them every way Saturday. Templin and Ulmer worked at second, Tully at short and Bensie and Hartman at third. All showed fine form in fielding and throwing. Tully made the crowd gaze when he tore over behind second and grabbed off a hot grounder on the dead run with his gloved hand. The big fellow has speed to burn and seems always in a position to throw and he does shoot them over. Both Hartman and Bensie have good whips and there was no rainbow throws across the diamond from this pair. The fielding was brilliant, in spite of the fact that the ground is rough and uneven, giving little opportunity to judge how a ground ball will hop. The fans were satisfied that the Petes' infield is a decidedly classy proposition.

Derr in Fine Shape.

The only pitchers to work out against the batters in the afternoon were Baver, Schaeffer and Derr. The latter, who is the latest addition to the White Caps' artillery section, is a stockily built left-hander, who promises to be a sensation in the Fitzgerald circuit. He is in the best of condition right now, and in all probability will pitch the opening game of the season in Hamilton a week from to-morrow with Brode wearing the pad and mit. Derr showed that he had everything Saturday, and after he had smoked a few over, "Old Folks" remarked, "You're good enough" and chased him out to the outfield. Baver and Schaeffer had a good drill and are rapidly rounding into form. They are most promising twirlers, and by the end of the week will be ready for the campaign. The hitters faced left-handed pitching all through the morning workout, Cresswell and Scull occupying the mound. Davis, the Philadelphia twirler and Bartlett the Rochester youngster, were given a rest for the day as far as pitching was concerned, but they had a strenuous time tearing around the outfield in company with Outfielders Beard, Schwartz and Johnston.

The whole squad are speedily getting hardened and in shape and in a day or two Manager Templin will commence educating them into the inside stuff and into the team work that is necessary both on the offensive or defensive, to make a winning team, no matter how promising is the material available.

Thistles Beat South Enders

In a fast, well-played game at the Park Street Athletic grounds, on Saturday afternoon, the Thistles defeated the South End team by 7 runs to 5. Huycke's great pitching for the Thistles was the feature. He fanned fifteen men and did not allow a hit until the last innings, when with the score 7 to 1, in his favour, he was landed on for three singles, filling the bases, and then Frank Barrie banged out a clean home run, clearing the sacks. The Thistles scored five runs in the first two innings, when they hammered Barrie off the slate, Taylor finishing the game satisfactorily. The teams were as follows:

Thistles — Cavanah c, Huycke p, Long 1b, Smith 2b, Tully ss, Richardson 3b, Matthews lf, Heaslip cf, Moran, rf.

South Ends — Kenneally c.ss, F. Barrie p.ss, Taylor p.c., Primeau 1b, Neary 2b, Hall 3b, N. Barrie lf, Killingbeck cf, Milloy rf.

NEWS FROM THE LEAGUE CIRCUIT

FLINT, MICH., MAY 3.—Just to show that Thursday's defeat at the hands of the Berlin champs was all a mistake, the Vehics came back this afternoon and hammered the same pitchers all over the meadow. Morrissey and Woolery divided the slab work for the visitors, and were touched for 10 hits apiece, which netted the locals 18 tallies.

Chase, the first Flint pitcher to go the entire route, held Berlin to three hits until the ninth, when he eased up and let them get away with four bingles and three runs. The final score was 18 to 4.

The Cuban, Hernandez, and Second Baseman Ochs, of the Vehics, got away with the hitting honours. The former got four hits, one of them a triple, and four runs in four trips to the plate, while Ochs hit for a home run, a triple and a single in four times at bat.

London Advertiser: The management are still casting about for a couple of good players, and several letters have been received from likely men. Third base is still a weak spot, and it is not improbable that a new man will be signed up next week to fill this position. Conway showed up to more advantage in yesterday's workout than he has all week, and if he keeps on improving, he will be in a fair way to land the job. Powell would do in a pinch, but is a far more valuable man in the outfield.

Hamilton Herald: O'Brien, a pitcher from the New York State league, joined the Hamilton squad last night. This makes seven twirlers on the local roster, but some of them will be given their walking ticket before long. With Teed, Rose, Mollineux, Garlow, Lloyd, Kehoe and O'Brien to select from, Lee should have a good twirling staff this season.

LONDON, MAY 4.— The pruning down of the players trying for the London team has started. Those who have received their notice are Carr, Foxon, Beauclair and Potter.

Charlie Nichols showed up well again yesterday afternoon and pulled off a number of fine catches, a couple bringing applause from the fans who were over at the park. The fans can bank on seeing Nichols at the second sack again this season. Manager Bowerman was heard to say that he thought pretty well of Charlie.

Each of the pitchers took his turn working out, all showing good form.

Schafer and Bowers, the two boys who came from Waterloo, are making a big hit. Both are good batters and fine fielders.

Powell at third, Bierbauer at first, Nichols covering second and Brant at short, with Beeks at the plate, gave the fans an exhibition that will keep those who saw them working talking for some time. They went through a number of stunts yesterday afternoon that were great to see. Those who have been over watching the workouts expect that when Manager Bowerman picks the team all those will be on it.

GUELPH, MAY 4.— The baseball fans are beginning to warm up to the fact town has a great team, and it is now generally conceded that Manager Tomlinson has gathered together the nucleus of a good fast aggregation. He has the bunch out both morning and afternoon, and with continued fine weather the team will soon be in shape to play that ball.

Isaac, of Toronto, who played such grand ball toward the close of the season last year, is faster than ever this year and should be just about the fastest third sacker in the Canadian league.

Prizes are being offered for home runs and other stunts and a keen interest in the club's affairs is being manifested. W. J. Bell, a well-known citizen, has offered a $10 gold piece for the first home run in the local grounds by a Guelph player in a league game, and two boxes of cigars will go to every home run hitter in the team during the season.

CHATHAM, MAY 3.—Two departed and one arrived at the Ottawa Baseball Club's camp in Chatham to-day. The departing guests were Frank O'Brien, who has a long hike back to Lowrence, Mass., and Lockhard, a "Joe Jackson," who lasted three meals and a sleep only. O'Brien is a good little ball player, but just failed to class up to infield requirements. If Schwind does not report Callahan will play short in the exhibition game at Adrian on Sunday. Transportation was wired Sam Dienes, a young Philadelphia outfielder this afternoon. He is fast and reputed to be a good hitter. Shaughnessy may turn Schwind over to the Ottawas next week.

Hamilton Spectator: There will be a meeting of the Canadian League executive here Tuesday afternoon, when the schedule will be adopted. Secretary Robinson was in Toronto yesterday going over league matters with President Fitzgerald, and the meeting on Tuesday will clean up all the league affairs preparatory to the opening a week later. Some slight changes have been made to the schedule as drawn up a month ago, and it is practically certain that it will be adopted as it now stands.

Hamilton Spectator: There will be a large delegation of Toronto people in Hamilton for the opening game on May 16th, with Peterborough, headed by President James P. Fitzgerald, of the Canadian league, and President James J. McCaffery, of the Toronto ball club. James J. has undertaken to round up a large party of Toronto fans, even though the team is playing ceremonies here will be on a noon is promised. President Denham, of the Peterborough club, will be among the invited guests, the official invitations having been prepared, ready to send out early next week. The opening ceremonies here will be on a grand scale, with the usual parade, etc., and every effort will be made to give the league a brilliant start, that is, as far as Hamilton is concerned at any rate.

LONDON, ONT., MAY 5—London's Canadian League team yesterday met defeat at the hands of the Canadian Stars of Strathroy, a team captained and managed by Abbie Johnston, an ex-Canadian Leaguer, and well-known for years as a player in various leagues. The Canadian Stars were made up of many former Canadian and other league players. The feature of the game was a sensational catch by Charlie Nichols, London's second baseman. Manager Bowerman tried out thirteen men, and the result is, in the opinion of the fans, that a couple of good outfielders and a third baseman are needed if the Tecumsehs are to make a showing this year:

	R.	H.	E.
Strathroy . . . 000000500	5	8	3
London 000000003	3	8	4

Batteris—Miln and Shea; Seaball, Farquhar, Merrit and Rishe. Umpires Silcox of London; Jeffries, Strathroy.

Three men were released and two new additions arrived in London tonight for try-outs with Manager Frank Bowerman. Firstbaseman White of Buffalo, Shortstop Conway of New York, and Pitcher Meredith of Detroit, were sent home after yesterday's exhibition, while Catcher Haggerty of New York and Outfielder Earle Neal of Altoona, Pa., have reported.

White Cap Notes

Manager Templin's squad have only been in town a few days but in that time they have succeeded in showing not only that they can play ball, but also that they are a clean, sociable, well-behaved bunch, perfect gentlemen on and off the diamond, who will be a credit to Peterborough everywhere they go. They have made many friends all ready and will make more when they are better known. They seem to like the city, and the city likes them, and that spirit will help to win a good many games this season.

The Marlboro Club have arranged a smoker this week in honour of the White Caps, who will be their guests for the evening. The members of the team appreciate the invitation most heartily.

Manager Bill Schaeffer has announced the line-up of his basketball team for the game this week with the Y. team. Earl Hartman and Joe Ulmer will be the forwards, Babe Tully will look after the centre position and Jimmy Beard and Irwin Trout will be the defence, with Jim Mooney substitute. Manager Templin has announced that he will be in the gallery with a fine assortment of tin cans if the players do not show form and Elmer Baver has been put in charge of the Rooters' Club. With Frank Dolan as coach and "Peanuts" Scull as trainer the White Caps' five should be right on edge for the battle.

The boys are already talking of that first game in Hamilton and are determined to start off the season by trimming Knotty Lee's Kolts. All the pitchers are keen to have the chance of pitching the opener and say they will pitch their arms off if selected. Johnnie Derr looks like the likely beaver for the season's first battle.

Babe Tully is not only fielding sensationally at short stop, but he is hitting like a fiend. Saturday morning he smashed two to the sheds for a home run on any old ball grounds. If the big boy keeps up that kind of work when the lid comes off in the Canuck League, he will be a star all the way.

Wet grounds this morning prevented the squad from getting out on the diamond, but a couple of hours' hard work were put in at the Y.M.C.A. gymnasium. Manager Bill Schaeffer's basketball team were out in full force and had a lively practice game in preparation for the game with the Y. M.C.A. five this week. Sides were chosen, captained by Earl Hartman and Irwin Trout, the latter aggregation winning in hollow fashion by 20 to 8. The boys showed good form all the way through and a splendid quintette can be picked. The teams lined up as follows:

Trout's Terrors—Trout, Tully, Bull and Mooney.

Hartman's Hard Lucks—Hartman, Brode, Beard and Ulmer.

Referee—J. J. Thompson.

Coach Dolan was fined $1.42 for being absent from the basketball workout.

The White Cap squad was cut down by one this morning when Infielder Jack Bensie of Hamilton, was given his release. Bensie was let go as a matter of discipline. He has the makings of a good ball player, but Manager Templin says he has been talking too much, and for that reason has "canned" him. "I wouldn't have a trouble-maker on my team, if he were the best player in the bunch," the manager remarked to the Examiner this morning. Bensie's release has decided the line-up of the infield, which will consist of Dolan first, Templin second, Tully short and Hartman third, with Ulmer as utility man. Manager Templin has announced that he will carry his entire staff of pitchers until June 1st, which will give him ample time to pick out the best quartette.

The work-out this afternoon was held at Riverside Park, where the majority of the squad held a "bee," cleaning up the grounds and skinning the base paths. All the pitchers warmed up during the afternoon.

WINNERS OF PRIZES AT STALLION SHOW

Entries Were Limited Because of the Busy Season on the Farm

ATTENDANCE WAS LARGE

Had it not been for the baseball practice on Saturday afternoon, the attendance at the stallion show might have been exceedingly light. The number of farmers in town on Saturday that this affected their attendance day was small and it was but natural that the show. The fact is that the farmers are all seeding and generally "fussing" around on the land, and nothing short of a free circus would have lured them into town. The entries to the show were not as many as the directors had expected, but the deficiency in quantity was made up by the splendid quality of the various exhibits. Naturally the attendance included mostly admirers of the horse. The admirers of the baseball went in at the same gate, but betook themselves to the east end of the grounds. The directors had no other alternative than to charge everybody, and it was just a circumstance that the ball team was using the grounds at the same time.

The owners of the prize winners were as follows:

Imported Clydes—1, W. H. Staples, Cavan; 2, Wm. Kearns, Frank Hill; 3, Jas. Collins, Peterborough.

Imported Clydes, three years old—1, W. J. Grant, Peterborough.

Standard Bred—1, Henry Elmhurst; Otonabee; 2, A. E. Juby, Peterborough

Hackneys—1, J. F. Staples, Ida.

The judging was performed by Mr. John A. Kerr of Perth.

Considering the season the show was a fair success. It is scarcely to be expected that the farmers will be free to come into the city just now, and under the circumstances, the directors have reason to feel gratified with the results of their efforts to provide a stallion show for this district.

THE LOSS OF THE TITANIC.

In memory of the brave men who died at the loss of the Titanic.

From England's port one glad bright morn,
'Mid blinding cheer on cheer,
A mammoth vessel sailed away
Amid the waters clear.

Bright faces beamed on all her decks,
A floating palace—rare,
And England's bravest and her best
Her crew and captain were.

But why that cruel iceberg crash,
Should wait for her alone,
God only knows—for He doth rule
The sea in all His own.

The Captain's orders plainly were
"Be British! sailors true,
The weak ones first. Then we will wait
Upon the Carpathia's crew!"

How orchestra so soft and sweet,
Their duty knew so plain
These noble men their feelings kept
And played that loved refrain.

"Nearer, Nearer by God to Thee,"
They played this o'er and o'er.
E'en tho' this be a cross my God
It wafts us to that shore.

Their sweet gifts melted with the tide,
Their loving hearts so true,
But we expect to meet them there,
Where all is fresh and new.

Their wireless kept sending forth
"O save us! we are gone!"
The brave Carpathia sent them back,
"Be of good cheer! we come!"

Then Captain Smith, brave admiral,
Gave orders clear and strong,
"Each man to his own safety look!"
And then—the ship went down.

He loved his ship, his life was spent
Upon the ocean's foam;
Now he has come to his reward,
To his eternal Home.

Brave men who died, their loved to save
From oceans' briny foam,
We honour give and feel to-day
Their reward has come

The rescue ship Carpathia,
We owe her tribute too,
And may she ever have clear ops
Wherever she may go.

THE WORTH OF A CHILD.

Who can measure the worth of a girl or a boy;
Who can say just the charge they would make
For the treasure which brings them such comfort and joy.
Can you estimate what you would take?

Who can say what they think just a fair price would be
For that part of themselves with a soul
Which shall live here on earth till the soul is set free,
Where eternity's ages shall roll?

All you fathers and mothers whom God has thus blest,
By the gift of a treasure so rare,
Should remember the dowry is heaven's bequest,
And account unto God for its care.

If you support the saloon with your ballot, to be consistent you ought to support it with your boy.

WHAT THE SALOON DOES.

Listen! On the first day of January a year ago, 500,000 young men of our nation entered the grog shop and on the 31st of December I will summon you people and ring the bell and raise the curtain and say to the breweries and saloons: "On the 1st of January I gave you 500,000 of the brains and muscle of our land, and I want them back, and have come in the name of the home and church and school. Give me back what I gave you. March them out."

I count, and 166,000 have lost their appetites and become muttering, blear-eyed, vomiting drunkards and I say: "What kind of a shell game are you lobsters giving me?"

What is that procession 3,000 miles long, with 125,000 hearses, for 125,000 men died drunkards in this land of the free and the home of the brave?

12 AN HOUR DIE DRUNKARDS.

Listen! In an hour 12 men die drunkards, 300 a day, and 125,000 a year.

One man will leap in front of a train; another will jump into a river; another will plunge from a dock into the lake; another will throw up his hands and life will go out; another will cry "mother" and his life will go out like a burnt match.

I defy any man to show where the saloon has helped the factory, the church, the home, business, education, manhood or womanhood. It hasn't a decent leg to stand upon.

There is just one prime reason why the saloon has not been knocked out of existence, and that is the false statement that the saloons are needed to help lighten taxes. To say that the wiping out of the saloon would increase taxation is a fool's fallacy. The saloon business has never paid, and it has cost fifty times more for the saloon than the revenue derived from it.

Listen; I say seventy-five per cent. of the idiots come from intemperate parents, and eighty per cent of the paupers. Eighty-two per cent. of the crimes are committed by men under the influence of liquor. Thirty-four per cent. of the adult criminals are whisky-made.

The Chicago Tribune kept track for ten years and found that 53,256 murders were committed by men under the influence of liquor.

If you do, come to our store at once. Our present stock of Rugs is by all odds the handsomest and largest ever shown in this vicinity and it will surely interest every housewife whose eyes light upon these words.

We have imported these Rugs from several noted manufacturers, and offer an immense range of magnificent patterns and colourings, in Axminster, Wilton, Brussels, Velvet and Tapestry weaves.

We could fill this paper with a description of these fine Rugs, but a personal inspection would do more to convince you of their superiority than all the words in the dictionary could do.

So we say: COME, and come early, while the assortment is at its best.

RICHARD HALL & SON

GENERAL SECRETARY'S REPORT OF Y.W.C.A.

Following is the report of the General Secretary of the Y.W.C.A. for the year 1911 to 1912:

"Our hearts are filled with gratitude as in presenting our 21st annual report, we review the work of the past year, and acknowledge that God hath done great things for us. The several reports show growth and development in each and every department and our scope and influence is ever widening.

This year's most essential development is along industrial department, or work, in connection with our association, namely the extension of industrial work. For the past few years girls from the industrial works have come to us, spending many a happy social evening here, but we had felt for some months that we should go to them and provide for their comfort, especially at the noon hour. Accordingly we rented the house at 138 Rubidge street, in December, and, after a busy two weeks of cleaning, shopping and furnishing, the house was opened Friday evening January 5th, and the lunch rooms, Monday, Jan 8th. Each noon hour, Saturday and Sunday excepted, a ten cent lunch is served in the pleasant dining-room. In the house, there is also a wash-room and kitchen, and a bright, attractive rest and reading room, furnished with couches and rocking chairs, books and magazines, and The Daily Examiner, kindly donated from that office.

Many a little talk and story has been enjoyed by the girls and the noon hour passes all too quickly for us all, for with the warning ten-minute whistle all hasten back to duty with new energy and strength for the afternoon's work. Over seven hundred and fifty lunches have been served in the four months since we opened. We would publicly thank those who so willingly and generously responded to our request for help in furnishing this South Branch House.

On September 1st we welcomed Miss Shuttleworth, who rendered most acceptable services in the House and Office, and more especially in the Junior work, until her departure March 1st., to return to Travellers' Aid Work, when Miss Emma Hall was appointed Assistant Secretary.

Membership.

In September, an organized effort was made by the "Y" girls to increase our membership. This took the form of a contest and the excitement ran high at times. At the close of the two weeks a supper was given with the winning team as guests of honour. 174 names were entered in September. Our goal, this year, was 500 members, or an increase of 100 per cent. over last year. The girls did their share nobly, even though we still lack fifty-seven of this coveted number. However, we are pleased to announce an increase of 200 over last year, or 443 paid members.

Gymnasium.

We consider this a very important department of our educational work, but as it is arranged for by a seperate committee it is so reported. We seek to develop the physical life, realizing that a healthy body is essential to a healthy mind. That without physical development and wholesome recreation and playtime there can be no real mental and spiritual development. Here we can do the institutional work of the Church as in our other Educational Classes. Miss Coventry has conducted five weekly classes, viz., Senior, Intermediate, Junior, Normal and Basket Ball. One hundred and fifty class sessions were held, with an aggregate attendance of 3625, against 1393 last year. This large increase of over 160 per cent., has been in our Junior and Basket Ball classes. Miss Coventry and her loyal, efficient girls won laurels at the public exhibitions given in the Collegiate assembly hall on the evening of March 20th, and April 2nd. The full schedule of the year's work was there demonstrated.

Social.

The social work is quite a special department on work. It is the cementing and spice of the Association. Believing that happiness gives us the energy to enjoy our daily work many a social evening is arranged. These happy evenings are too numerous to enumerate. We would merely mention the welcome to our new members October 1st, the "at home" given to the Normal students and faculty in October, the annual masquerade Hallowe'en party, the Valentine party, the "at bee" to the Y. M. C. A. boys, the St. Patrick's programme, as well as other evenings, arranged from time to time for the C. G. E., Brinton, Cereal, Auburn, Cordage and Chicle girls. Over six hundred have been entertained by the Social Committee.

We have also a social club which meets each Thursday evening. While primarily a social organization the Loyalty Club girls are true to their name and are ever most loyal to the Association work as a whole. Some twenty are enrolled in this class.

Junior.

The Junior work has been most satisfactory and gratifying. In September, the several public schools were visited and the work presented in the individual rooms. As a result one hundred and fifty-six were, during the session enrolled in the two Junior clubs—the Victoria and the Sunshine. The average weekly attendance has been seventy. The Clubs have met each Saturday, from 2 to 4.30. This time is divided in half-hour periods of gymnasium exercises and drills, stories and songs, cooking and sewing lessons. We would place on record our appreciation of Miss Coventry, Miss Shuttleworth, Miss Smith, Mrs. W. T. Rogers and teachers resident in the House, who have given of their time and ability to this most important work.

The Bible.

While in all our work we would seek first the approval of our Master yet there are hours when we are specially conscious of His presence. The Sabbath after-dinner praise service is an hour enjoyed by our House members. The house girls are organized, with Miss Lillian Cadwell as President. The Bible Missionary and Music Comittees are each responsible for one service a month. The President takes charge of the fourth meeting. The daily evening prayers bring help and renewed strength to those of us who, after a busy, hurried day, turn aside and spend a few quiet moments in praise and worship. The fortnightly service at the Protestant Home has again been carried on throughout the year, and brings like cheer to the old people and singers—as does the bedside visiting at the Hospital. The summer conference at Elgin House, Muskoka, was an inspiration and incentive to more efficient service.

In November our Travelling Student Secretary, Miss Jamieson, spent some days with us. As an outcome of her visit a College Association was organized in the Normal School and three Mission Study Classes conducted. The liberality of two of our members and the help of the House girls enabled us to contribute $225.00 towards our Foreign Association work in Japan and India.

Resolutions.

We would express our indebtedness and thanks to the teachers and lecturers who have been so generous in giving of their time and ability to the Association; to the Convener and members of the Education Committee for sharing so largely the responsibility and work throughout the entire year; to the Educational Board, for allowing us the use of the Collegiate Assembly hall for our gymnasium closing exercises; to the Y. W. C. A., for their gymnasium for basketball games, and to the press, for their kindness in making known the various activities of the Association, and donating to the public reading room a copy of their respective papers. Personally, I wish to thank the Board for their sympathetic and hearty, generous support, and also the members and citizens, for their kindly consideration and help.

We look forward with hope into the New Year, united as we are, under the leadership of Him in whose name the work was inaugurated.

If The Hair Root Is Not Dead, Do Not Despair

Falling hair means scanty hair, and scanty hair means baldness. The whole trouble is caused by dandruff germs that destroy the natural nourishment that is supplied to the hair root.

PARISIAN SAGE, the scientific hair nourisher, penetrates into the roots of hair and not only kills the germs but supplies the hair root with just the kind of nourishment it should have.

If you are getting bald, if your hair is falling, don't wait till too late, but get a bottle of PARISIAN SAGE to-day.

It is possible to save your hair and prevent baldness if the hair root is not dead.

PARISIAN SAGE is guaranteed to satisfy every user, or money back. It stops falling hair, scalp itch, and banishes dandruff in two weeks. It is a refined hair dressing that puts a radiant lustre into faded, dull hair. Fifty cents at Wm. Medill's and dealers everywhere.

The Peterboro Light & Power Company's show-room will be open on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings during May and June from 8 to 10 p. m. for the convenience of those wishing to secure gas appliances or to arrange for gas connections.

MAN BREAKS DOWN

A Strasburg, Pa., man, Martin B. Burkhart, has just had a remarkable experience. Some months ago he noticed his health failing and in spite of all he could do, soon found himself in that condition which everyone dreads—"general breakdown."

In a letter he says: "It seemed as if my health was ruined and I never would be strong again. Various other medicines did me no good but I began to take Vinol and it has done me a wonderful amount of good. I am now as well as I ever was, have gained twelve pounds, my appetite is good, I sleep soundly, and feel like a new man. All credit is due to Vinol."

He is only one of many thousands who have been built up to health by our delicious cod liver and iron preparation without oil. All who are broken in health, run-down, weak and nervous, should profit by his experience and regain their health by the use of Vinol. We guarantee that it will build you up and make you strong — your money is given back if it does not. DR. BARCLAY AT ST. PAUL'S

Seventy-Seventh Anniversary of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church Duly Observed

INSPIRING SERMONS

The 77th anniversary of St. Paul's Presbyterian church was duly observed yesterday. Large congregations filled the edifice at both the morning and evening services, and two inspiring messages were delivered by Rev. Dr. Barclay of Montreal. The reverend gentleman is a preacher of note, and occupies a large place in the educational and ecclesiastical life of the Dominion. Dr. Barclay has visited this city on numerous occasions and his presence has always been attractive to the congrigations who were fortunate enough to have him in their midst.

Taking for his text the 14th chapter of the gospel according to St. Matthew, 23rd verse, "And when he had sent the multitudes away. He went up into the mountain apart to pray," the speaker said in part:

There are moments in all men's lives, which are moments of experience. Life is a little more than a strange dark mystery, and it is not given to every man to have a far-reaching vision to discern the Divine Providence which rules over us. We see at times the divine faith of goodness, especially when our lives appear black and overburdened by the weight of worldly troubles.

What shall we do then? Do as David did, go into God's sanctum and come into closer communion with God. Do as Christ did. Send the multitude away and become more intimate with the Divine Spirit. It is essential, at times, that we break away from the press of the world and enjoy the solitude of God's holy sanctum. Taken aside, ever and anon from the atmosphere of wordly things, we are made to think what we are, whence we came, whether going and for what we are here. None of us can review our past life without realising God's goodness. Hours of quiet communion with God is one of the potent factors in the moulding of a nation of God fearing men. Do not fly back to business, with its fame, or to the world's pleasure, but await the message. These prayerful periods are opportunities of grace, they possess opportunities of a higher life and the atmosphere of calm devotion.

Some will say that all space is holy. That is quite true, but human thought flows freer and acts better in some closer place. If we acted upon the theory that all places are holy and did not have consecrated places of worship, life would be one round of toil, and the observance of the Sabbath would be unknown. If we always mingle with the world, we must be judged by the world's judgment. We need something more, something better than the world can give us, to stand fast in the faith of Christ. We must break away from the distracting tumult, and evil influences of the world, go where we can hear the accents of the Father's voice, and trim our lamps of piety, so that they will not flicker in the gust of the world's evils. You cannot overcome the world; it will overcome you. You find it unconsciously betraying a miserably inadequate view of your destiny. Troubles are easily multiplied and you find yourself vainly drifting about, propelled mainly by lack of faith to God. It is then you must seek the consecrated sanctum, where you can break away from the furore of the world with its deceptions and in calm meditation, open your heart to God and commit your trust in His care. You can do no better than follow the example of Jesus Christ, when he sent the multitude away that he might be alone with God.

ACCIDENTS AT HASTINGS

HASTINGS, MAY 5th.—A very impressive service was held in the Methodist Church on Sunday morning, when the pastor extended the right hand of fellowship to some thirty new members.

The funeral of the late D. W. Anderson was under the direction of the Masonic Order, and was largely attended. Deceased was for a number of years a successful traveller for the Coates Thread Co., for whom he had rendered good service, and will be deeply regretted. He leaves to mourn his loss, besides his widow, a number of sons and daughters, who have the sympathy of all in their sad bereavement. Interment took place in the Trent Valley Cemetery.

In attempting to cross the river above the bridge on Sunday, two men belonging to the dredge were drawn into the current and went down over the slide, where their boat capsized and landed them into the river. They managed, however, to cling to the boat, until rescued by Mr. West, none the worse for their trying experience.

It is understood that Mr. W. Stenson has disposed of his fine property in Bridge street and intends moving back to the farm. Mr. A. Smith is the purchaser.

BOAT UPSET.

On Wednesday last Mr. D. Cooke had a somewhat exciting experience when the boat in which he was sailing turned turtle, and left him to the mercy of the waves. He was, however, rescued from his perilous position by some of the spectators, and was none the worse for his cooling dip.

Our local cheese factory has opened for the season's operations, and milk wagons are once more the order of the day.

Mr. Wm. Warner took a trip to Peterborough on Wednesday.

Banks of snow are still visible in sheltered nooks, and it seems as if winter would fain remain with us a little longer.

Miss Evelyn Beaves spent Sunday with her sister, Mrs. J. Stevenson.

Mr. Charlie Warner was in Peterborough on Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. G. Kerr are rejoicing over the birth of a son.

Mr. S. McIlride, of Peterborough, has been touring the district in the interest of the Peter Hamilton Manufacturing Co.

Mr. Black, of Campbellford, was in town on Wednesday attending to his shipments of stock.

Mr. R. Campbell, of Roseneath, gave us a call during the week.

A number from Norwood and Havelock attended the funeral of the late Mr. Anderson here this week.

Burglars have been busy in town, and as a result keener watch is being kept about the premises.

EPISTLE FROM MR. W. A. BAILEY

Editor Post Card Column.

Sir,—The Protestant Home is for the old and destitute. Really! Is it wise to put them together? And are not the poor in jail? As for the streets being in a disgraceful condition—the fault is that there are too many and some are too wide. A street should not be graded unless properly macadamized, and much of the money spent on sidewalks could be saved by using a few loads of cinders here and there. The ocean is not suitable for speeding; neither are the streets.

Yours, etc.,
W. A. Bailey.

LIPTON'S TEA

GOES FARTHEST FOR THE MONEY

PETERBOROUGH,
May 3rd, 1912.

DEAR SIR:

If we expect to clothe you, we have to show you that our clothes are better for the same money than you can get elsewhere, haven't we?

We believe that we can prove to you that it will be decidedly to your interests to get your next suit here. But we cannot prove it to you by merely saying so—you must see the garments in order to see the beauty of our styles. You must try on a few of our Coats in order to realize the perfection in fit. You must wear one to really know the excellence of fabric and workmanship.

And so we would be grateful to you for an opportunity to show you some of the elegant Suits now in our store. We will not urge you to buy. We expect every man to buy what his best judgment dictates to be the best for his own particular needs. We know you will like yourself in some one, at least, of the many styles we have. We know the quality of fabric, the style and workmanship is there to appeal to you as a man of good judgment, and, what is more, we know that every garment is so overwhelmingly good in every essential detail that goes to make a thoroughly satisfactory suit of clothes, that when you wear one, you are sure to come here for your next one.

Maybe you think that we claim too much for them, but we want to say right here that we have determined to make our Clothes absolutely unapproachable for the money, and we have done it. If this is a fact, you want to investigate them in justice to your own interests, don't you? Then come visiting and see for yourself. We'll leave it for you decide. We want to sell you your CLOTHING and FURNISHINGS this Spring. We know we will if you see our goods and learn our prices.

Yours very truly,

"SUGGESTOR" MAKES A SUGGESTION

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Sir,—There seems to be a number of people that would like to learn roller skating. Why not have a special night each week for that purpose? And again there are some that would like to learn "trick skating" and "two stepping," etc. I would be pleased to see an announcement stating from now that there will be a special night for "learners and trick skaters" each week, as I am sure there are enough expert skaters in this city to help this thing along.—Yours truly, etc.,

Suggestor.

When something holds one back, the cause is often found to be an unsuspected habit—such as tea or coffee drinking.

Caffeine, the drug in tea and coffee, interferes with digestion; has a destructive effect on nerves and brain and causes various ills which handicap one's physical and mental power.

If this is found true in your case, the thing to do is to quit the cause—tea or coffee—and shift to

WITH THE BOY SCOUTS

Edited by a "B.-P."—Boy Scout

The 1st and 3rd troops had a very good turnout on Friday night last. The 1st troop is divided into two patrols. 1st patrol is the Cubs patrol, leader, Scout Samuel Mills; 2nd patrol is the Wolves' patrol, leader, Scout McFarland.

The acting adjutant for the week will be Scout R. Stratton. The 1st troop will meet for drill next Friday night as usual. Boys wishing to enter are welcome. No entrance fee. Boys must be non-smokers.

No. 3 troop mustered strong Friday night. The company was divided into four patrols:

1st patrol leader, Scout J. Cameron.
2nd patrol leader, Scout S. Clark.
3rd patrol leader, Scout F. Walker.
4th bugle band patrol leader, Sergt. L. Sharp.

The bugle band marched out Saturday afternoon under the leadership of Mr. Vick. The boys showed a keen interest in the work, and this phase of the Scout movement in Peterborough promises good results. Mr. Vick states that there is excellent material for a good band among the boys.

The Scouts are fortunate in having Mr. Vick for a scout-master. He has seen active service in the Imperial army, and in future will have the handling of the 1st troop and the bugle band.

Colour Sergeant Waterman of the 57th Regiment, Peterborough Rangers, was on hand Friday night. He assisted the scout masters in the work of putting the boys through their company manoeuvres.

First aid drill will be taken up next Friday night. Every scout is requested to bring his staff.

Scout master, the Rev. F. J. Sawers, of the 4th troop, states that his command is in a flourishing condition. He anticipates a successful season for the scouts of the city.

Appointments, Troop No. 4, East City.— No. 1, Pigeon patrol, patrol leader, Harold Adams; corporal, Charles Telford. No. 2, Kangaroo patrol, patrol leader, Arthur Lipsett; corporal, Douglas Coons. No. 3, Cuckoo patrol, patrol leader, German Philips; corporal, Bert Lipsett. Scout master, Rev. F. J. Sawers.

The Scout committee met in the armouries on Saturday evening. Only one member of the committee turned out to the meeting. That was Mr. A. H. Stratton.

The committee is composed of the following gentlemen: His Honour Judge Huycke, Mr. H. B. H. Kenner, Mr. J. H. McClellan, Major Eastwood, Mr. F. D. Kerr, Mr. A. H. Stratton, Col. Stevenson, Canon Davidson and Dr. Middleton.

"TO YOU—SIR ROBERT."

A Toast to the Chief Scout.
(By R.E.R.)

We've had a lot o' schemes for helping boys,
And some of 'em was sane and some was not,
And some laid out to spoil his human joys
And some of 'em was just hot air and rot;
But they started something just the other day
To make the boy the father to the man,
To teach him how to work and think it's play,
And do more than he ever thinks he can.
So here's to you, Sir Robert, with your Boy Scouts on the brain,
You've come to teach us lessons and we hope you'll make 'em plain,
We'll give you a certificate and write it large and clear,
You're a hyphenated Briton—But you've got the right idea,
You can take an idle lad from off the streets,
Who hooks from school and dopes on cigarettes,
An Ishmael, sore on everyone he meets,
Who can't be worked by pity or by threats—
And when he's tramped with you a little while,
Lived out o' doors and swam and climbed and ran,
Learned to obey and stick it out and smile,
You've started him, at least, to be a man.
We may get into Wars and we may not,
But anyway, we need men just the same,
And those Boy Scouts will help an awful lot
Because they learn to play a staying game;
They may go scouting enemies some day,
Or saving life, or only living straight,
No matter what they do, results will pay
The man who taught them first to strike their gait.

Sir Robert Baden-Powell is writing a series of articles for the English "Scout," entitled, "My World Tour." The current numbers deal with Panama, Central America and Jamaica. He has now completed his American tour and is now on his way across the Pacific toward Australia and New Zealand where he will spend several busy weeks.

Thre are still vacancies in all the city troops to be filled by boys all the way from eleven to eighteen years of age. If you want to join the Boy Scouts, get in touch with one of the scout masters, or see Commissioner Miller. He will put you in touch with any troop you may prefer.

WHEN BLOOD IS POISON

The blood must be filtered, otherwise you are poisoned. If the kidneys fail the liver is overworked, and becomes torpid. By using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills you get both these filtering organs working right, and also secure healthful action of the bowels. For this reason these pills are an ideal family medicine. They cure biliousness, constipation, chronic indigestion and kidney disease.

EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

THE more I look at the faces about me—and I never take a ride on the trolley car or a walk on the city streets without studying faces—the more it is borne in upon me that beauty and look of it is as a matter of expression more than of form of colouring.

When a young girl reads something like the above statement in a talk like mine, or hears it from an older woman, she almost always turns up her nose mentally, and thinks to herself: "It is. That sounds all right, but it doesn't work out in real life." And if she is plain, she goes on envying the girl with the regular features and fine complexion; or if she is pretty, in the ordinary sense of the word, takes a satisfied look at herself in the mirror. Yes she, I know, because I've been there myself.

But, girls, we are, but by the thoughts and character just newspaper morality talk. It's true. Nothing on earth mars a face more quickly than an unpleasant expression. Nothing makes us turn away offended more than a cast of features made disagreeable, not by the modeling of nature, but b ythe thoughts and character of the possessor.

You know the woman who cannot talk without a sneer on her lips. No matter what she speaks of, that sneer comes and goes, disfiguring what might be a pretty face. Don't you dislike to look at her? I'm sure I do.

Then there is the face with the dissatisfied, discontented mouth, and the face marked and marred by sensuality, and the features defaced by an ugly frown between the eyes.

Suppose anyone of those faces to be fitted with Grecian features and a perfect complexion. Will you love to look at it? Indeed, no.

The other day I saw a woman with large, irregular features, straggy brows, thin straight hair, and a slight hair line on the upper lip. And yet those unattractive features were illumined by such a happy, cheerful, lively expression that I truly enjoyed looking at that woman more than at the pretty but characterless young face beside her.

A face that is illumined by cheerfulness, or transfigured by intelligence and interest in life, or lit up by the wonderful steady light of an inward peace and serenity, cannot be plain.

You may still think this is just newspaper morality talk, but if you will only study the faces about you I am sure that some day you will come to realise it is much more than that.

ANNIVERSARY SERVICES AT ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH

Triple Event Celebrated Yesterday---Services Conducted by Rev. James Ross, D.D., of London, Ont., Who Rendered Inspiring Sermons.

Yesterday was a red-letter day in the annals of the history of St. Andrew's Presbyterian church. Both morning and evening anniversary services were held to celebrate the seventy-ninth anniversary of the congregation, and of the origin of Presbyterianism in Peterborough, the seventy-seventh anniversary of the erection of the old stone church, and the twenty-sixth anniversary of the opening of the present church.

The music, under the conductorship of Mr. Herbert Treneer, was suitable to the occasion, and the solists, Mrs. R. W. Davidson and Miss Olive Howell, rendering appropriate sacred selections.

The service was conducted by the Rev. James Ross, D.D., of London, who proved himself a very able speaker in his yesterday's address. "Cross Bearing" was his subject in the morning, and in part, he said:
